Press Ads Are Used By New York's Biggest Theatres!

And see how they stand out!

PARAMOUNT'S press book advertisements are now used exclusively for all display advertising by the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres, New York.

This is the most expensive newspaper space in the world. It has to be filled with the best possible advertising.

If there were anything better than the press ads the Rivoli and Rialto would know it.

But there isn't! The same layouts and copy which every exhibitor in the country gets free, cannot be improved on by the finest theatres in New York.

You don't have to hire an expensive advertising staff. Paramount has already done that for you. These experts are paid by the company—but they work for you!

These theatres also get the benefit of the national advertising by the line "The Home of Paramount Pictures." That's another business-getter that you get for nothing!

Strong Pictures When You Need Them Most !

-and for 1922-1923 Goldwyn will make only 20 pictures all big ones

MARSHALL NEILAN

will make all his pictures for Goldwyn, with powerful stories and on a scale surpassing his best previous effort.

ALLEN HOLUBAR

is now filming the $10,000 prize winning story, "Broken Chains," his first work for Goldwyn.

R. A. WALSH

has begun production on "Captain Blackbird," his first big picture, at the Culver City Studios.

EACH of these twenty pictures is being produced as carefully as though it were intended to be the one big picture of the industry. No expense is spared in making it.

Goldwyn will not include in this Twenty any picture that is not a powerfully strong special. These will be BIG pictures—remember that!

Because we will not produce a single ordinary picture you will not be obliged to sign up for a great many films that are not strong in order to get the big one you really want.

You will see each picture before you are asked to book it.

GOLDWYN

announces the purchase of the Greatest Motion Picture Property in the history of the screen.

BEN HUR

We will make "Ben Hur" the most colossal motion picture of all time.

RUPERT HUGHES

will personally direct his fiction masterpieces, all of which have now been made available for Goldwyn.

MAURICE TOURNEUR

has already started work on Hall Caine's world-famous novel and play, "The Christian," his first production for Goldwyn.

E. MASON HOPPER

who has completed a wonderful picturization of Anzia Yezierska's "Hungry Hearts," soon will start on another heart interest story.

The Incomparable Jane Novak

in a gripping drama of self sacrifice

MILLIONS acclaim Jane Novak a star of marvelous talent and matchless beauty. Millions will respond eagerly to the PEERLESS COMBINATION of a bewitching young star and our UNBEATABLE EXPLOITATION. Never before has Jane Novak touched such dazzling heights of artistry. Never before has she adorned a vehicle so superbly balanced in all the sure-fire elements of heart interest that make a GREAT, BIG, ROUSING SHOW!

A STRONG-WILLED GIRL of the wilderness braved a fate worse than death to save her little sister's name.

Imagine that theme for Jane Novak!—the appeal of whose eyes—the tenderness of whose face—has won her a warm place in the hearts of millions.

Here's an attraction that's really EXPLOITABLE. And in our practical Press Sheet we supply the big bombshells of exploitation to put it over in high-powered, thoroughgoing fashion that means BIG MONEY IN THE BOX-OFFICE.

HAL ROACH COMEDIES

Did you ever see such reviews?
That's the way they all run!

FROM THE "FILM DAILY"

"Full O' Pep"—Hal Roach—Pathe
Type of production . . . . . 1 reel comedy
Monkey glands come in for their share of satire in this latest Hal Roach single reeler. "Snub" Pollard and Marie Mosquini are the chief fun makers and are supported by little Sunshine Sammy. The laughs are numerous and the comedy business well carried out. "Full O' Pep" is one of the good ones of the series and will tickle almost any audience.

"Down and Out"—Hal Roach—Pathe
Type of production . . . . . 1 reel comedy
"Snub" Pollard is the chief fun provoker in this latest Hal Roach single reeler. The comedy is full of laughs and clever comedy business. "Down and Out" is up to the standard of the series.

"Jump Your Job"—Hal Roach—Pathe
Type of production . . . . . 1 reel comedy
"Snub" Pollard has a lot of fun trying to get rid of his job in this latest Hal Roach single reel comedy. He does everything he can to torment his boss but still is not fired. At length he knocks him down and serves notice upon him. But just as he does this along comes a telegram which tells about a large sum of money that "Snub" is to inherit provided he still has his job. The comedy gags are cleverly done and will provoke a good deal of laughter. Marie Mosquini plays opposite "Snub."

"Stage Struck"—Hal Roach—Pathe
Type of production . . . . 1 reel comedy
"Stage Struck" is full of fun and has some clever comedy gags. The action is speedy and the entire production above the average.

"Days of Old"—Hal Roach—Pathe
Type of production . . . . 1 reel comedy
"Days of Old" differs from the usual comedy production in that it contains a consecutive story and is more than a mere collection of gags. The comedy business is very funny and is certain to get a good many laughs. "Days of Old" is certain to amuse any type of audience.

"Kill the Nerve"—Hal Roach—Pathe

Type of production
1 reel comedy

The action is amusing and will get more than the average number of laughs.

"Penny-in-the-Slot"—Hal Roach—Pathe
Type of production . . . . 1 reel comedy
"Snub" Pollard is as funny as ever in this new comedy, "Penny-in-the-Slot." The action is lively and the business clever. This one will get more than the average number of laughs.

Produced under the personal supervision of Hal Roach himself
No wonder they are so good!

WEATHER DOESN'T STOP PITTSBURGH'S TRADE

Grand Did $21,000 Last Week —Others Around $9,000

Pittsburgh, May 31.

The hot spell here failed to cause any considerable damage at the box offices of the largest picture houses last week. Good reports have been recorded in all instances.

The Grand had an extra feature in the person of Felician Telot, violinist, who gave a solo at each showing. Song-plugging in all the music shops helped "Fascination," on display in various forms.

Estimates last week:

Grand—"Reported Missing" (Selznick). (Seats 2,500; scale, 35-55c.). Owen Moore. "Sawing Lady in Half; Expose" also factor in steady draw. Few counter attractions, other than rival picture houses, was another reason for good returns despite torrid days. Picture given good publicity, and lavish praise by critics. About $21,000.

Olympic—"Is Matrimony a Failure?" (Paramount). (Seats 1,100; scale 25-40c.). T. Roy Barnes and Lila Lee. Business started gloomily but picked up as week went along, with smash at end. About $9,100.

Liberty—"Fascination" (Tiffany). (Seats 1,200; scale, 25-55c.). Mae Murray. About $9,500.

The Picture That Made London Turn "Movie Mad"

Unqualified Praise From England's Greatest Critics

"One of the greatest sensations in the way of emotional entertainment that London has ever known is 'Orphans of the Storm'  Raises film making almost to the scale of Wagnerian dynamics  There is the spiritual insight of Shakespeare in it. One knew that sooner or later Griffith would drive critics to seek parallels for his genius in other paths of arts."—London Express.

" 'Orphans of the Storm' stamps Griffith as a producer of genius  admirably and perfectly done  every child in London should be taken to see it."—London Times.

"With 'Orphans of the Storm' Griffith has set a standard for other producers to emulate."—London Telegraph.

"Contrived on a monumental scale, this picture again demonstrates Griffith is unquestionably the greatest film producer in the world."–London News.

" A masterpiece  a perfect film  the acting of Lillian Gish is inspired."—London News.

The Sun: "It is good to see an old favorite like Salisbury again, especially when treated with originality."

The Evening Telegram: "'The Great Alone' is likeable. It's good sequence and beautiful scenery leave a favorable and lasting impression."

Evening World: "'The Great Alone' reminds us of the great old Robert Edeson play, 'Strongheart.'"

Evening Mail: "'The Great Alone' is virile drama, with plenty of action ranging from football to primitive love and hand-to-hand fights."

Globe: "'The Great Alone' gives a realistic picture of the far north. Characters well acclimated as to dress and manners; outdoor scenes as cold, and storms as raging as could be reproduced."

Telegraph. "Mr. Salisbury is big and strong and handsome and can act. 'The Great Alone' is not without its thrills."

Herald: "Monroe Salisbury plays the half-breed with considerable virility and force."

Weekly Film Review: "One of the best stories that has come out of the snow country. It is big and strong and elemental. There's neither glamour nor romance save where it belongs, and because it is so free from the trite and superficial, people are going to like it."

Exhibitors Trade Review: "One of the best of its kind; it is out of the ordinary class of Far North pictures. 'The Great Alone' has a tenseness and a generally satisfying element that predominate."

Moving Picture World: "A story of strong dramatic values. Plenty of punch and action. Big fight scenes excellently handled. Monroe Salisbury gives his role the virility and force it demands."

The Mohican's Daughter

From the Story of "Jees-Uck"
Produced by P. T. B. Inc.

by JACK LONDON
Directed by S. E. V. Taylor

More than 6,000 American theatres played Tourneur's "The Last of the Mohicans," and we have never heard of ten of this great total that did not make money on their engagement. Hundreds have asked us for another Mohicans picture.

Here is another story of the Mohicans; splendidly cast; well-made and from a world-known story by Jack London, one of America's ablest and most popular authors. "The Mohican's Daughter" is a romantic melodrama; a love story; a full-of-action picture.

Directed by S. E. V. Taylor, long a Griffith author-director; by the man who was production adviser on "Scarlet Days" and "The Idol Dancer" and in association with Griffith scenario writer of "Broken Blossoms."

Featuring a cast of successful players, including Nancy Deaver, Saxon Kling, Paul Panzer, Hazel Washburn, Nick Thompson and Myrtle Morse. Book this production now and watch it bring into your theatre the same great audiences that came to see "The Last of the Mohicans."

NEWSPAPER and TRADE REVIEWS

MOTION PICTURE NEWS—
Remarkable photography. Some of the shots are as nearly perfect as ever screened. As a production it is stupendous.

Grena Bennett—NEW YORK AMERICAN—
"Retribution" is a play of remarkable appeal from both a pictorial and dramatic standpoint.

EVENING TELEGRAM—
"Retribution" is a real thriller. The cast includes more than 10,000 persons and is highly pleasing as a melodrama.

Karl K. Kitchen, Sunday Edition — NEW YORK WORLD—
"Retribution" is the finest and most artistic photoplay I have seen in years.

FILM DAILY—
The production is different from the usual run of pictures and will be welcomed by those interested in historic drama. "Retribution" has a very able cast of actors. The sets are splendid and a world of detail helps build up a Florentine atmosphere.

NEW YORK HERALD—
"Retribution" contains some grand acting and scenery. Gorgeous and almost overpowering sets of the Borgias keep the spectators intensely interested.

NEW YORK TIMES—
"Retribution" is an unusually interesting picture. In the gorgeous settings, properties, costumes, manners and customs it shows, it seems to bring the flavor of the Rome of the celebrated Borgias to the screen.

IL PROGRESSO—
The photoplay of the story of Lucretia Borgia is the greatest picture production ever produced.

Gertrude Chase—MORNING TELEGRAPH—
Spirit of times well depicted in film filled with splendor of renaissance settings.

EVENING JOURNAL—
"Retribution" tells story of Borgias. Magnificent scenes in absorbing drama of their villainies.

LA PRENSA—
"Retribution," the story of Lucretia Borgia, is the greatest picture that has ever come to America. The acting is superb and in the production 10,000 people are used to feature one of the most famous women in Italian history.

EXHIBITORS' TRADE REVIEW—
"Retribution" is a stately tale of the Borgias. It is dramatic in the extreme and spectacular as well. It is a stately tragedy; it is dignified, impressive.—G. B.

BOLLETTINO—
"Retribution," the story of Lucretia Borgia, shown at the Park Theatre, has created more favorable comment than any other picture ever shown in New York City. The direction, lighting, beautiful Italian renaissance settings. Excellent direction, makes the audience gasp with wonder and surprise in its dramatic appeal.

COURRIER—
"Retribution" the story of Lucretia Borgia, shown at the Park Theatre, is one of the most stupendous productions ever witnessed on the American screen. Estimated cost of this picture is $750,000.00 and the money has been well spent in giving birth to such a magnificent production.

CLEVELAND PLAIN DEALER—
"Retribution" is one of the greatest film achievements. This photoplay dealing with Lucretia Borgia is far away the best. This new picture is one of the most artistic photoplays ever presented in New York. No photoplay that Broadway has seen in years has been better acted. New York has had quite a number of this style of pictures but they are all distinctly inferior to "Retribution."

MOVING PICTURE WORLD—
Exterior shots of "Retribution" embrace photography of astoundingly beautiful scenery. Incidents in which Signor Papa, as the jester, appears hold the attention because of the most excellent performance contributed by that actor.

Thrills in "One Clear Call"

New York and Chicago Critics praise picture for splendid acting, fine direction and wonderful entertainment value

RANKS WITH BEST; CROWDS ENTHUSIASTIC

"If the success of a motion picture can be measured by audience response, 'One Clear Call' ranks with the best. It could not have been received more enthusiastically. It reflects the romance and tender emotions of the Southland."—New York Evening Telegram.

UNUSUAL DRAMA; EXCEPTIONAL CAST

"Drama cast in a new mold and in a rather unusual manner. An array of talent in the cast that leads to the belief that the motion picture world was combed to secure it. Many dramatic episodes. For the real drama found in the film there should be all praise, as the story is extremely well portrayed. Henry B. Walthall is superb. Milton Sills is most effective and the rest of the cast is capable."—New York Evening Mail.

VIVID AND THRILLING STORY OF HUMAN FOLK

"A story of human folks and the struggle of what people desire and what they know to be right. It possesses an extremely interesting plot, elaborated with vivid incident and thrills. The leading character is made most human and impressive by Milton Sills. Claire Windsor's beauty and talent add greatly to the all-round merit of the picture. Entertainment and not a preachment."—New York Evening Journal.

SITUATIONS THAT TIGHTEN THE THROAT

"Situations that tighten the throat. Fine acting by Milton Sills, Henry Walthall and Claire Windsor."—New York World.

NOTEWORTHY PRODUCTION EXCELLENT ENTERTAINMENT

"It can demand the attention of any fan. Henry Walthall's acting is splendid and Milton Sills' performance equally gratifying. A noteworthy production—excellent entertainment. A well selected cast and a story that is out of the ordinary. Thrilling moments and unusually well directed."—New York Morning Telegraph.

ONE OF THE MOST INTERESTING IN LONG TIME

"Full of heart interest. One of the most interesting in a long time. The thread of interest is strong. Milton Sills gives an extremely convincing performance. There are spectacular effects and intensified suspense."—New York American.

REMARKABLY GOOD ACTING AND DIRECTION

"Excellent direction and remarkably good acting and material for a dramatic story."—New York Times.

A PICTURE YOU MUST NOT MISS SEEING

"If you're able to stand considerable wear and tear on your emotions, 'One Clear Call' is a picture to not miss seeing. The acting is all so fine. Yes, afraid I'll have to send you to see 'One Clear Call' whether you grudge a tear or not. Just be assured that if you enjoy fine work it is there for your seeing at the Chicago, Mr. Walthall is immense and Mr. Sills, Miss Rich and Miss Windsor are especially called to your attention. The picture is well produced."—Chicago Daily Tribune.

MOST REALISTIC AND ABSORBING FILM SEEN

"'One Clear Call' has a plot! We hope this statement sounds significant—weighty, because that's the way we mean it. A plot alone puts it in a class by itself, but they didn't stop there—they cast it perfectly. Henry Walthall is excellent. We think he is the Charlie Chaplin of the drama. He knows what he is doing. He never overacts—flattens out. His craftsmanship is wonderful. Claire Windsor is good, too—good to look at—capable, and Irene Rich as the sister does some of the finest playing we have seen this year. There are several complicating threads—we'll not tell you about them—we want you to see 'One Clear Call.' You'll say it is the most realistic, absorbing film you've seen."—Chicago Examiner.

Laughs Galore in Capitol Feature

Mack Sennett is with us again, this time at the Capitol, with a new multiple-reel feature entitled "The Crossroads of New York." It is a blend of melodrama and burlesque, intended to show that life, as depicted by plays of New York, is not always correct. At the same time it tries to convey to the audience that tragedy and comedy are next-door neighbors in the homes of the big city.

The hero is a country boy who finds himself a lady-killer, but quite without intent or design. His money may have something to do with it, or it may not, but he is the big noise with a number of different women. Everything that can be made the subject of a film goes into the making of this picture. So fast and furious is the action that it is over before the audience can realize that it has really gotten under way.

Thrilling deeds, pure slapstick, love interest, ridiculous situations and moments of real drama follow each other in lightning rapidity, making this picture one of the fastest and most interesting that has been presented hereabouts for a long time. Mutuality

IF producers and distributors should change their jobs and become exhibitors—if exhibitors should go into the producing and distributing business—if directors had to go out on the road and sell the picture they made—if stars had to finance production—and so on all along the line—

If, in short, we were all to change jobs for a while, what a happy industrial family this would be!

The light of understanding, of sympathetic understanding, would shine in the dark places and out would go the bugaboos of distrust and downright factionalism.

And the golden rule would prevail. And business would swiftly improve.

Of course that's Utopian. We can't hope for it—at once.

But at least we are working toward it.

There's a new word in the business—Cooperation.

You hear it on all sides. Exhibitor organizations are voicing it. And they mean it—seriously.

Mutuality of business interests. Recognition of the fact—clear as daylight in every business under the sun—that the branches of it, manufacturer, jobber, retailer, are interdependent!

And it is a serious thing.

Fighting within this business is civil war—illogical, deplorable, costly, retrogressive. It may be human but it's ignorant—or selfish—and bad.

Fighting within, we can't possibly advance economically: which simply means that we will hurt business all around, and delay the alleviation of those abuses which obviously exist and which hurt.

Mr. Hays, for his group of producers and distributors, is now conferring with the several organized exhibitor groups.

And wonderful progress is being made.

They are tackling the issues of advance deposits, standard contract forms, local arbitration, etc.; and out of the discussion has come an issue that seems to overshadow all others. It is well expressed by the phrase: play dates must be pay dates. In other words, play or pay, one or the other, or both.

Every producer, distributor and exhibitor knows at once how basic and vital that common problem is. We shall have more to say about it later on.

We doubt if it can be settled definitely. We doubt if any of these issues can be settled definitely—now. It seems to us that these conferences will have to go on and on. Let us hope so.

Just the same, we regard this work as the most important being now done by this industry.

For out of these conferences one great and definite good is bound to come. It has already started. And that is—understanding.

Understanding of the other fellow's job—its difficulties. Understanding of the fact that abuses proceed from each side—and about equally. Understanding of the fact that interests are common, that prosperity is common, that losses are common—that one side's problem is the other's problem—that the answer is intelligent, judicial cooperation.

Leeway will have to be given by each side in each of these matters—and even then there can be no definite settlement.

All the troubles in the business proceed from large and basic economic faults. Every young and big industry has them. In time they correct themselves. And it's unhealthy to short-cut their cure.

So probably we don't want quick and definite cures—even if we could have them.

But we do know this, for it's being proven right now, that with a man like Will Hays in the chair, a square-shooter if there ever was one, the representatives of the branches of this industry can get across the table, like men, and learn a lot about each other and do a tremendous lot of good for each other and for this industry.

That's progress, gentlemen!

Film Storage Warehouse for Long Island City

Thoroughly Modern $200,000 Building Will Be Equipped for Handling and Forwarding Film

A FILM storage warehouse which, its sponsors declare, will be the most complete and best equipped in the world, is to be erected this summer in Long Island City by the Film Storage and Forwarding Corporation, a company recently organized by well-known motion picture men of New York.

The building, which will be of two floors and basement, constructed of brick and steel, will occupy a plot of ground 102x145 feet. The cost is estimated at $200,000. Construction work is about to begin and will be rushed to insure completion by September 1st.

The plant will be of a thoroughly modern type, equipped with the most approved fire prevention materials and devices. The plans and specifications have been examined, approved and passed by the authorities of the New York Fire Department, the Bureau of Fire Prevention, and the New York Board of Fire Underwriters. It is declared that promise has been given of a fire insurance rate on the contents of the warehouse, when the plant is opened for business, at least 50 per cent. below the prevailing rates on risks of a similar character.

The storage warehouse will have a capacity of 12,000 cans of film and 6,000,000 feet of raw stock. The greater part of the interior is to be divided into forty-one vaults for positives and negatives, two raw stock vaults, three projection rooms and two cutting rooms. A forwarding department is being organized to handle domestic and foreign shipments, both incoming and outgoing, and an up-to-date delivery service will be maintained. These are to be made important features of the business and every facility will be introduced to insure expeditious handling.

Arrangements have already been completed to rent a section of the building to Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, of Chicago. This will be fitted out as a laboratory for specializing in first print work.

The Film Storage and Forwarding Corporation is organized with a capital stock of $150,000. Its officers are: Hugo H. Kempf, president; Arthur S. Kane, vice-president; John C. Ragland, treasurer, and Robert F. Noonan, secretary, these officers serving also as the board of directors.

Hugo H. Kempf was formerly with the Robertson-Cole interests as treasurer of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, Robertson-Cole Studios, Inc., and Robertson-Cole Realty Corporation, and secretary of the Robertson-Cole Pictures Corporation. He resigned these positions in March last to devote his entire time to the new enterprise.

Arthur S. Kane is president of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., and Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation.

John C. Ragland is secretary of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., and has been vice-president and general manager of Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation since its organization.

Robert F. Noonan for years has been a close student of motion picture insurance in all its phases.

The construction of the new plant has been entrusted to Wharton Green, a well-known builder and contractor, who has specialized in buildings covering the needs of the film industry.

The Film Storage and Forwarding Corporation's warehouses will be the only plant of the kind in the East, and its erection in Greater New York promises to mean much to the industry.

Gordon Receives Token for Splendid Service

Fellow-Workers Present First National Executive with Handsome Gift

AS a token of appreciation of his faithful and meritorious service with Associated First National Pictures, Inc., N. H. Gordon of Boston, this week received from his fellow members of the cooperative organization, a specially designed and jewel studded watch. Gordon's work with First National and his practical counsel have played an important part in developing the affairs of the organization and his services as an executive committeeman during the last two years have proved of inestimable value to the company. Because of urgent outside business interests he has decided to resign as a member of the executive committee.

By reason of his intense enthusiasm for the principles of cooperative effort which are a large part of First National's organization policy, Gordon gave a great deal of his time and thought to its development. As one of the most active members of the Executive Committee, and because of his close proximity to New York, he was called upon many times to perform special tasks of an important character which required him to be absent from his family and New England theatre interests for weeks, and on some occasions, months at a time.

Consequently, at the annual meeting of original franchise holders at West Baden, Indiana, in April, the reasons which made it difficult for him to consent to the unanimous request of his fellow-franchise holders to continue as a member of the Executive Committee were fully understood. However, the members' insistence resulted, in his agreement to remain a member of the Board of Directors and as one of the Voting Trustees—two executive bodies of the organization which meet less frequently than the Executive Committee.

Mr. Gordon was one of the first advocates for an extension of the First National franchise plan to include other than the original members, and to the formulation of the franchise agreement he gave several months of study and work. Following this, he made a tour of the United States and Canada, explaining the plan in detail to each of the other original franchise holders, and it was in recognition of his services and unreserved contribution of time and effort that he was one of the first members named to the Executive Committee of Associated First National Pictures when it was formed more than two years ago.

Al Lichtman Starts on Tour of Country

Al Lichtman is on an extended tour of the country with the Coast as his ultimate objective, where he will confer with his partner, B. P. Schulberg, who is in charge of all production activities for the Al Lichtman Corporation and Preferred Pictures.

By the time Lichtman arrives on the Coast the first production scheduled for release through the new company will be nearing completion and he will have an opportunity to see some of its most effective scenes. As has been announced this production has been titled "Rich Men's Wives" and its cast includes some of the best known figures on the screen.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

VAUGHAN C. MARSHALL, one of the most prominent theatre owners in Australia and formerly President of the Victoria Exhibitors Association, has left New York where he has been looking over theatres and studios for the West Coast. From there he returns to Australia. Mr. Marshall has sold out his Australian theatres, the newest of which seats 3,000. He says that he will probably be back in the business again. He is enthusiastic over American theatres and methods of presentation, especially the Capitol theatre under the management of S. L. Rothapfel.

A course of "Motion Pictures and Education" will be given at the Summer session of the University of Tennessee, Knoxville, Tennessee, beginning June 15th.

Louis Burston has arrived in New York from Los Angeles with a print of his recently finished production, the present title of which is, "Forget Me Not."

WILLIAM WRIGHT, a veteran of the business, says that we have always had serious summer slumps and that if the theatres can not be closed during the hot season we should, at least, as an industry prepare in advance for the inevitable slump. A way back in 1910 he made rounds of the New York theatres during the summer time in the interest of Kalem. Most of these theatres reported that they were only open by the "Grace of God and Percy Waters." Percy Waters' New York exchange, at that time, always made a rental reduction for the summer.

The Social Service Commission of the Federal Council of Churches has just issued the first part of a series of reports on motion pictures. The report is prepared by Dean Charles N. Lathrop of the Episcopal Church. It is a very remarkable document.

Motion Picture News has always contended that the churches at large were not opposed to motion pictures nor in favor of official censorship but that it was only the small and vociferous minority which was antagonistic to this industry. Dean Lathrop's report in discussing any possible control of motion pictures recommends "exercising caution and restraint unless such action be arbitrary, superficial and unjust." Speaking of censorship, he says: "Individual judgment of motion pictures varies so greatly on account of personal tastes and environment that it is difficult to get even a small group to agree on the probable influence of a picture, to say nothing of making the action of either voluntary or official committees satisfactory to the public at large."

There is much more in the report that is both definite and interesting.

The German Independent and Socialist papers, according to an article in the New York Times, are exeited over the monarchist propaganda going forth on motion pictures. "Frederick the Great" is eited as a glorification of Prussian militarism. The suceess of this pieture has caused the advance announeement of a film ealled, "The Vietorious Armies of Germany and Austria and the Armies of Our Enemies."

The charge is also freely made that the German Photo Company, E. B., is backed by the leading capitalists and agrieulturists of Germany and has some 600 films at its disposal for propaganda purposes.

W. R. Rothacker, who has been in New York for several days, returned reeently to Chicago. He sails for England on July 8th for an extended stay. He will probably put into effect his plans for a London laboratory.

The Parisian imagination—always vivid, even without the aid of vin rouge or other gentle stimulant—has outdone itself in the instanee of the announcement that Georges Carpentier was to work in a pieture for J. Stuart Blaekton. It seems—and the Blaekton press representative solemnly assures us that this is so—that Carpentier was seen praeticing some athletic stunts a la Fairbanks. Whereupon an imaginative journalist headlines a story thusly: "Carpentier Co-Starring with Doug. Fairbanks." Blaekton solemnly denies the rumor.

The press book has been made the target of another strong attack by Howard E. Jameyson, late advertising manager of the Liberty and Dorie theatres, Kansas City. Says he:

"If personality instilled into a produetion makes it a greater drawing card, why then would not it aid the press book to receive such personal attention . . . rather than be of stereotyped get-up. Turn to a page of the average press book and a few 'stock' suggestions are found . . . some of them the writer knew to be impraetieal, but he had so mueh space to fill. Imagine the differenee eould an exhibitor but sit down and piek up a press book, written by a CRITIC of the screen, nor a mere word carpenter, depieting the aetual merits of a produetion."

Considerable food for thought there!

Charles Eyton, general manager of the Lasky studio, is expected back in Hollywood about the twentieth of the month from a lengthy vacation spent in China. Kathlyn Williams, who in private life is Mrs. Eyton and who accompanied her husband on the trip, will start work immediately on her return in William de Mille's production, "Clarence."

Wm. M. Vogel, well known film exporter, returned from Europe last week on the Berengaria, after a trip eovering London, Paris, Brussels, Berlin and Vienna.

IF there is one picture deserving all the encomiums which are sure to be heaped upon it—that picture is "The Storm." Successful as a play due to its tremendously vital climax embellished with mechanical effects, it is certain to be even more successful as screen entertainment. The limitations of the stage have never been shown to such poor advantage. Imagine the sweep of the great outdoors! Imagine the crashing climaxes visualized in the big, open spaces! Remember that snow and fire can take in vast reaches. And the screen is the place for such dramatic elements.

"The Storm" is a tribute to Reginald Barker's directorial capabilities. It is also a tribute to Carl Laemmle's showmanship in recognizing picture possibilities in the play. He should feel immensely grateful over the reception which the Promotions Announced by Universal Film Co.

Following the appointment of Art A. Schmidt as general sales manager of the Universal last week, several other promotions and changes in the exchange system and the home office were announced.

To fill the vacancy caused by the promotion of Mr. Schmidt, George L. Levine, formerly manager of the Universal exchange at Milwaukee, has been promoted to manager of the Short Product Department. Mr. Levine's place in Milwaukee will be taken by Ross J. Baldwin, formerly short product manager in Milwaukee. Mr. Baldwin has been with the firm a number of years and is highly deserving of his promotion. He will be succeeded in his former position by Charles J. Casanave.

Another promotion is that of LeRoy W. Alexander, short product manager of the Chicago exchange, to be exchange manager of the Kansas City territory. "Curly" Calvert has been taken from that exchange to do special work in a number of Central and Mid-Western exchanges.

At the same time, announcement was made in Chicago of the appointment of auditor of the exchange, Platzman, to be European auditor of the company.

MacHenry Coming Back to Former Home

Chicago's "Film Row" is to lose one of its best known advertising men June 24 when J. S. MacHenry, known to his legion of friends as "Mac," bids farewell to the Exhibitors' Herald and sets sail for his former home in New York, where he will spend a month visiting his parents and developing to an even finer point that other specialty of his, "goff."

MacHenry has been connected with the Herald ever since its third issue in July, 1915, with the exception of one year, from May, 1918, to April, 1919, when he was serving Uncle Sam as a "Sarge" with the 54th Artillery, 18th Division.

After his recreation and rest, MacHenry expects to affiliate with one of the big producing companies, although the capacity in which he will assist is not divulged.

Walker May Revise Sub-Franchise Agreement

SENATOR WALKER, according to hearsay, has been invited by Associated First National to advise on the possible revision of the present sub-franchise agreement with exhibitors. It is said that the changed economic conditions are responsible for the invitation.

Walker has made an intensive study of the agreement and is said to have discussed it with First National in the past. He is also familiar with all conditions throughout the country, which is probably responsible for his being called in for these conferences which have to do with the alterations in the sub-franchise.

An Appreciation of Will Hays

By Carl Laemmle.

EVER since I was a kid in knee breeches I've made veritable idols of men in public life—statesmen, presidents, governors and others in high positions.

With all the enthusiasm of youth I have endowed them with almost superhuman qualities. In my mind they were all kings, in that "they could do no wrong."

And then I grew older and began to meet some of them!

One by one the idols fell. Their feet were of clay. Instead of being superhuman, I found many of them to be subhuman. Some of them dwindled into self-seeking politicians of a mighty small caliber. They were doggoned small potatoes. Publicity had lied about them and had given them fine qualities they really did not possess. My rose-colored spectacles were smashed!

Then I met Will Hays!

I liked him from the first but it was only after meeting him again and again, and discussing all sorts of different matters that I realized what fine stuff is in him. No matter what came up for discussion, no matter how knotty the problem, I found that he tackled everything from one angle, namely, "Whatever is worth doing is do-able."

He is a dynamo of mental and physical energy. Not only does he believe that everything worth doing CAN be done, but he believes in DOING IT NOW. How many men like that do you meet in the course of ten years? Count them on the fingers of your two hands and you'll probably have eight fingers and two thumbs left over.

Hays is a go-getter. He is a national go-getter. He thinks in a big, broad way and he acts in a quick, sure way.

He lives in Principle—and it's the kind of Principle that carries a great big capital P. A man who bases everything he does on Principle has simply got to succeed and all hell can't stop him. His Principle forces him to be on the level. It compels him to be sincere.

Will Hays is just plain folks. He goes and he gets. Armed with a heart full of Principle and a head full of horse-sense, he goes and he gets.

He doesn't neet this praise from me or from anyone else. But I'M writing it because, like Mrs. Malaprop, I believe in "giving people more taffy while they live and less epitaphy after they're dead."

Will Hays, of Sullivan, Indiana, gol darn it, I'm glad you're alive!

Vitagraph President Off for European Tour

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company of America, sails Tuesday on the Aquitania for an extended tour of England and France. He is accompanied by Mrs. Smith (Jean Paige).

Smith will spend some time with the London headquarters of the company, and it is his intention to make a tour of the branches throughout England. Incident to this tour he will make a close study of English atmosphere and locales for a number of forthcoming English productions.

Following their stay in England, Mr. and Mrs. Smith will spend some time in Paris, where Vitagraph has a large branch and important interests.

Reform Bureau Head Has Speech Cancelled

Even the Sunday Schools and Bible Classes will not stand for the methods of Dr. Wilbur Crafts, superintendent of the International Reform Bureau. Because of his abuse of United States Senator James A. Reed of Missouri, who is seeking re-nomination at the Democratic primary election August 1, the teacher of the Men's Bible Class of the Third Baptist church, St. Louis, on Saturday evening, June 17, cancelled the address Dr. Crafts was scheduled to make Sunday morning, June 18.

The engagement for Dr. Crafts was made some time ago by Dr. David Rener of the Lord's Day Alliance. It was one of several talks he is booked to make in St. Louis. He claims to have come to St. Louis primarily to attend the convention of the Anti-Blue Law League of America, which was scheduled to meet here this week. However, the gathering may be postponed. Dr. Crafts said he intended to endeavor to show the league that there are "no blue laws."

Australians Good at Exploitation

Motion picture exploitation, as practiced by the foremost American exhibitors, is winning great favor with the leading showmen in Australia according to John W. Hicks, Jr., who arrived in New York last week to confer with E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, regarding Paramount distribution plans for the coming year.

"Exploitation methods which have stood the test in this country have been used so successfully in some of the larger cities of Australia that many of the progressive exhibitors are adopting the latest exploitation methods as a means of building new prestige and prosperity for their theatres," said Mr. Hicks. "Some of the prominent exhibitors have shown unusual ingenuity in exploiting Paramount pictures and in some cases American showmen could adapt Australian exploitation ideas with profit to themselves."

Coast Picture Houses Show Increase

STATISTICS received by Western offices of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., show that 262 new motion picture theatres have been opened in the Pacific and Rocky Mountain States since May, 1921.

Last year there were 1692 motion picture theatres in the eleven states. Now there are 1954 and more to come. Arizona leads with 47 new houses, Wyoming is next with 38 and California third with 34 new theatres. Three of these, with a seating capacity for 8,300 people, are in San Francisco.

Most of the new houses are in the downtown districts, but they do not seem to have affected residential district theatres.

Senator Walker Given Ovation at T.O.C.C. Testimonial Dinner

Plaza Banquet Hall Is Crowded to Capacity as Senator Is Lauded

SENATOR JAMES J. WALKER was given an ovation at the testimonial dinner tendered him by the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce at the Plaza Hotel, New York City, last Monday night. Just 820 guests were seated about the banquet board when the Senator made his entrance, and they loudly acclaimed him for many minutes. It was one of the finest tributes paid to an extremely popular man at any meeting ever held in the industry.

Unfortunately the banquet hall was filled to its capacity. Manager Fogg of the Plaza accommodated every guest possible, but Louis Blumenthal, treasurer of the dinner committee, said he had received requests for over three hundred additional reservations which he could not fill. Included about the board were those most prominent in the picture industry, and as well were prominent officials of New York State and New York City, come to pay their respects to Senator Walker.

In his address of welcome Bernard Edelhertz, chairman of the board of directors, hit the keynote of the assemblage when he said:

"We are indeed proud of being afforded this opportunity, especially in the midst of this splendid gathering, to express our deep respect, our devotion and our love for our Jimmy, as we affectionately prefer to call him."

It was 8:25 o'clock when Senator Walker walked into the Plaza dining room, accompanied by ex-Governor "Al" Smith and members of the T. O. C. C., and it was ten minutes later when the cheering subsided.

Edelhertz, whose address of welcome follows, introduced ex-Governor Smith, who acted as toastmaster.

"On behalf of the Theater Owners Chamber of Commerce, I extend to you all a most hearty and cordial welcome.

"It is altogether proper and fitting that the Theater Owners Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York shall be sponsor for this tribute to the most distinguished and sole honorary member—Senator James J. Walker.

"We are indeed proud of being afforded this opportunity, especially in the midst of this splendid gathering, to express our deep respect, our devotion and our love for our Jimmy, as we affectionately prefer to call him.

"Our Jimmie has been a potent and vital force in the activities of organized motion picture theater owners in this city, state and nation ever since he became identified with this branch of the motion picture industry.

"And we are particularly proud of him because the force that he has exerted on behalf of organized exhibitors has been along sane and constructive lines and always based on principles of fairness and justice to all the branches of the motion picture industry. A very recent chapter in the history of organized exhibitors in this country has conclusively shown where Senator Walker stands when it comes to choosing between constructive achievement on behalf of exhibitors and destructive tactics which defeat the very purpose for which exhibitors are organized.

"I am glad to be able to say that the membership of this organization is unanimously behind Senator Walker in his policy of constructive achievement. We are proud to have the distinction of having him as our counsel and our spokesman and are in full accord with his policy which tends to accomplish things for exhibitors in a spirit of cooperation and not in a spirit of destruction by means of threats and intimidation.

"The Theater Owners Chamber of Commerce realizes its responsibilities as an organized body of motion picture theater owners. We are fully conscious of the fact that the significance and influence of any organized body is commensurate with the extent of its realization of the responsibility to employ its organized force in a fair, equitable and reasonable manner.

"We know that no organized body can survive or long endure unless it employs its organized force in a manner that is conducive to the welfare and well-being of the entire industry in which it is interested.

"And we know that at times it is easy to win the plaudits and applause of the unthinking by resorting to unscrupulous methods in the use of organization forces. We know that it is easy to win the support of some by making reckless and irresponsible promises which can never be redeemed—but we deprecate and condemn such methods and are unalterably opposed to their use in any shape or manner whatever.

"Of course, we intend to fight for what we believe is fair and just. There are certain ills from which the exhibitors are suffering today, and it is our purpose to make every reasonable effort to cure these ills.

"And right here I want to say for the benefit of those who have sought to pervert the meaning of an innocent remark recently made by Senator Walker that we do not intend to cure these ills by taking our prescriptions without carefully inquiring what these prescriptions contain. I believe that the members of our organization ought to know whether a prescription is genuine or not. Besides, we can safely trust the Senator to scrutinize our prescriptions and tell us if they are the real thing before he will advise us to swallow them.

"But with all that we intend to fight honorably. In the language of the fraternity, some of whom I understand are ably represented here tonight, we don't intend to hit below the belt, because we know that that is not the way to win a fight."

Ex-Governor Smith, who presided over the ceremonies following, paid a splendid tribute to Senator Walker in reciting his career as he knew it from the time they were boys together in the same East Side district, to their duties together in Albany, and right down to the present.

Will H. Hays was the first speaker called upon by the former Governor. After discussing different phases of the picture industry he turned to Senator Walker and said: "I appreciate you as a man. I regard you as my friend. I bring to you the highest possible regards. All I can repeat is a rhyme of my childhood:

"'If you love me like I love you
No knife can cut our love in two.'"

De Wolf Hopper followed Hays, and his remarks were thoroughly humorous and appreciated. Tommy Gray read one of his monologues, and was followed by Congressman Frederick Landis of Indiana, author of "The Copper Head."

When Toastmaster Smith called upon Senator Walker the ovation of the earlier evening was repeated, but perhaps more vociferously. The Senator's remarks were for those both in and out of the industry.

He said, in part:

"I gave the business what was in this poor, ingrown carcass. I am going to get some place for the good of the industry if not for the good of Walker.

"Some time ago I made a homely analogy. I said I would be willing to sit at the feet of Will Hays and take my mental prescriptions from him while I took my physical prescriptions elsewhere. I was criticized and that caused a rupture. I was called a professional politician. That was supposed to be derogatory but I consider it the highest econium to be given a man. I repeat—and the motion picture men will understand—Hays has got to get a bigger pair of shoes for all the fellows who are willing to sit at his feet.

"I want them (the public) to know," said Walker, "that there are men of the highest type of integrity in this business

Nothing Wrong with Industry, Says Lichtman

"WHAT'S the matter with the motion picture?"

On all sides, in and out of the industry, we hear the question.

Because he is inaugurating a new producing and distributing company just at a time when the calamity howlers are howling their howlingest, this question was propounded to Al Lichtman, who, with Ben Schulberg and J. G. Bachmann, has launched the Al Lichtman Corporation.

"Nothing at all is wrong with the motion picture as an institution," Al opines with refreshing optimism. "Something IS radically wrong with certain proportion of individual pictures which are being foisted on the market, but the industry, as a whole, is sound, commercially as well as artistically.

"The only real trouble as I visualize it, is that there seems to be a tendency to operate on the basis that you can sell all Ford cars in a country which demands emphatically its Packards, Cadillacs, Pierce-Arrows and other high quality cars. While I am willing to concede that there may be a call for a small percentage of Ford-pictures, I also insist that, in the main, our supporting public demands Packard - pictures, Cadillac - pictures, Pierce - Arrow pictures and others of similar high quality. And we must supply that demand if we are to survive.

"What some producers and distributors seem to have overlooked is the fact that the motion picture audience of to-day isn't exactly the same as the audience of a few years ago. In the earlier days the motion picture recruited its followers from a distinctly limited class and clientele; to-day every walk of life is represented in the motion picture theatre. The general public is unquestionably sold on the picture as entertainment, and sold strongly, and this great public will attend and attend regularly, if we do not insult its intelligence by offering to it pictures which are mediocre, bromidic, insincere, un-convincing and, worst of all, productions which in their general treatment follow along lines of monotonous sameness, each one a dreary replica of hundreds of others.

"The greatest battle this industry ever faced was to convince the very public which is supporting us today that we could create any but the most inferior type of pictures. All pictures were scorned as cheap and trashy and it was deemed a terrible comedown for any star from the legitimate stage to appear in a motion picture. We overcame that seemingly insuperable obstacle, and did so through the medium of really worth-while production. We are not going to dissipate the prestige we have attained by the circulation of the sort of pictures which were once said to represent the best we could do. I say we are not going to do so because there are enough thoughtful, analytical producers and distributors to adequately supply the demand for the class of production which will measure up to the public's requirements.

"I believe that the wholesale production and exhibition of poor pictures is gradually diminishing, but it has left its indelible mark in passing, and I base this belief on first-hand information. For some time past I have been conducting a quiet investigation of general conditions and part of this investigation included the questioning of many people who formerly had loyally supported the motion picture theatre but recently had almost entirely withdrawn that support. Asked why they no longer attended pictures regularly their answer was, invariably: 'We are tired of going to pictures night after night, only to see the same old things done over and over again, with scarcely any variation in theme or treatment. Because we cannot tell from the advertising what the real quality of each picture is (ever see a picture advertised as poor?), we have quit going altogether'."

Send It Back

THE Babson-Columbia University-MOTION PICTURE NEWS questionnaire is now in the exhibitor's hands.

We ask urgently that every exhibitor send it back, filled out, at once.

The response is already excellent. But the full success of the survey depends upon the largest possible volume of replies.

This questionnaire will establish:

The gross income and taxation of this industry, which will at last furnish a definite argument against over-taxation.

The average admission price and how it has recently declined.

The average feature rental price and how it has advanced (our producer questionnaire will show average production costs).

Theatre operation cost and how divided.

Program, music, advertising statistics.

Business as compared with other years.

And many other points that all exhibitors want to know.

Send back the questionnaire—today.

Statement of Closing Creates Uproar

LITERAL uproar, precipitated by a statement attributed to one of their officers to the effect that every motion picture theatre in Baltimore, Md., planned to shut its doors July 1 and remain closed for at least two months and perhaps longer, has involved exhibitors of Baltimore, in turmoil and threatens, it is said, to bring about a bitter fight in the Exhibitors League of Maryland.

The statement was attributed to J. L. Rome, manager of the Rialto, Apollo, Broadway, Sunset and Capitol Theatres and vice-president by grace of an election six weeks ago of the Exhibitors' League.

Rome was quoted as saying that many of the smaller houses were anxious to close July 1 for an indefinite period.

As a matter of fact, the suggestion has been made that theatres of the city agree to close for the week of July 3, since that day, as well as Independence Day, will be a legal holiday in Maryland.

Blue Sunday Law Meets Death in Tampa

The Blue Sunday promised Tampa, Florida, by Sheriff Spencer proved a "flivver." The people did not want it, and they are not to have it. It all happened this way. Several Citizens of Tampa made a trip to Tallahassee with a petition requesting the Governor to remove the Sheriff for alleged non-enforcement of the laws. The Governor did not find the charges sufficient, and so the Sheriff remained on the job.

To get back at this Committee, it is claimed, the Sheriff dug up the old dead Blue Laws and issued a proclamation that he would enforce them without fear or favor. Sunday, June 4th, was to be the last Sunday for the theatre, beaches and soft drink stands.

The fateful Sunday, June 11th, arrived and found all of the theatres, beaches and most of the larger refreshment places doing business as usual.

During the day the theatres were visited by Deputies, who asked, and were willingly given, the names of the Managers. Monday morning found the Managers awaiting the expected warrants, but they waited in vain. Finally the big story broke, and great joy came to all, for the Judge had refused to allow his Court to be made a catspaw for personal grudges, and had refused to issue the warrants.

Screen and Newspaper Same, Is Missouri Plan

THE Missouri Constitutional Convention, in session at Jefferson City, the state capital, took the initial step Thursday towards the making of important history for motion picture exhibitors, when a proposal, which would place the screen on the same plane as the newspaper, as far as censorship is concerned, was introduced.

The proposal, introduced by A. A. Speer, would broadly widen the scope of the "freedom of the press" section of the present Missouri constitution, providing every person shall be free to say, write or publish, either by written or printed word, or by Pictures in Motion, or otherwise, on any subject whatsoever, being responsible for all abuse of that liberty.

The proposal, which, in the opinion of leading Missouri politicians, will be adopted by the convention which is framing a new constitution for Missouri, is the culmination of a long standing fight on the part of the reformers to secure the passage of a censorship in the "Show Me" state.

Leaders of Federated Organizations Extend Aid to Hays

Fifty Representatives of Big Bodies Aim to Assist Film Uplift

AN open forum, with the raising of motion picture production standards as the subject, resulted from the meeting between Will Hays and over fifty heads of nationally federated organizations at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, Thursday, June 22.

In a short address in which he outlined the purposes and hopes of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Mr. Hays opened the session. In stressing the place of the motion picture in the life of the world today he drew prolonged applause with the statement, "The motion picture furnishes amusement for 20,000,000 people every day. A country must have amusement, or that country will go 'Red.'"

On the question of censorship he stated: "Political censorship is but an incident. Of course the country is against it. When the reason for it is removed it will quickly pass. We aim to remove the reason. Great progress has already been made. It is ridiculous to say the public demands the salacious in entertainment. The big financial successes of the past eighteen months have been clean, wholesome pictures. They will continue to be successful. I know the public, and the public is for that kind of entertainment."

Prior to the meeting the following statement was made by Mr. Hays: "A frank talk with these important leaders of action and thought will be immensely valuable to those of us who hope to see the motion picture develop still further as a factor in the Nation's recreation, amusement and education. I am sure it will be valuable, too, in bringing to the delegates of these associations problems of the picture industry. As a result of this and other similar meetings the motion picture may become more and more responsive to those progressive civic, social and artistic objectives represented by these organizations meeting today."

The remarkable turnout of heads of big federated organizations assured practical help in the way of concrete suggestions and advice, from the outset of the gathering. In turning the meeting over to those present Mr. Hays said:

"We want practical help. We want practical suggestions. Weigh what you have to say. Spare us not at all."

In the course of his address the suggestion was made that a committee from the organizations represented might be formed to render continued aid to the producers and distributors.

H. S. Braucher, secretary of the Community Service, Inc., was the first to arise, with a suggestion that some one person in the Hays organization be designated as a receiving center for suggestions, and that this fact be publicized in order that the public might in future have a given point to which to address its ideas.

A censorship of the scenario, rather than the finished product, was the idea advanced by J. E. West, secretary of the Boy Scouts of America.

A score of others present, including Mrs. Herbert Hoover, spoke during the morning session.

Following luncheon, the meeting was resumed, and at the time of going to press was still in progress.

Among those present were:

Rex Beach, playwright; David S. Beyer, vice-president, National Safety Council; Miss Borrow, secretary, Colonial Dames of America; Leroy E. Bowman, secretary, the National Community Center Association; H. S. Braucher, secretary, Community Service, Inc.; Mrs. Philip A. Brennan; Mrs. Richard M. Chapman, president, Federation of Women's Clubs of N. Y. C.; Rev. F. E. Clark, president, United Society of Christian Endeavor; Laurence Vail Coleman, director, Safety Institute of America; Ernest L. Crandall, Visual Instruction Association of America; Miss H. Ida Curry, Child Welfare League of America; Chas. B. Davenport, Carnegie Institution of Washington; Miss Helen Davis, associated executive, National Board Y. W. C. A.; Walter T. Diack, general secretary, Young Men's Christian Association; Dr. G. Clyde Fisher, associate curator, American Museum of Natural History; Henry Fleischman, mgr. director, the Educational Alliance; Hugh Frayne, American Federation of Labor; Clyde Furst, secretary, Carnegie Foundation of the Advancement of Teachers; J. H. Hall, educational director, Associated Advertising Clubs of the World; Lee F. Hanmer, Russell Sage Foundation; Mrs. Oliver Harriman, president, Camp Fire Girls; Dr. Harris, World's Sunday School Association; E. L. Harvey, secretary, National Security League; Rev. Joel Hayden, Conference Union Theological Seminary; Mrs. Milton P. Higgins, president, National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teachers Associations; Mrs. Herbert Hoover, president, Girl Scouts; Mrs. Harlean James, secretary, American Civic Association; Judson King, executive secretary, National Popular Government League; Dr. H. E. Kleinschmidt, Medical Dept. of the American Social Hygiene Association; Rev. Wm. Lampe, World's Sunday School Association; Ffed Landis, playwright.

Colin H. Livingstone, president, Boy Scouts of America; Rev. Chas. S. MacFarland, Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America; Rev. Chas. A. McMahon, National Catholic Welfare Council; Rev. John A. Marquis, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America; Earl A. Meyer, director, the American Legion Film Service; Rev. Kenneth D. Miller, Conference Union Theological Seminary; Mrs. George M. Minor, president general, Daughters of the American Revolution; Prof. Parker T. Moon, secretary, Academy of Political Science; Miss Virginia M. Murray, general secretary, Travelers' Aid Society of N. Y.; Jesse H. Neal, sec.-treas. Associated Advertising Clubs of the World; Dr. Anne Nicholson, National Council of Catholic Women; W. W. Norton, treasurer, American Association of Social Workers; Clarence A. Perry, Russell Sage Foundation; Albert S. Peters, director Film Service Div., American City Bureau; Dr. Daniel A. Poling, United Society of Christian Endeavor; Dr. Frederic B. Robinson, American Council on Education; Rowland Rogers, Visual Instruction Association of America; Mrs. R. F. Schwartz, secretary Young Women's Hebrew Association; Lester F. Scott, secretary, Camp Fire Girls; Mrs. N. Stone Scott; Dr. Albert Shaw, vice-president, the Academy of Political Science; R. C. Sheldon, secretary, International Big Brother and Sister Federation; George H. Sherwood, executive secretary, American Museum of Natural History; F. F. Simmonds, Eastern District secretary, Chamber of Commerce of the U. S.; Alburn E. Skinner, secretary, Chautauqua Institution; Mrs. Louis Slade, Second Regional director, National League of Women Voters; Mrs. R. E. Speer, president, Young Women's Christian Association; F. B. Steele, secretary, Sons of American Revolution; Miss N. F. Stoughton, assistant secretary, the Rockefeller Foundation; Paul Tanner, Actors' Equity Association; S. M. Tucker, president, New York Drama League, Inc.

Mrs. Coffin Van Rensselaer, executive secretary, National Civic Federation—the Women's Department; Miss Ethel Warner, executive secretary, Academy of Political Science; Miss Mabel T. R. Washburn, secretary, National Historical Society; James E. West, secretary Boy Scouts of America; Mrs. Wm. Whittaker, secretary, Federation of Women's Clubs of N. Y. C.; Miss Helena V. Williams, National Tuberculosis Association; Mr. Wise; Dr. John W. Withers; Miss Agnes S. Winn, assistant secretary, National Education Association; Clinton Rogers Woodruff, American Civic Association.

In addition to this group, there were representatives from the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and members of the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, Inc.

Fruit Born of Meeting

FOLLOWING an address by Rex Beach toward the close of the meeting between Will Hays and the representatives of federated associations, a resolution was presented empowering Mr. Hays to select a committee of three, which would in turn choose a full committee of 15 members, with a purpose of continuing in close association with the work of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, and rendering such aid as is in their power at all times.

The committee of three appointed by Mr. Hays comprises: Lee Hammer of the Russell Sage Foundation, chairman; Mrs. Oliver Harriman of the Camp Fire Girls Association; and James E. West, chief scout executive of the Boy Scouts of America, who proposed the resolution.

Associated Exhibitors to Pay Dividend

FOLLOWING a meeting of the board of directors of Associated Exhibitors, June 20th, it was announced that a dividend of 2 per cent. on the preferred stock, for the second quarter of the calendar year 1922, had been declared. The quarter ends June 30th, and the dividend is payable in the first week in July.

This is the second quarterly dividend which has been declared since Arthur S. Kane took active charge of Associated Exhibitors, March 6th of this year. The dividend for the first quarter was declared April 18th and paid April 20th.

Sir Charles Higham Guest at A.M.P.A. Luncheon

SIR CHARLES HIGHAM was the guest of honor at a luncheon held by the A. M. P. A. at the Hotel Biltmore, New York City, on Thursday of this week. C. L. Yearsley of First National, presided, and D. W. Griffith introduced the distinguished speaker. Sir Charles Higham made a very remarkable address, which will be printed in full in next week's issue of Motion Picture News. In the course of his speech, Sir Charles made an emphatic appeal for clean pictures and laid the responsibility for clean films directly at the door of the advertising men.

The luncheon was preceded by an interesting exhibition of posters and other advertising accessories, which by contrast with those issued in earlier days of the industry demonstrated not only the improved methods of the present day but also the policy of the A. M. P. A. for clean advertising.

picture has received from the New York press—a reception certain to be duplicated everywhere. You would think there could be nothing new under the sun insofar as visualizing stories of the Canadian Northwest.

True, it is an expression of life lived in the raw—with the conflicting forces in man in constant strife with those of the elements of nature. A simple, love story of two men and a girl far from civilization. The winter's snow prevents an escape. And with the awakening of spring love has conquered all. The woodsman's love is holy, while his city rival is guided solely by lust. The storm in these men's hearts rages and keeps in harmony with the storm of snow outside the cabin.

It is all human and genuine. The physical action does not seem a separate issue of the story. The fire raging through the forest, mounting in gigantic flames is a marvelous vista. But it does not make the picture as it did the play. Somehow the story seems to stand without it—yet it gives it vitality and color.

For eight reels this drama fascinates you. Marvelous you might say considering its age-old theme and characterization. A well constructed story soaring easily and surely to its climaxes is one reason. Another is the superb interpretation by players who are adaptable to the respective roles, but who are also equipped with talent. No better choice than House Peters could have been made. This very, able actor contributes a large share toward the picture's success. Always in restraint, always natural, always sincere—he gives the impression that you are watching a human being and not an actor. It is one of the most magnificent performances that ever graced the screen.

Mike Connolly, casting director of International Film Service Company, Inc., is proudly displaying to his friends two letters of appreciation for his work in connection with the May drive for the benefit of the Association of the Improvement for the Condition of the Poor. One letter is from Cornelius N. Bliss which enclosed a copy of a special resolution that has been spread on the minutes of the Association and which reads in part: "The Board wishes in particular to express its thanks to Mr. Mike Connolly for his generous assistance to the May carnival." The other letter is from Mr. Will H. Hays.

J. Irving Green, director of publicity and advertising for Associated Exhibitors, entered the state of matrimony on Thursday of this week. Mrs. Green was formerly Millicent Hoagland of Stamford, N. Y. The ceremony took place at the home of the bride. Mr. Green has been in the picture game for over seven years and is well known in the film circles of the Metropolis. "Irv" states rush of business at the A. E. office requires his presence at the home-office desk just now but that he and his bride will enjoy a brief honeymoon trip later in the summer.

A NOVELTY from the top of the world. A picture from the vast, frozen wastes of the Arctic circle showing not only the monotonous reaches of snow and ice, but the habits and mode of living of the Eskimos—that is "Nanook of the North." Here are a strange people. You wonder where they came from and how they managed to take up their abode so far from civilization. You wonder again over their ancestry. Are they Mongolians who became separated from their tribes during the glacier period? One thing is certain they are a race without a flag—without a country. They are nomads who are left unmolested to eke out their livelihood—to fulfill their destiny because it is not the white man's privilege to interfere (conqueror and destroyer that he is) where climatic conditions are overwhelmingly severe. The white man has conquered heat, but he cannot conquer frost. A Peary or a Nansen may explore and chart the land. Then he returns to civilization.

A strange people—these Eskimos. Nature is merciless in her cruelties within the Arctic circle. Yet one branch of the human family can conquer snow and ice. Think of it—the scheme of life so severe that the strongest instinct, that of self-preservation, is ever manifested. Starvation ever stalks in the path of these nomads. They must find salmon in summer, seal and walrus meat in winter to sustain themselves. And battling for existence has made them mighty hunters. It is a conflict that never ceases. The elements are arrayed against them. You marvel over their fitness to survive. The bitter atmosphere is with them always. This fight with nature has made them happy philosophers in their simple way. Their struggle is too keen to take up the white man's search for expression. And they wouldn't understand it. They are primitive animals guided solely by instinct.

"Nanook of the North" shows them in their conflict for existence. Their playground—their hunting ground takes in a vast territory. Yet they are a mere handful in the human family. The picture presents them at play, at their various tasks of the day, and it is rich in graphic detail. A complete study—a rare education, it also offers stark drama. By comparison the average picture of the frozen North melts into oblivion. The hardships of screen puppets? Merely a bed of roses.

Hays Continues Conferences with Exhibitors

"Friendly and Most Constructive; Nothing Yet Concluded," Reports Hays' Office

THE conferences between Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, and representatives of national, state and city organizations of motion picture theatre owners were continued this week. On Tuesday, Mr. Hays met Charles O'Reilly and a committee from the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State. On Wednesday morning and afternoon, Mr. Hays held meetings with Sidney S. Cohen and a committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Representatives of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce also waited on Mr. Hays on Wednesday. Senator James J. Walker attended at both the state and city conferences.

The Hays headquarters report the conferences to have been entirely friendly and most constructive. According to a statement from the offices of the New York State exhibitors' body, a new set of negotiations was opened at its conferences regarding equitable contracts and film rentals.

The Board of Directors of the M. P. T. O. of New York State, Inc., held a two-day session the first of the week at which matters of importance were under discussion. Among other things was the formation of a new arbitration agreement with the F. I. L. M. Clubs of New York, Buffalo and Albany, with which the old contract is about to expire.

The opening session of the board held Monday in the board offices in the Times Building was devoted to a change in the number of directors from 22 to 23.

Howard A. Smith of Buffalo resigned and was replaced by H. C. Hayman of Niagara Falls.

William Denton of Saratoga Springs was named the twenty-third member of the board.

Paramount Stock School Inaugurated; Rigid Rules on Conduct

Courses to Develop Players in Screen Art; Experts Handle the Work

THE Paramount Stock Company School was formally opened in Hollywood on Tuesday, June 20th. This school is founded for the purpose of developing screen players in purely motion picture technique and affording them a thorough knowledge of all phases of motion picture production. On the same date Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, officially announced the inauguration of the new school from his office at the Paramount headquarters in New York City. According to Mr. Zukor's outline of the scope and work of the school, the new educational enterprise will have a two-fold function: First, the school will offer motion picture players instruction in a series of specially organized courses under the supervision of recognized authorities on the various subjects included in the curricula. Secondly, the school will serve as an established bureau or institute of technical information to which players can refer when in quest of knowledge appertaining to any department of motion picture production.

Prominent in the plans for the Paramount Stock Company and School is a set of rules intended to apply to the conduct of all members of the Paramount Stock Company both inside and outside the studio. One clause of this code reads as follows:

"The motion picture has made you an intimate friend of countless people whom you will never see. You are their friend, nevertheless, and it must be your constant care never to do anything or say anything that will betray the confidence these millions of motion picture lovers have placed in you. Therefore, members of the Paramount Stock Company are expected to avoid places, circumstances and conduct which might in any way bring themselves and the motion picture profession into disrepute. Any member failing strictly to observe this rule is liable to instant dismissal from the company."

In the course of a brief talk to representatives of the trade press and fan magazines at the Paramount home office on Tuesday afternoon, Mr. Zukor made it very plain that the school was not to be an "open" organization to which aspiring candidates for screen honors from all walks of life would be admitted. He explained that through a process of selection, the details of which would be perfected by the committee in charge of the school, candidates for admission to the school would be chosen from players actually at work in the studios or on "locations." The basic idea, he declared, is to observe the work of the individual players on the set and to choose only those whose aptitude for dramatic work warrants more careful development in the regularly organized courses of the school. Another point emphasized by Mr. Zukor was that attendance on the part of players was to be entirely voluntary.

According to the prospectus issued by Famous Players-Lasky, the technical courses fall into two main classes—those concerned with physical training and those having to do with stage training. In the latter division are provided such subjects as cinematography and lighting, make-up, architecture, interior decoration and direction. An additional Department of Creative Effort will include such subjects as the theory and practice of the photodrama, the scenario, and motion picture history. Mr. Zukor explained it was the desire of the Famous Players-Lasky officials to afford Paramount players an opportunity of increasing their knowledge of all phases of motion picture production so that even those already established as leaders for their dramatic ability could, if they desired, augment their knowledge of allied subjects—such as the technique of the camera, interior decoration, and architecture with which they might not be thoroughly acquainted.

The social side of the school was also dwelt upon briefly by Mr. Zukor. He expressed the hope that in this respect the school would prove to be the meeting place of all the Paramount players and that the mutual exchange of suggestions would serve to improve the screen work of those still lacking development. He declared that often complaints are received that while the dramatic content of a photoplay and the work of the star and the principal players are all that are to be desired, yet the entertainment value of a production is destroyed or nearly so because of the poor performance of some of the minor characters. Mr. Zukor said he anticipated that the inauguration of the Paramount school would improve the work of the minor characters so as to obviate this source of criticism and that in time the uncapable players would be eliminated and their places taken by more deserving talent.

A formal statement issued from the Paramount headquarters in connection with the Paramount Stock Company and School follows:

"One of the most radical departures ever attempted in an effort to improve the quality of motion pictures was announced yesterday by Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. It is the formation of the Paramount Stock Company and School at the Lasky Studio, Hollywood, with classes for the instruction of players in every branch of their art and with complete rules governing the players' conduct inside and outside the studio.

"The object of the school is to establish a perpetual reservoir of talent from which can be drawn the stars of tomorrow, and the results are expected to be the development of a corps of screen players such as has never been assembled before by a picture producing organization and the raising of the standard of productions to new levels.

"In many respects the school will be one of the most remarkable ever attempted. Famous directors will act as instructors and the pupils will have among their number men and women known throughout the world as the leaders of their profession.

"Thus the stars under the Paramount banner include Gloria Swanson, Rodolph Valentino, Betty Compson, Elsie Ferguson, Thomas Meighan, Wallace Reid, Dorothy Dalton, Agnes Ayres, Jack Holt, Bebe Daniels, May McAvoy, Pola Negri, Wanda Hawley and Mary Miles Minter, most of whom work in the Lasky studio.

"Others in the Paramount Stock Company are such well known screen players as Lila Lee, Lois Wilson, David Powell, Conrad Nagel, Theodore Roberts, Sylvia Ashton, Walter Long, Charles Ogle, Clarence Burton, Kathlyn Williams, Ethel Wales, Helen Dunbar, Leatrice Joy, Anna Q. Nilsson, Milton Sills, Theodore Kosloff, Walter Hiers, Julia Faye, Guy Oliver, Lucien Littlefield, Robert Cain, George Fawcett, Bert Lytell and William Boyd.

"In speaking of the aims of the school, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players, in charge of production, says:

"'The Paramount Stock Company is the first effort in the history of motion pictures to develop motion picture actors in purely motion picture technique. It also is the first time motion picture players have had an opportunity to broaden their technical education so that their training may embrace a knowledge of all phases of picture production.

"'Unlike the student body of most schools, the members of the Paramount Stock Company are persons who already have established reputations in their life work of acting for the screen. Therefore, the purpose of this school is not to instruct in the fundamentals of screen art, except as such instruction may correct minor faults, but to broaden the working knowledge of the members of the Stock Company to the end that they may increase their versatility and have a wider outlook on their art.'

Paramount Stock School

"Complete rules and regulations, courses of study, officers and instructors have been provided for the conduct of this stock company. There is a Board of Control which includes Mr. Zukor, Mr. Lasky, S. R. Kent and Cecil B. DeMille. The Board of Administration is made up of Mr. Lasky, president; Cecil B. DeMille, director; Robert T. Kane, Victor H. Clarke and Frank E. Woods. There is also a Players' Board of Control, of which the members are Conrad Nagel, Lois Wilson, Thomas Meighan, Sylvia Ashton and Theodore Roberts.

"The subjects and the men who will handle them as the faculty of instruction are: Photodrama—theory and practice, William deMille; Pictorial Values, Penrhyn Stanlaws; Motion Picture History, George Melford; Dancing, Carriage and Fencing, Theodore Kosloff; Physical Culture, Norman Selby (Kid McCoy); Costume Theory, Paul Iribe; Architecture and Interior Decoration, Max Parker; Cinematography and Lighting, Alvin Wyckoff; Acting, George Fitzmaurice; Scenario, Frank E. Woods; Direction, Cecil B. DeMille; Make-up, George Fawcett and Theodore Roberts; Photo-comedy, James Cruze.

"When the project of the stock company school was explained to some of the stars and directors early in the spring by Mr. Lasky they suggested that they be allowed to participate in the control of the work, as is done in some of the larger universities. As soon as the news got around the members of the company drew up a set of rules and appointed the Board of Control which is to assist in their enforcement. They are strict but are considered necessary by the artists for their own protection. As they were finally agreed upon in conference with Mr. Lasky they read:

"'1. To protect the good name of their profession, the members of the Paramount Stock Company have suggested and adopted these rules of conduct and work. Therefore infringement of these rules not only works harm to yourself as an actor and an individual, but it also works injury to your associates. Strict adherence to these rules is demanded of every member of the company, and it also is requested that members, by precept and example, strive to have other members of the company observe them.

"'2. The basis of all good work is good health. Therefore, members of the Paramount Stock Company should guard their health as their most precious asset and avoid any conduct or circumstances that will put their health in peril. Proper exercise, sufficient sleep, fresh air, proper diet—all these are essential to good health. Avoid alcoholic stimulants and late hours. If you are a woman, nothing can destroy your good looks so quickly; if you are a man, nothing can incapacitate you so much for the arduous work of the studio.

"'3. Any member of the Paramount Stock Company who fails to maintain seventy-five per cent standing in classes, attendance and general deportment is liable to expulsion from the company.

"'4. Although the stock in trade of the members of the Paramount Stock Company is their ability to portray their emotions, the place for such portrayal is on the screen, and not in the studio. Temperament is a valuable asset, but temperament out of control is a nuisance to yourself and everybody about you. Bursts of so-called temperament in the studio will not be tolerated; we are all grown men and women, and our actions should be governed by sanity and common courtesy.

"'5. No member of the company will be allowed to make a public appearance at a theatre or public entertainment without permission of the director of the Stock Company.

"'6. Gifts and gratuities to any instructor or officer of the Paramount Stock Company, or anybody else connected with the studio, are strictly forbidden.

"'7. Members of the Stock Company will be expected to play any part assigned to them. Success can be based only on good work, and ability to do good work can be demonstrated as well in a small bit as in a leading role. Therefore, never slight your work, no matter how inconsequential your role may seem.

"'8. Be careful in the choice of your associates outside the studio. Remember: "A man is known by the company he keeps." A woman is known by the company she avoids.

"'9. Do not confine your outlook on life to the activities of the studio. Broaden your viewpoint. Read good books; read a good newspaper and keep abreast of developments in politics, literature, economics, art.

"'10. The motion picture, because of its great distribution, gives you popularity, wealth and a great career. But, by virtue of this very distribution, it also brings enormous responsibilities. You must accept these responsibilities. The motion picture has made you an intimate friend of countless people, whom you will never see. You are their friend, nevertheless, and it must be your constant care never to do anything or say anything that will betray the confidence these millions of motion picture lovers have placed in you. Therefore, members of the Paramount Stock Company are expected to avoid places, people, circumstances and conduct which might in any way bring themselves and the motion picture profession into disrepute. Any member failing strictly to observe this rule is liable to instant dismissal from the company.'

"That these rules will be something more than a formality is evidenced by the fact that Mr. Lasky is to receive weekly confidential reports on the work of each member of the company from the director, Cecil B. DeMille. These reports will carry details as to what classes each student has entered, the student's work in each and also his work in productions, his general deportment inside and outside the studio, with a statement as to the average rating for the week."

Walker Tendered Ovation

and not only those whose names appear in the sensational headlines. Because of these sensational stories, there is an inclination to turn from motion pictures. It was my intention to merely thank you for the present but I was overcome by an irresistible desire to explain these things so that you might carry away with you a better understanding."

"Topics of the Night" were shown preceding the speaking, as was "Our Heavy Hero, or the Life and Bottles of James J. Walker," a funny reel edited and prepared by Tommy Grey .

The officers of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, under whose auspices the dinner was tendered, are:

Hogan, Hughie Jennings, Dr. J. H. Kelton, Col. George V. Kitchen, John M. Kantor, Charles C. Lockwood, Aaron J. Levy, Chief Joseph B. Martin, John T. McGraw, Senator Harry Pollock, C. C. Pettijohn, Tex Rickard, Col. Jacob Rupert,, Lewis J. Selznick, Major H. C. S. Thompson, Judge Walsh and Adolph Zukor.

Universal Will Take Over "Loop" House in Chicago

Another important "Loop" theatre deal in Chicago was announced this week by Mr. Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, who confirms reports that Universal will take over the Randolph theatre on August 1st, having leased the house for five years from Jones, Linick & Schaefer. The Randolph is one of the most popular moving picture houses in the downtown district.

"Star Series" Plan of Production Abandoned by Selznick

Cast to be Subordinate to Story and Production Value; Fewer Pictures

THE "star series" policy of production has been abandoned by the Selznick Pictures Corporation. In the future, no particular player will be featured in the Selznick production over and above the story and production value, declares a statement from the Selznick headquarters. The story and production will come first, and such players will be selected from the field at large as are considered best suited for the purpose, it is announced. The new policy is to be applied to the productions on the 1922-1923 schedule. A plan of limited production has also been adopted, the announcement stating that the Selznick organization contemplates fewer productions than ever before in the history of the enterprise. The growing practice of the motion-picture patron to go outside his own particular neighborhood and "shop" for pictures is cited as the reason for the change in production policy on the part of the Selznick organization.

"It is not that I love Caesar less but that I love Rome more about expresses my position in this matter of production," declares Lewis J. Selznick. "The present Select organization has been serving exhibitors for about six years. During that time there has been an almost revolutionary change in the general conduct of the motion picture business insofar as it has to do with the contact of the general public with the photoplay. The past few years have been the era of bigger and more expensive motion picture programs. The construction of palatial theatres and the installation of shows that compare favorably in cost with those offered in any other branch of the amusement business has become the rule. This development has tended to centralize the exhibiting business. The smaller theatres in the outlying, or neighborhood, communities where 'good' pictures and nothing else once sufficed to make them profitable are less numerous than they were. People have contracted the habit of traveling farther for their motion picture entertainment than was formerly their custom. It has followed quite naturally, then, that motion picture men—producers, distributors, and exhibitors, have been brought to see the desirability of giving the public something which can be announced in a manner calculated to make them 'travel.' The big strength of the unsupported star idea lay in the developing of the popularity of a star and his plays among people who might be expected to attend the same theatre day after day or week after week and adding constantly to this following, in numbers, day after day and week after week, taking advantage of cumulative advertising. Since it has become the tendency of audiences to shift from one section to another it is easy to see that the draft of the star name, unsupported by story and production appeal, has been materially weakened.

"Of more importance insofar as the Select interests are concerned, however, is the development of the producing units who may be counted upon to contribute largely to the product which it distributes, notably the Selznick Pictures Corporation.

"Selznick Pictures Corporation have had a definite objective ever since the first day of their existence. My son Myron, president of the company and actively in charge of its affairs, has been steadily planning a series of productions so big and important that from their very nature, they could not be restricted by the limitations of the star idea as it is generally understood. It has always been his desire to choose for production the type of stories he believes the motion picture public wants and then make them in the manner they should be made. It is no damaging confession to say that this is not always possible when the human limitations of motion picture stars identified with any individual company are considered, and when that company is partial, if not bound, to a small group of stars which it may have under contract.

"And so, in planning for the season of 1922-23, we find conditions ideal for cutting away from our earlier policy—a policy we still consider a splendid one, but nevertheless, a policy which both the Select Company and the industry at large have outgrown. We are going to make a limited number of productions—fewer than we have made in any previous year of our existence, but we're going to make them of the nature that folks will 'travel' far to see. We're going to abandon the 'star idea'—but only as it has come to be known to the trade. And by this we mean that we're going to give the story and production their full chance, ourselves holding them as of first importance and choosing such casts from the field at large as we think best suited for them.

"Nothing which I have said can possibly be taken to mean that it is not our intention to take full and complete advantage of the popularity which certain artists on the screen have created for themselves through their splendid work. It has always been our conviction that the real 'star' of the industry—and the only ones who may be expected to live long enough to make them worth while from the producer and distributor's standpoint—have a just claim upon the public's affections in that they have 'delivered the goods.' We're going to choose this particular type of artist for all of our pictures in the future—and we're going to star them—not because our business arrangements with them make it materially worth while for either their future or ours, but because their performances or their draft at the exhibitor's box office warrants it, and because they approach perfection in the parts for which we have selected them. As a proof of this I might say, that in planning for next year, we have already definitely set on eight of the productions to be made and for four of these productions leading players, including at least ten who are stars of the first magnitude, have been engaged. Each production we make will have 'stars'—not a star—for the exhibitor to bill—but it will have a real story and production reason for the appearance of the star members of the cast.

"Elaine Hammerstein and Owen Moore, whose productions we have been proud to offer for the past two or three years, will continue to appear exclusively in Selznick Pictures, the firm's general policy governing the manner in which they will be used from time to time."

The company's detailed announcement pertaining to the season of 1922-23 is expected to be released soon.

Edward Laemmle Presented Cup for Serial Work

ONE of the most interesting ceremonies of the summer took place last week in Carl Laemmle's office when he personally presented to his nephew, Edward Laemmle, a gigantic silver cup in recognition of his services to the company. Carl Laemmle recently was the recipient of a cup presented by E. L. Crandall of the Board of Education of the City of New York as the pioneer producer of educational serials. Inasmuch as Edward Laemmle was the director of this pioneer serial, "Winners of the West," and the director of "In the Days of Buffalo Bill," a serial which, when released in the fall, will be a revelation of what can be done along those lines, Mr. Laemmle thought it only fitting that this service, too, should be fittingly recognized by the company and its president.

In the presence of the heads of the departments, who were invited informally into Mr. Laemmle's office to witness the presentation, the Universal president expressed briefly his appreciation of what the young director had done, especially in the field of the historical serial. The presentation followed Mr. Laemmle's address.

Harmony Reigns at New Jersey Convention

Hudson Maxim Makes a Notable Address; Sydney Cohen Predicts Closer Producer-Exhibitor Bond

FROM the very first session, in which harmony was the watchword, the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey at the Hotel Alamat, Lake Hopatcong, June 20-23, was in stark contrast to the usual gathering.

At the opening business session on Wednesday the Cohen-Berman-Walker-O'Reilly fight was referred to only in an incidental way. Resolutions adopted included an endorsement of the Official Movie Chat of the M. P. T. O. A. and a condemnation of the music tax, contained in a general condemnatory resolution of censorship.

A matter of importance seriously considered was that of divorcing the New Jersey M. P. T. O. A. from Eastern Pennsylvania and the consolidation of the whole into one unit.

Sydney Cohen, national president, was warmly received and given a vote of confidence. President Woodhull submitted his annual report, and Treasurer Gold, in his report indicated a substantial balance in the treasury.

At the banquet Wednesday evening Michael O'Toole of Scranton, Pa., Chairman of the Public Survey Committee of the M. P. T. O. A. was toastmaster. Among the speakers were Hudson Maxim, famous scientist; Sidney S. Cohen; State President Woodhull; Rev. Henry Rose; Mayor Fred B. Breigenback of Newark; Hugo Ballin; and A. M. Fabian of Paterson.

In his address Mr. Cohen hinted at a better working basis as an expected outcome of the conferences which his organization and the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors were holding.

Mr. Maxim's address was a noteworthy one. He said:

"Sight is the master sense and motion pictures make the appeal of the actual. A tale that is told to the ears has to be interpreted by the other senses. The mind can place audible symbols into visual mental images. What we see with the eye needs no interpretation and no translation. The motion picture is as duly a news gatherer and news giver as the newspaper. The motion picture today is in a large respect an illustrated newspaper and it is a most important institution of learning. Public opinion is the greatest conventionality of the modern world and whereas public opinion is a plastic thing and can be molded it is of consequence largely a manufactured article. The motion picture is one of the greatest creators of public opinion and it will not do to have this powerful instrument for good dominated by a board of fanatical censorship.

"The two first nations to adopt this strict blue law censorship of motion pictures were naturally the two that had the strictest censorship of the press, namely, Berlin, Germany, and Russia. And now German and Russian imperialism has gone to its place where the temperature would melt tungsten. Censorship bills, blue as indigo, are periodically introduced throughout the country to curb and hinder the free expression of thought and opinion through the motion picture and even in the stereopticon lectures. We must not let the blue law fanatics put the motion picture in a straight-jacket.

"Most American citizens are imbued with the idea that they are capable of self-government, capable of minding their own affairs, capable of deciding for themselves what they want and what is good for them. Placing the motion picture under the domination of a board of censors, committees of moral reformers and social uplifters, always fanatical, would be retrogression of personal freedom."

On Thursday the following resolutions were adopted, adding to the by-laws of National Committeemen and nine Board of Directors.

To endorse action of delegates at Washington.

To extend the public service work.

A resolution requesting the trade papers to devote their editorial space to constructive advice, instead of mixing in national quarrels, was also adopted.

A vote of thanks was extended to Chairman Harry Nelson of the Entertainment Committee and to Marcus Loew, as well as to the visiting guests, Mayor Breigenback, Newark; and Mayor Smith, Wildwood, N. J.

Election of Officers

R. F. Woodhull, President, Dover, N. J.; W. P. Hunt, First Vice President, Wildwood, N. J.; Peter A. Adams, Second Vice President, Paterson, N. J.; Louis Bollinger, Treasurer, West Hoboken; Sidney Samuelson, Secretary, E. J. Hennessey, National Committeeman, Newton, N. J.

Board of Directors: John T. Collins, Rutherford, N. J.; Charles Heldinger, Paterson, N. J.; W. C. Hunt, Wildwood, N. J.; E. J. Hennessey, Sidney Samuelson, Newton, N. J.; David J. Keiserstein, Jersey City; H. T. Jones, Newark; A. D. Austin, Wildwood; A. M. Fabian, Paterson.

Paramount School Big Step in Progress of Industry

THE opening of the Paramount Stock Company School in Hollywood on Tuesday of this week marks another important step forward in the progress of the industry. Up to the present practically all the educational efforts of the industry have been directed to the outside. As a move towards the organized instruction of its own membership in the technique of screen art this Paramount School is the most important enterprise of its kind ever undertaken in the history of the industry. The School is expressly and exclusively for players actually engaged in work on the studio sets. The basic purpose is to develop latent talent manifesting itself in actual work in the studio or on "location." The School will not only function as an educational institution with organized courses of instruction, but as a bureau or institute of information—a sort of Actors' Free Library—whither players in quest of special technical knowledge may find their intellectual and artistic wants supplied. The enterprise in its two-fold function of Players' School and Players' Library deserves the heartiest endorsement of the Industry in general. Not Paramount alone but the Industry as a whole will be the better for the innovation. (Full details presented on Page 39.)—E. F. S.

William H. Swanson of Salt Lake City Dead

William H. Swanson, a prominent exhibitor and First National franchise holder, died of pneumonia on Monday of this week at Salt Lake City. Word of his death reached New York in a wire to J. D. Williams of First National.

In the early days, Mr. Swanson was a stockholder of Universal Film. Before entering the motion picture business he had been a prominent circus man. Later, he formed a partnership with Harry Nolan of Denver, and the firm of Nolan-Swanson was the original franchise-holder for the Rocky Mountain district in the First National organization. The partnership was dissolved, and Mr. Swanson took over the American Theatre in Salt Lake City and several other houses in that territory. He was also largely interested in the beet-sugar industry of that section.

First National Prize Winners on Coast

The "$1-A-Week" exhibitors who won the showmanship contest conducted by First National during its Anniversary Week are having the time of their lives on the coast as the guests of First National. There are eight of these exhibitors, from all sections of the country. They are spending a week in Los Angeles and during that time motion picture people in all walks of the industry are entertaining them.

They arrived Monday and were met at the station by a big delegation of motion picture people, headed by representatives of First National.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Man From Home—
Fine, high-grade feature comedy, which pleased our patrons, and brought in good business. (Middle West.)

A good summer picture which drew well. (Middle West.)

North of the Rio Grande—
With the hottest weather of the year, drew good crowds throughout the week. Proved a popular picture. (Middle West.)

Mediocre picture and business only fair. (Middle West.)

Splendid picture with lots of action well acted by Jack Holt and Bebe Daniels. A sure winner. Played to big business. (Middle West.)

The Crimson Challenge—
Bad picture and bad business. (East.)

Western picture never does overly much business here as it doesn't appeal to my patrons. Those who saw it liked it. Average business. (East.)

Across the Continent—
One of Wally Reid's best which is aided materially by the presence of Theodore Roberts in the cast. Gets the most blase interested. Business good but nothing exceptional in any way. (Middle West.)

The Ordeal—
Agnes Ayres is popular here and this one drew well against strong opposition and warm weather. (Middle West.)

Good picture in every way. Average box office value. (Middle West.)

Under the Lash—
Fairly good picture. The audience likes Gloria Swanson, but she was misplaced in this picture. Business normal. (East.)

Exit the Vamp—
Poor business. People didn't care much for this picture. (East.)

Is Matrimony a Failure?—
Fairly good show that did average business for one week. (Middle West.)

The Woman Who Walked Alone—
Fair entertainment and box office value. (Middle West.)

One of Dorothy Dalton's best. Good box office attraction. (Middle West.)

The Heart Specialist—
A very good picture. (Middle West.)

The Superba, Los Angeles, offered their patrons "The Black Bag" this way

The Good Provider—
They liked this one. Excellent receipts. (Middle West.)

Back Pay—
Didn't go over at all. Audience didn't care much for it. (East.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Smilin' Through—
Patrons liked this one. One of the best drawing cards of year. (Middle West.)

Good picture, but business was a little off. Opposition was too strong. (East.)

Sonny—
Very good picture. Barthelmess in a role as congenial and as fitting as "Tol'able David." Business as good as can be expected at this time of year. (Middle West.)

Fairly good. Average business. (Middle West.)

The Deuce of Spades—

Crossroads of New York—
Fair picture and fair box office attraction. (Middle West.)

Question of Honor—
Anita Stewart retains her popularity and won new friends with this picture. Satisfactory returns. (Middle West.)

The Infidel—
Generally liked. Some thought one of best pictures of Katherine MacDonald. Hot weather cut business. (Middle West.)

The Rosary—
No drawing power here. People evidently fed up on the title. Very good picture, however. (Middle West.)

One Clear Call—
Only an average feature, but did fair business. (Middle West.)

Blind Hearts—
A good drawing card which played to good crowds despite unusually hot weather. (Middle West.)

Fairly entertaining picture which did not do much business because of warm weather and a big carnival. (East.)

Trouble—
One of the best box office attractions of the season. Played to packed houses for a week. (Middle West.)

The Primitive Lover—
Even Constance Talmadge's popu'arity failed to attract even an average business during a week of warm weather and many outdoor attractions. Picture liked by those who saw it. (East.)

Polly of the Follies—
Fair picture and business very good. (Middle West.)

SELZNICK

Reported Missing—
A good drawing card which played to good crowds despite unusually hot weather. (Middle West.)

Admirers of Owen Moore, who is popular with out crowds, liked this. Business was good. (Middle West.)

Excited either much praise or severest criticism. Audiences very much divided. Very few said they liked it but a lot of them laughed uproariously at it. Business fair. (Middle West.)

In spite of poor theatre weather this one pulled them in for almost capacity.

Unique ad for the French film, "Missing Husbands," when the attraction was at the Stillman, Cleveland.

Patrons enthusiastic over it. So was press. (East.)

Channing of the Northwest—
Nothing exceptional as a far north story but business proved quite satisfactory and fans seemed to take to picture. (Middle West.)

Why Announce Your Marriage?—
Comedy which took raily well. Didn't do big business on anything. (Middle West.)

FOX

Shackles of Gold—
William Farnum has a certain following here which always assures at least a medium attendance. This one, however, did a lively week's business. (Middle West.)

Pardon My Nerve—
Regulation western picture which our patrons like and it went over. (East.)

A Stage Romance—
Light stuff and light houses during the engagement. (Middle West.)

Queen of Sheba—
Fair business on return engagement. (West.)

Arabian Love—
They did not swarm to it because there was sheik in it. Business fair. Picture entertaining but not unusual. (Middle West.)

Strange Idols—
Fair business. Fair picture. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

The Black Bag—
Mystery, thrills and actions supplied in homeopathic doses. Built for those who like excitement. A fair week. (Middle West.)

Picture not as good as expected. Business poor. (West.)

The Trap—
An excellent picture, but only a fair box office attraction. (Middle West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Three Musketeers—
On second showing did fine business. This is kind of picture that can be seen second time and enjoyed as much as the first time. A lot of people eager to see it without being coaxed. (Middle West.)

Repeat picture, and did not come up to expectations. (Middle West.)

Orphans of the Storm—
Very big picture. At an increase in prices we did the biggest business this year. (East.)

The Ruling Passion—
Repeat picture and excellent business. (East.)

METRO

Fascination—
Mae Murray is becoming a favorite with our patrons. Took well in "Peacock Alley" and also in this one. (East.)

Kisses—
Picture and business both bad. (East.)

PATHE

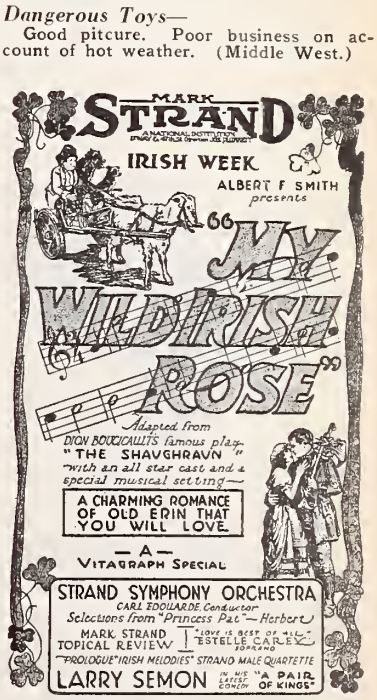
Sailor Made Man—
Run this picture opposite to "Orphans of the Storm" and did fairly good. Picture itself pleased our patrons. (East.)

Lonesome Corners—
Northwood story but seemed to please the audience. Business was good. (East.)

VITAGRAPH

The Sheik's Wife—
Did as well as expected considering adverse weather conditions. Pleased generally. (Middle West.)

R-C PICTURES



Beyond the Rainbow—
Business held up fairly well for the week on this excellent feature. (East.)

The Sheik of Araby—
Fair picture which attracted fair business. (Middle West.)

STATE RIGHTS

Your Best Friend—
Average picture. Drew well in connection with star's personal appearance. (Middle West.)

Dangerous Toys—
Good pitcure. Poor business on account of hot weather. (Middle West.)

Lobby front on "Where Is My Wandering Boy?" arranged by Manager Lou Bissinger of the Washington theatre, Dallas, Texas

Red Lined Extra on "Trouble" at San Diego

MANAGERS Stout and Wier of the Rialto theatre in San Diego, Cal., pulled a good publicity stunt in connection with the showing of "Trouble." Making an arrangement with the Evening Sun, they had an entire front page printed up with the word "EXTRA" in large type across the top, followed by "Jackie Coogan in Trouble," and then followed, in news story style, the narrative of Jackie's experience which is the basis of the picture. The page carried Jackie's likeness, with the statement that "Police Seek Missing Boy." A thousand copies of the paper were distributed, gratis, on the blocks on which the Rialto is located, to passersby, and the stunt went over big.

Frost Makes Salesmen Out of Tampa Newsboys

It didn't require an International Correspondence Course for Robert Frost of the Victory theatre, Tampa, Fla., to make salesmen out of the 75 carriers of the Tampa Times. All he did was promise them passes to see "Penrod" provided they brought in two new subscriptions to the paper. The boys got the passes, the paper got the circulation and the Victory got the publicity not only from the paper's gratuitous notices through the tie up but also from the boys' word of mouth advertising because each boy was required to explain that he was getting the new subscriptions to win a ticket for "Penrod."

Valentino "Kisses" Proves Magnet for Dubuque Theatre

Getting the crowds to matinee performances has always been a problem for Dubuque theatre managers. Consequently, when Manager Frank Burlingame booked "Beyond the Rocks" for the week of May 7, he made use of a teaser stunt to draw the ladies to his matinees.

On his Sunday ads, he inserted a notice that every lady attending the matinee performances would receive a Valentino kiss. Then, he cooperated with the newspapers to run a notice that a person, said to be Mr. Valentino's double, would be at the Strand every afternoon of the week, prepared to demonstrate the famous Valentino kiss. The whole thing, of course, proved to be the distribution of candy kisses, made by a local confectioner and wrapped in "Valentino Kiss" labels.

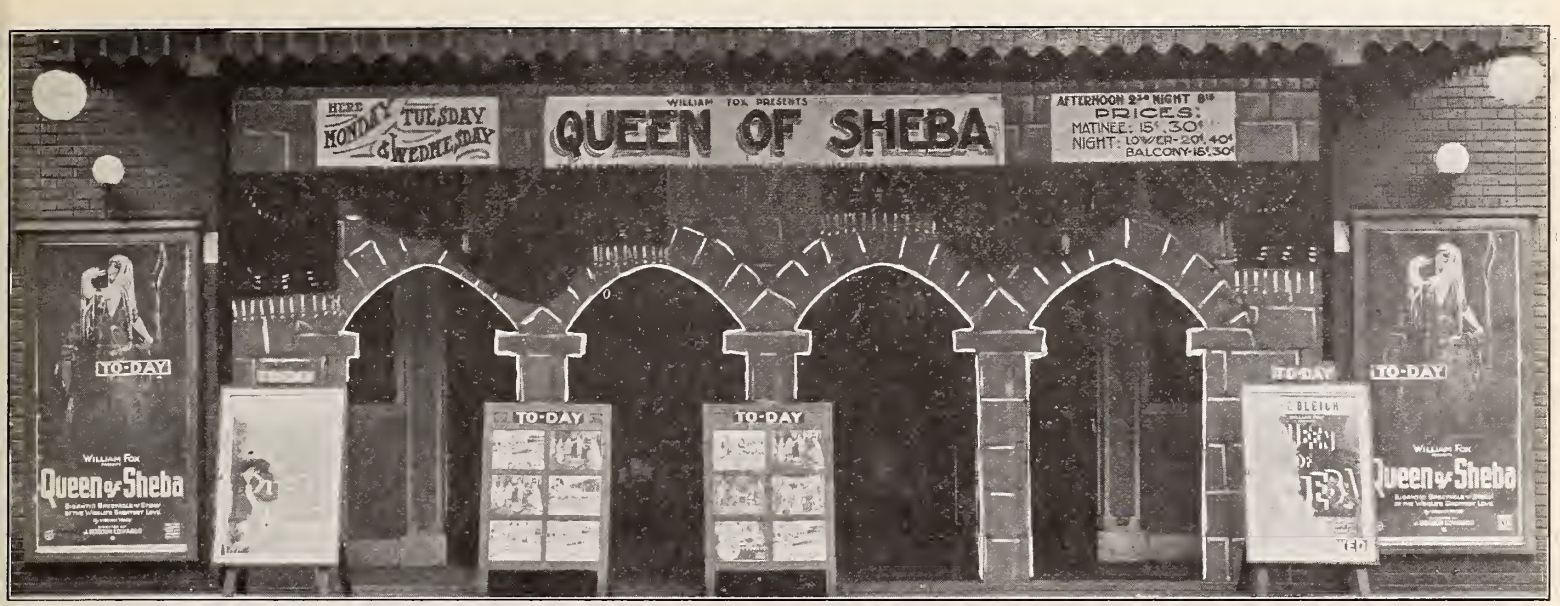
This little stunt drew the crowds and added another feather to Manager Burlingame's cap for originality.

Takes Advantage of One Big Event to Advertise Another

Since some of the patrons of the Liberty theatre, Greenwood, S. C. attend only the bigger features, Manager Byers profited by this knowledge in connection with his exploitation of "The Four Horsemen" by having a special slide prepared which he ran during the engagement of "Fool's Paradise."

"The Four Horsemen" was played up as the picture of the year. Oil paintings were displayed in the windows of the best stores of the town, in hotel and office buildings. And local book store gave the use of window for one entire week.

The first day of showing marked the High School Commencement, and heralds were given out to those in attendance as they were leaving the school. In this way 1,000 people were reached.



"Good Provider" Letter Sent to Ministers and School Teachers

Howard E. Jameyson, publicity director for the Sam Harding string of theatres at Kansas City, made a play for the patronge and good will of the ministers and school teachers of the city when he played "The Good Provider."

A letter in which the "demand" for pictures with a questionable theme was deplored and which set "The Good Provider" down as one of the kind of pictures not to be placed in this classification was mailed to a large list of people not ordinarily reached by motion picture publicity. The results obtained were commensurate with the cost of the letter and the labor involved.

Lobby display on "Orphans of the Storm" during the run of this picture at the Peoples theatre, Portland, Ore.

Atmospheric lobby front on "The Queen of Sheba" built by the Bleich theatre, Owensboro, Ky., and used recently.

Tan Bark Stood Them Out for "Smilin' Through"

Tan bark at three dollars a ton and one ton of that, stood the crowds out when "Smilin' Through" showed at the New Park Theatre, Worcester, Mass., and Manager Max Finn who, with the co-operation of a First National exploitation man, conceived and executed the idea, is licking his chops today at the big idea.

Tan bark was spread on the sidewalk in front of the house. On it was a standard with the sign:

"SILENCE. All sounds on this street has been deadened by tan bark because we need absolute silence for the proper exhibition of Norma Talmadge in 'Smilin' Through,' a First National Attraction.

The tan bark remained in front of the theatre less than an hour. Within that time more than four thousand people had trampled over it and scattered it in every direction with their hoofs; but it had served its purpose.

At the same time Manager Finn got the fans who didn't see the front of the house with a miniature doll window display in a prominent department store tying up with Derby Day. The small dolls drew numerous prospective owners and a few were given away to arouse interest. Other attractive window displays aided the tan bark ballyhoo in "pulling them in" and as far as records show this is the first time this stunt has ever been used in connection with a motion picture.

Here is the ballyhoo which W. Griffith Mitchell, managing director of the Family theatre, Port Huron, Mich., used to exploit "The World's Champion"

Big Clock Face as "Midnight" Advertising

ONE of the exploitation suggestions which Lem Stewart, director of exploitation for Southern Enterprises, sent out to the various managers who were to play "Midnight" was that of a lobby display consisting of a large clock face with the hands pointing to midnight and at each numeral on the dial a common noun, used to convey the human emotions, such as "thrills, love, suspense," etc.

Manager Robert Clemons of the Tivoli theatre, Beaumont, carried out the suggestions building a "clock" that could be seen from a considerable distance. The expense involved was only a few dollars and the results accruing were entirely satisfactory.

Lobby front on "The Rosary," the work of the Riviera theatre, Knoxville, Tenn.

Memories of Yuletide Slogan Furnishes "Smilin' Through" Copy

Because he recalled the effectiveness of the department stores' shopping advertising of "So many days until Christmas." August Ilg, manager of the Wonderland, Lorain, Ohio, revived these memories in his advance teaser advertising on "Smilin' Through." Until the day of the opening he said not a word about the nature or the magnitude of the production. Instead he simply advertised: "Three More Days and Then Norma Talmadge in "Smilin' Through.'" When he got ready for his big splash the public was all keyed up to listen to it.

Exhibitor Used Local Endorsement for Newspaper Ad. Copy

An examplification of the finest kind of newspaper advertising was shown by Manager H. C. Fourton of the Gandy theatre, Norfolk, Va., when he played "Forever" recently.

Harry Brey Bleising, a well-known local business man, saw the picture the first day of its run. Mr. Fourton waylaid his patron as he came out of the theatre and asked him what he thought of the entertainment. Mr. Bleising had no words strong enough to express his appreciation. So Mr. Fourton asked him to put his opinion in writing.

This Mr. Bleising did in a strong letter of endorsement which Mr. Fourton published as a newspaper ad. The town people responded to this local appeal.

Charles E. Sassen, manager of the Queen theatre, Galveston, Texas, used this attractive cut-out in billing "Beyond the Rocks"

Payette Achieves Prologue Miracle

Crandall Manager Presents "Smilin' Through" Number on Stage Eighteen Inches in Depth

JOHN J. PAYETTE, assistant general manager of Harry M. Crandall's chain of a dozen motion picture theatres in Washington, D. C., and vicinity, almost achieved a miracle when he staged a splendid operatic prologue in conjunction with "Smilin' Through."

The Metropolitan is equipped with no stage. At each side of the screen are proscenium sidetabs of sufficient size to accommodate decorative drops only. The actual depth of floor space in these proscenium side-stages is 18 inches from footlight trench to back wall. Yet in this limited space Mr. Fayette who also serves as supervising director of the bills at the Metropolitan presented a prologue that was highly artistic, genuinely interpretative of the pictured scenes that followed and a distinctly valuable embellishment of an exceptional program.

On the side-tab at stage right, was erected an Upson board wall with trailing vines with the garden gate so conspicuous a feature of the dramatic story of "Smilin'Through," centered. Back of this was hung a drop in delicate cerulean with realistic cloud effects. On the opposite side was erected, also of Upson board, a reproduction of the scene in the picture wherein Norma Talmadge, as Moonyeen, peered through the trellised windows at her guardian in the garden.

With the opening of the curtains, Fred East, Washington's foremost baritone, entered through gate in the character of the guardian.

The orchestral introduction carried the opening of the scene and Mr. East then sang two verses and chorus of the song, "Smilin' Through," after which he sat in a reverie on a bench by the gate while the lights came up on the cottage scene across the proscenium where Miss Josephine Houston, repeated the song in the costume of Moonyeen standing just inside the windows.

By a deft use of lighting effects installed especially for this vocal prelude, the absence of stage depth and perspective was adroitly overcome.

The Metropolitan's "Smilin' Through" prologue affords a unique example of what may be accomplished with scant facilities for spectacular effect when intelligent thought and resourcefulness are brought into play. The Crandall organization, one of the best in the country, is full of both.

Summer Suggestion in "Smilin' Through" Lobby

FOR summertime ills the Empress theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla., has prescribed a remedy in its cool, attractive garden lobby on "Smilin' Through." The stone gates of the English type that marked the garden entrance were at variance from those created in the east, inasmuch as they were located directly at the entrance to the theatre instead of inside the lobby. They beckoned an invitation of comfort and coolness that a large attendance of Oklahoma City fans accepted.

Attractive window tie-ups constituted the balance of a restricted but carefully executed exploitation campaign.

Well Rounded Campaign Backed by Chamber of Commerce

IT was contagious.

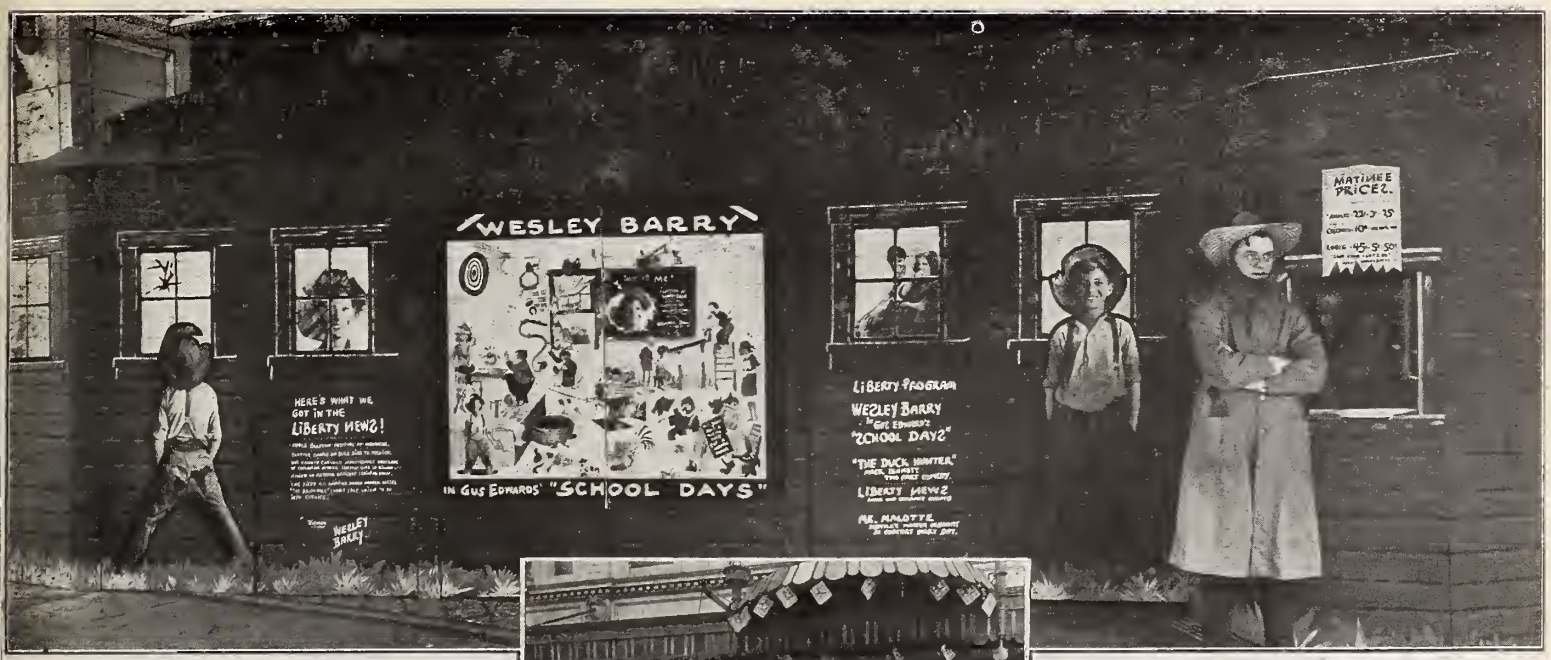
Not even the motorman could resist it. They plastered his car with "Smilin' Through" banners and he caught the habit and chauffeured his man power limousine over the tracks of Bridgeport, Conn., smiling through every street.

The extensive campaign given the attraction for its run at the Dawes theatre was due in large measure to the hearty co-operation of the Bridgeport Chamber of Commerce, aided by the Rotary and Lions' Club, and illustrates once more the practical benefit to the exhibitor of cultivating the goodwill of such civic organizations.

The suggestion was made to boost Bridgeport with a business building campaign. The Chamber of Commerce endorsed the idea and secured the use of a car, without charge to the exhibitor, and who put the signs on it: "Boost Bridgeport. Buy from Local Merchants. Keep Working, not Waiting and Go Smilin' Through 1922."

The Booster idea was also inculcated into the stores, which contributed window tie-ups lavishly. The most effective and artistic was that arranged by Flamm's Millinery Shop featuring the antics of miniature Norma Talmadge dolls. These dolls were given away to patrons of the store and theatre and scored a hit.

Atmosphere De Luxe For "The Fox" Victory Showing



E. J. Barnette, manager of the Victory theatre, Waco, Texas., went to no small trouble in providing an atmospheric lobby front on "The Fox."

A six sheet cut-out of Harry Carey and a large fox with a group of United States Cavalry men stood on top of the box office. Directly in the center of the lobby was a large box filled with white sand scattered here and there, a few pieces of cactus and some blades of grass, all of which went together to represent a desert scene. On both sides of this scene were cut-out ads of a fox. Directly in the back ground was another cut-out of Harry Carey. Around the lobby were hung garments belonging to cowboys, including large sombreros, ropes, spurs and the largest pistols that could be found.

Leavitt Uses Pay Envelopes on "Pay Day"

THOUSANDS of prospective patrons were reached by Manager Martin A. Leavitt of the Arc Theatre, Lafayette, Ind., with pay day envelopes when he played "Pay Day." Enclosed was a check from "First National" giving a tie up with the bank which advertised the picture. The check was good for "one million dollars worth of laughs."

Avenue of Shield Signs Points the Way to "Smilin' Through"

Through an avenue of shield signs, on every other lamp post of the prominent streets in Cleveland, Ohio, the pedestrian walked and the motorist rode "Smilin' Through" to "Smilin' Through" at the Stilman theatre. The signs were painted on placards in the shape of shields and hung about 11 feet high on alternate telephone post and lamp posts.

At the same time the delivery wagons of the Cleveland Press were drafted into service. The wagoners covered not only Cleveland but also the suburban territory in their daily routes and established the fame of "Smilin' Through" in the country long before the picture began its run.

Something like 25 window tie-ups were arranged on this picture, mostly with Columbia dealers.

The most artistic and unusual window display was carried out from a design suggested by a Sunday newspaper roto section. A background of appealing wall paper was used on which to paste stills from the production. This was extended from a height, dropping down to the front of the window. Originally conceived and artistically executed it furnished a distinction in the usual run of window displays.

Anger Checks Up on the Live Ones

L. J. ANGER, of the Capitol theatre, Milford, Conn., used an ingenious stunt to find out how many of his towns folk would respond to advertising, and which incidentally boosted business for "The Bachelor Daddy," 33 per cent.

He took the town directory and got a complete list of all the residents of the town. He sent each one a letter boosting his programs and enclosed a pass good for two admissions any time to the theatre. The stub of the pass contained a serial number which corresponded to the number opposite the patron's name on the list.

When the passes were presented at the door, the ticket taker saved the stub which enabled the management to check the list and see who were the live ones and who were not. The live ones formed the beginning of a promising mailing list.

The Capitol experienced a stimulating business for the "Bachelor Daddy." Fred Walters, Paramount Exploiteer, helped Mr. Anger with the stunt.

Artistic Lobby Front Constructed by Sparks

A GOOD lobby effect was obtained by Manager Sparks, of the Olympic theatre, Wichita Falls, Texas, on "Peacock Alley." Gauze stretched between pure white pillars, with graceful cut-outs behind, made an alluring picture that could not fail to attract the attention of all. Urns and decorations at the top were in keeping with the beauty of the whole display.

Manager Erle Settle of the Palace theatre, McAlister, Texas, designed this lobby on "Her Husband's Trademark."

"Mush On" Prologue Presented During Tivoli Showing of "Great Alone"

A couple of tons of ordinary ocean salt! Ditto, silver confetti! Ditto, mica! Four imported pine trees, pathetically dilapidated beneath a sufficient weight of cotton, salt, confetti and mica. One log cabin half snowed under in salt.

Those were the properties for "Mush On!" a prologue arranged by the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco for its recent showing of "The Great Alone."

An aeroplane motor driving a propeller was in the wings providing wind that simulated one of the blizzard scenes of the picture.

Miniature Arena for "Right That Failed"

ADHERING closely to the theory that miniature lobby or window displays attract whereas life size displays distract, Manager Charles E. Sassen of the Queen theatre, Galveston, Texas, built on his one sheet frame a most attractive boxing ring, with fighters and referee, for 'The Right That Failed."

The display was so arranged that it gave the effect of an actual boxing ring with spectators viewing the fight from the arena.

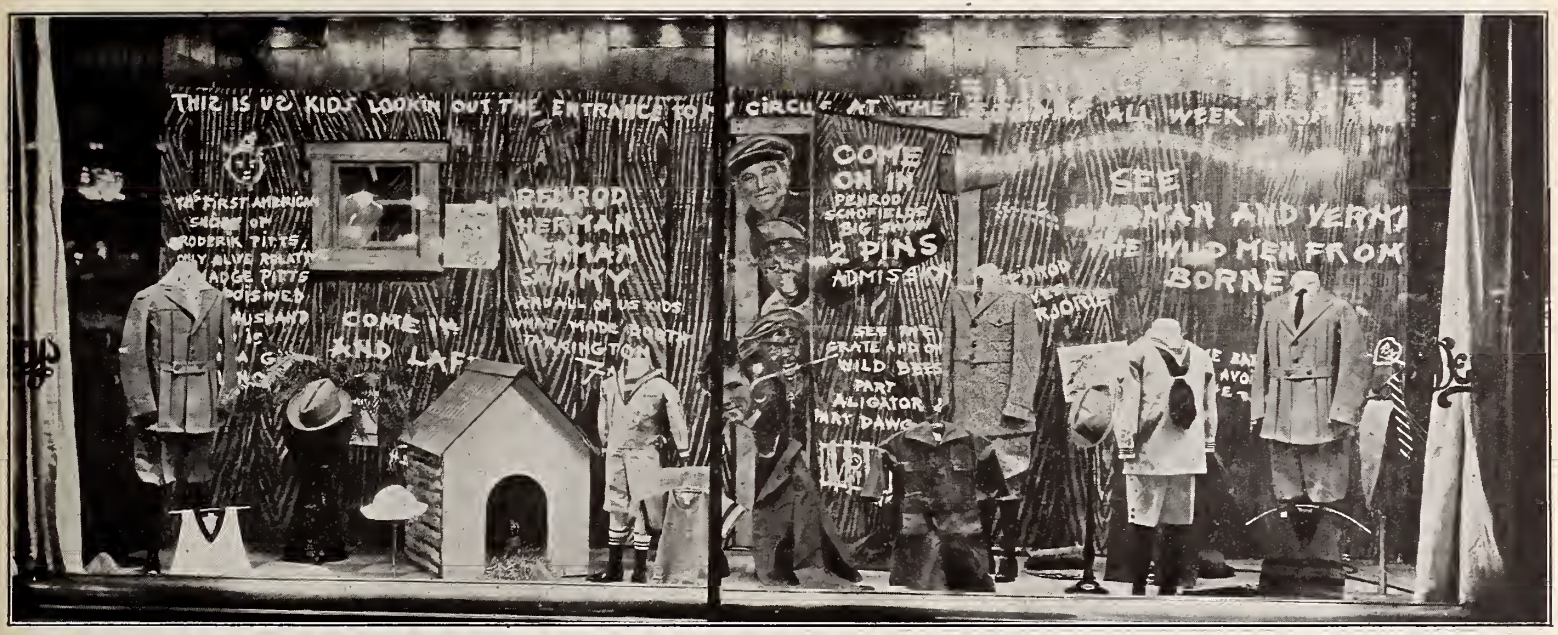
Atmospheric Lobby Front Sells "When Romance Rides"

With the assistance of I. L. Shields, house manager, F. J. Miller, managing director of the Rialto Theatre, Augusta, Ga., recently created a very effective lobby display for "When Romance Rides." The box office was enclosed to represent a judge's stand at a race track. This was surrounded by a huge horseshoe. Two other horseshoes of the same size stood at both entrance and exit. One was placarded "Love," another "Comedy" and the third "Action." Everyone entering the theatre and leaving had to pass through these horseshoes. The display was not expensive and did much to create interest in the attraction.

Roberts Uses Both Window and Lobby Displays on "Green Temptation"



A window and lobby display, both very effective advertising, were among the exploitation mediums used by Manager Alex P. Roberts, manager of the Strand theatre, Salisbury, N. C., for "The Green Temptation." The May "birthstone" is the emerald, so Manager Roberts was able to obtain the cooperation of two leading jewelers in a window display, each featuring the green stone mounted and unmounted, and other green jewelry.

In a hardware store Manager Roberts personally dressed a window using golf, tennis and baseball goods surrounding a card to this effect: "These materials will satisfy the call for "The Green Temptation."

In the lobby he hung a large banner reading—Betty Compson, supported by so and so—mentioning three of the other stars. Directly under this was hung the large beaver board cut-out of a green stone about seven feet in height.

Robertson's Lobby Comedy Hit With Ft. Smith Fans

The title of "Is Matrimony a Failure" was played up so thoroughly in comedy vein by Manager J. B. Robertson of the Palace theatre, Ft. Smith, Ark., that everybody in the city knew that it was a comedy instead of what the name suggests, a domestic problem play.

The lobby of the Palace proved a source of much amusement to local fans. Across the front hung some fifty rolling pins and directly in the center was a cutout taken from the twenty-four sheet, showing Lila Lee with a large question mark around her.

Appropriate signs were also used in the display. Another stunt was to send a private ambulance through a main street at top speed, to stop finally at the Palace.

Hundreds of people crowded around, craning their necks to see what the trouble was all about. Stretcher bearers hustled into the theatre and in a few minutes came out carrying on a stretcher the reposed form of an apparently unconscious man. He was placed in the ambulance. The crowd gathered closely to see what the trouble was. Then two signs were dropped that read, "He laughed himself sick seeing 'Is Matrimony a Failure.'"

Another angle of publicity was obtained through, or rather because of this stunt. Mr. Robertson got in a jam with the local police for violating the traffic laws and was fined $9.50 and costs for exceeding the speed limit.

This furnished excellent material for the newspapers, so the next day there appeared a humorous article telling what this matrimonial picture did for a certain man, and also a certain manager.

Novel Window Panel Tie-up for "Penrod"

THE STRAND THEATRE, Syracuse, N. Y., holds the record for the most novel window tie-up of recent times in its exploitation campaign on "Penrod." Reproducing the idea used in the lithographs the clothing store with which the theatre "played ball" had a background of wall paper that resembled a rough exterior of a barn, with the faces of the amateur performers in the Penrod circus peering out the door. The side of the barn was covered with illiterate scrawling advertising the show—the same kind of juvenile work that featured the kid advertising of the picture.

The oddity of it was a circus in itself to Syracuse shoppers who flocked outside the window to take in this billing. At the same time other window tie-ups featured "Penrod" at the Strand.

This is the way Ollie Brownlee, manager of the Palace theatre, Muskogee, Okla., decorated for his recent showing of "Beyond the Rocks"

Reward for Lost Police Dog Starts Parade for Showing of "Strongheart"

An offer of $50 reward for the discovery and return of a lost Belgian police dog started a parade for "Strongheart" when the picture showed at the Hamilton Theatre, Lancaster, Pa. The offer, of course, was a blind teaser, to be followed up with an announcement of the picture and its canine star. The offer brought out so many youngsters with dogs, however, that the management organized them and had a dog parade that drew crowds to the sidewalks and filled the house for "Strongheart" and "The Silent Call."

Loew's Metropolitan Stages Big Campaign for "Smilin' Through"

The manager and executive of Loew's Metropolitan Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., aided by a First National exploitation man, established what may be a new departure in exploitation when they actually conceived an excellent exploitation idea and then road-showed it for the other Loew houses which were to play "Smilin' Through," the feature attraction.

The prime generator in arousing interest was the marriage surrey of the Victorian era. In this instance the exploitation man secured a girl of unusual loveliness and her charm was an added inspiration for passersby to find the excuse for dallying a few minutes before the carriage. Those who did pause were promptly handed invitations from Mr. and Mrs. Clare to attend the wedding of their daughter Moonyeen to Mr. John Carteret.

The exploitation man combined the element of interest with timeliness. For each performance, before the feature picture was run, the surrey drove up to the front of the Metropolitan, and the couple alighted, posed in the lobby a few moments and then entered. Business boosting for Brooklyn also featured the campaign. Easily visible on the roof of a building was the sign: "We Are Telling You to Boost Brooklyn and Go Smilin' Through 1922." Two sailors, engaged from the Brooklyn Navy Yard, with semaphores signalled the message to thousands of interested pedestrians on the street below.

Brick Wall Lobby Is Rea's Latest Decorative Stunt

Cut outs of a well known pair of feet, without any mention of a star's name or a picture served as an effective teaser campaign as used by Manager Rea of the Forum theatre, Hilsboro, Ohio, for "Pay Day." When interest in this had served its purpose he distributed novelty pay envelopes and men on horseback and automobiles would descend to the curb to pick up these quaint envelopes. For the front of his theatre Rea aroused interest by using a jagged, half constructed brick wall with a cut-out of Chaplin. Alongside it he had the sign: "This is a sample of Chaplin's work in 'Pay Day.'"

Invites Visiting Druggists to See "Bought and Paid For"

Manager S. S. Wallace of the Capitol theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla., interrupted a big convention of druggists just to invite them to a special showing of "Bought and Paid For," and got away with it.

While the druggists were attending a reception at a local hotel, a telegram was delivered to the speaker of the evening. This was the only possible means of getting this message of welcome to all the delegates and still make it effective. The speaker opened the telegram and stopped what he was saying long enough to read it aloud to all. It brought applause from the hearers and made good copy for the local newspapers.

Noble Provides Charlie with Umbrella and Lantern

CHARLIE CHAPLIN from a six sheet, equipped with an umbrella and lantern stood before the Liberty theatre, Portland, Ore., to advertise "Pay Day." The acknowledgement for the extra accessories, in accordance with the best theatrical ethics, is made to Paul Noble, manager of the Liberty, who conceived the idea and furnished the cardboard star with the material. The umbrella replaced the one drawn in the six sheet while the lantern took the place of a lunch pail. Electric light wires were connected with it and it was illuminated in flashes, at night time to direct patrons to "Pay Day."

Olympic Gives Newlyweds Wedding Present

PEOPLE foolish enough to apply for marriage licenses at the Court House in Pittsburgh were startled by a sign announcing that all applicants for marriage during the week commencing May 22 were cordially invited to be the guests of the Olympic theatre to see "Is Matrimony a Failure?"

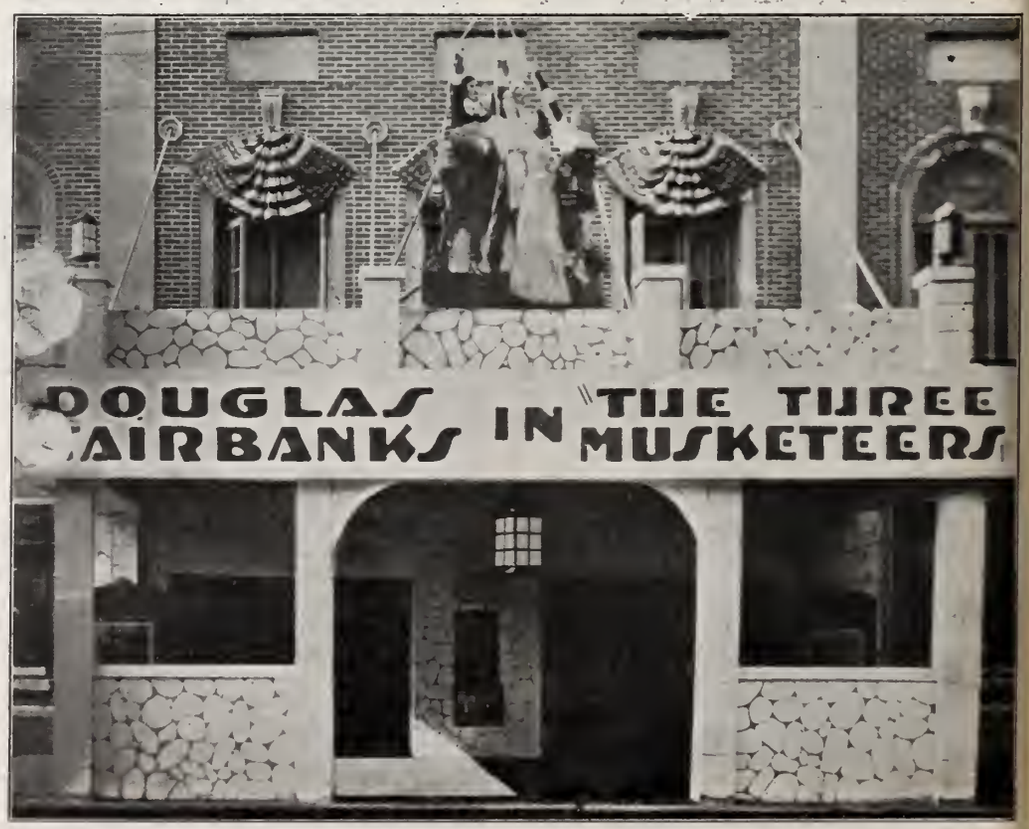
They were invited to come and have a good laugh and probably see some of the things to avoid. Bill Robson, Paramount Exploiteer who concocted the idea, told them to show their licenses to the door man and it would serve as an admission ticket.

Rain Insurance Makes Good News Story

THE proprietors of the Opera House, Centerville, Ohio, got on the front page of the Centerville Observer in a little rain insurance gag that was worth many times the amount of money invested in it.

When they booked the "Sheik" Leslie F. Whelan, Paramount Exploiter, sold them the idea to spend $16 as a premium on $300 worth of insurance, to be paid the theatre in the event is as little as one-tenth of an inch of rain fell during the run of the "Shiek."

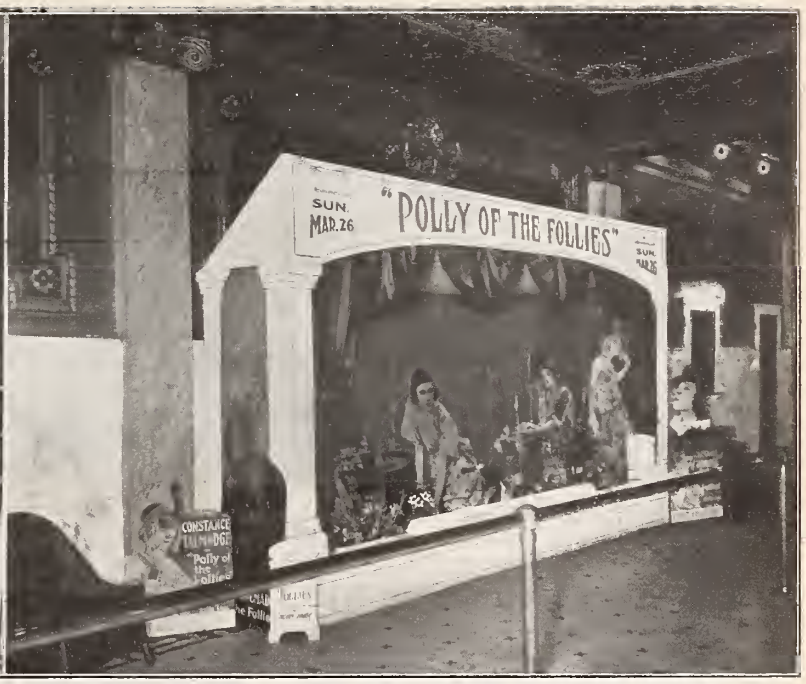
Whelan very wisely allowed the story to "break" in the insurance offices and when the reporter from the Centreville Observer made his rounds, he got the dope. The newspaper consequently looked upon it entirely as a news story and gave it a prominent position on page 1.



"Cardigan" Exploitation Campaign Makes Use of Telephones

"Don't do anything until you see Cardigan." This and no more came tinkling over the telephone in feminine tones to business men, professional men, housewives, and all other people having telephones for several days prior to the showing of "Cardigan," at the Grand theatre, Green Bay, Wis.

"Cardigan" was shown under the auspices of the American Legion. An advance showing attracted about sixty public officials, businessmen and club women and a dozen or more interviews with those viewing the picture were published in the local paper as advance publicity, in addition to the regular "readers" and display advertising.



The picture was opened by "First Call" and "Assembly" by a bugler from the American Legion post, and Legion members in uniform acted as ushers.

On each day of the showing a Paul Revere in costume mounted on his charger rode through the streets giving notice of the picture.

Harem Prologue with Jazz Trimmings for "One Arabian Night"

"The Harem of the Sheik" was the title given the prologue, enacted with jazz trimmings, at the presentation of "One Arabian Night" at Loew's State Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio. Sherwood's Jazz band and 25 singers were used as the special company for staging this.

With lavish oriental drapings and sets, the prologue was staged so as to include a sentimental and humorous appeal as well as a spectacular attraction. Initiated by an oriental overture, the prologue followed in four parts: "The Shrieks of the Sheik"; "Melodies of Mutapha Bay"; "Dancing Dervishers" and "Bagdad Beauties." The first number was a travesty, featuring Buddy Doyle, who appeared as a comic sheik with stories and songs. The second part of the prologue featured the jazz band and the last two the dancers and beauty chorus. In all there were 13 numbers in what proved to be the most lavish and best drawing prologue ever staged in Cleveland.

"Good Provider" Prologue Presented by Howard Theatre

IN staging a prologue for "The Good Provider," Enrico Leide, the Howard's (Atlanta) musical genius hit upon the idea of working in cooperation with the exploitation department who were featuring the fact that the stars of "The Good Provider" were the same ones as in "Humoresque" and that the same author wrote both stories. The Prologue was called "A Stage Paraphrase of Humoresque' and attracted considerable attention.

The curtain rose on the bare room of a young artist which was entirely darkened except by a small spotlight of colored lights playing on Charles Gesser, the Howard's Violin Soloist, dressed as an artist. As he played "Humoresque" curtain draperies to his sides slowly rose disclosed a beautiful spring scene in the background and a girl came dancing out, as if the artist's imagination was running riot, stimulated by his own playing. As the girl continued dancing, the stage lighted little by little until at the finish of the act the whole of the footlights were on. It was thoroughly artistic and pleasing to the large audiences which it helped to attract to the Howard.

Attractive Lobby For "Four Horsemen" Devised by Manager Beall

For a lobby display on "The Four Horsemen," Manager Ray Beall of the Imperial theatre, made draperies and hung them down each side of the entrance, tying them to the side at the bottom. The draperies were made of alternate stripes of red and yellow cambric which had a very decided Spanish effect.

In the center of the lobby a large oil painting of Valentino was mounted on an easel. Grouped about the sides and in front of each three-sheet frame other oil paintings depicting scenes from the picture were placed.

Suspended from the center of the arch a cut-out of Valentino and Warwick in a dancing posture, helped to make the lobby attractive. This cut-out was made in warm colors which harmonized with the draperies.

"Leather Pushers" Prize Fight Ring Creamer's Latest

For round two of "The Leather Pushers" series John W. Creamer, exploitation manager for the W. P. Cuff Enterprises, Chillicothe, Mo., operating the Strand and Empire theatres, built a miniature boxing ring, complete in every detail. An electric light was suspended over the ring. Cut-out figures from 11 x 14 lobby stills were used as the "leather pushers" of the ring.

Mr. Creamer's display was set up in a local window and kept a crowd gazing in admiration.

Rustic Atmosphere Suggested by Palace's Lobby Front

The lobby of the Palace theatre, Ft. Smith, Ark., during the showing of "The Homespun Vamp" was arranged to carry out the atmosphere suggested by the title of the picture.

There were several pieces of rustic and country-like furniture. A wash tub with wash board stood in one side of the lobby and in the other was an old-fashioned spinning loom. In the center of the lobby was a chicken coop with a lot of little chickens running loose. A clothes line strung along the entire front carried garments freshly washed.

Memorial Day Tie-up Goes Well at Pinney Theatre

A flower pot given to every mother who had a son in France during the War got more theatrical publicity than Boise, Idaho, has seen in many months.

Manager Mendenhall and Rick Ricketson, Paramount Exploiteer got hold of two boxes of dirt said to have been brought over from France. A local flower store gave the women their choice of a large variety of French flower seeds. A pot of dirt and a package of seeds were given each mother. The exhibitors spattered the entire front page with the stunt.

Rodolph Valentino, alias Johnny Goring, sent a telegram to the exhibitor congratulating Boise on securing "Beyond the Rocks" for the premier presentation in Idaho, Montana and Nevada.

Home town pride, like home brew, is strong in small towns, and this brought another front page story. The Commercial Club Secretary answered Valentino's wire and it meant more publicity.

The total campaign cost the exhibitor less than $25.00.

Mendenhall and Ricketson tied up every drug store, soft drink parlor and confectionery in the town for a "Beyond the Rocks" special. The drink consisted of an ounce of cherry, and an ounce and one-half of grape juice mixed in ten ounce glasses.

As a teaser card campaign, cards printed with "grasshopper" lettering, excited favorable comment. In order to read these cards you had to hold them horizontally with your eyes and look down the lines. Letters then spelled the title of the picture and the names of the two stars.

Here's an Improvement in Throwaways

THE throwaway lived up to the significance of its name in the exploitation stunt of the Lyric Theatre, Cincinnati, during a recent engagement of "Shame."

Five thousand white feathers, six inches in length and attached at the point of the quill to a burdock, were imprinted with the message: "William Fox presents 'SHAME' — LYRIC THEATRE."

The feathers when thrown at woolen and fibrous garments would cling tightly. A hundred boys, each paid with free tickets, were employed to throw away the throwaways. Each was stationed at a busy corner of the city and hurled the little feathery spears at all passers-by. Not only was the stunt original, but the people who were "attacked" on the streets were well pleased with the little souvenirs which they took from their coat sleeves and trouser fronts.

Good Small Town Idea If You Have Raised Prices

The New Grand Theatre, Toronto, wanted to get over the idea that "Forever" was the classiest picture to be shown,, and that when it played on Broadway, New Yorkers paid as much as $1.50 to see it.

No amount of advertising text would have been as effective as the reproduction of the ad that the Criterion Theatre had in the New York Times. This was reproduced with this explanation: "This is an advertisement from the New York Times. Your attention is respectfully called to the prices of admission charged when Elsie Ferguson and Wallace Reid appeared in "Forever" on Broadway for a long run."

First of "Is Matrimony a Failure?" Stage Weddings Reported

The crop of stage weddings naturally anticipated as exploitation for "Is Matrimony a Failure" has materialized and one of the first to be reported is the event pulled off by C. D. Cooley, manager of the Victory theatre, Tampa, Fla.

Mr. Cooley induced a local engaged couple by the promise of a "shower" to celebrate their wedding on the stage of the Victory.

Next he lined up seventeen merchants who were willing to contribute presents to the couple in return for the advertising he gave them. He used half page spreads in the local papers. In the center was a description of the picture, and the story of the wedding, while on each side was the ad of the merchants who contributed presents.

Each merchant was given an opportunity to tell why matrimony was not a failure, by using articles selected from their stores. Then each merchant made up a window display of the articles they were to give to the bride and groom. This was an excellent ad for the picture as the most prominent stores in the city were represented.

The names of the couple to be married were kept a secret, and the interest was so great that when Friday night arrived every one of the sixteen hundred seats in the Victory was filled, at least two hundred were standing, and hundreds were turned away.

The wedding was worked out beautifully, with the stage decorated with masses of flowers. After the ceremony the couple was presented with life insurance policies by Mr. Cooley and the truck load of presents sent to their home.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE.

E. D. Saiter now is covering central Illinois territory for Vitagraph. Mr. Saiter is well known on film row, having been connected with Fox Film Corporation and other sales organizations.

Manager Hill, of the Star and Arrow Theatres, has closed the former for extensive decorations and repairs, which will take some weeks to accomplish.

Vacation time being at hand O. E. Florine and Percy Hamill, of Pathe, are about to take their departures. Mr. Hamill will head for New York Saturday, where he will look over the Broadway attractions and visit some of his friends in the industry. Mr. Florine has not disclosed where his vacation will be passed but says he is going to get some real rest.

The New McVicker's Theatre will open on September 3rd, according to an announcement from the office of Jones, Lenick & Schaefer, and will present exclusively big, first run pictures.

The new one thousand seat Chatham Theatre, at 75th and Cottage Grove Avenue, has been opened by Jack and Van Cooney. It is an ornament to this neighborhood and being in a thickly populated district, good business is predicted for the house.

R. E. McIntyre, of Paramount, was in Chicago this week in connection with the erection of the new Famous Players-Lasky exchange at Thirteenth and Wabash. T. A. Kilfoil was another Paramount home office official in the city this week. He was here in connection with the opening of exchanges at Peoria, Columbus and Sioux Falls.

Harry Phillips now is connected with the Universal Chicago exchange and will sell film on the southside for this organization. Harry is up on his toes and already is inquiring about when there will be some prize selling contests which he can enter.

Jack Freeman, owner of the Claremont Theatre, 3320 N. Clark Street, has left on an extensive fishing and camping trip in the Wisconsin lake country. He expects to remain away all summer and has left his theatre in charge of a manager.

W. H. Tracy, popular Vitagraph salesman, has taken up a new line on the side and has qualified as a first class window decorator, his first efforts resulting in the artistic "Wild Irish Rose" display now on view in the big front window of Vitagraph's exchange.

Sam Kogan has closed his new Linden Theatre at 3018 Belmont, and before it is reopened, will have it thoroughly renovated and redecorated.

"The Able Minded Lady," "The Forest King," and "The Girl From Rocky Point," three Pacific Film Company's five reel productions, have been purchased by Maurice Hellman, of Reelcraft exchange, for this territory. Mr. Hellman is acquiring a large number of high class long and short features for late Summer and Fall release.

Walter Altland has joined the American Releasing Corporation's sales staff and Manager Sid Goldman has assigned the Wisconsin territory to his latest recruit.

Albert W. Hale, well known director and scenario writer, is stopping in Chicago for a few days, and is making his headquarters at the Congress Hotel.

J. J. Sampson, sales manager of Universal's short product department, gave a screening and entertainment at the Universal projection room last Friday, at which a large number of exhibitors were present. Musical settings and refreshments added to the pleasure of those who attended. The pictures shown were: "Live Wires," a two reel Century subject, featuring Queenie, the human horse; "Daring Dangers," a two reel western starring Tom Santschi; "Perils of the Yukon," the first episode of a serial; and "Mirror," pictures of President McKinley made twenty-five years ago, which have just been shown at Balaban & Katz houses.

Jack Warner, of Warner Brothers, who arrived last week in the east after two years of production work on the coast.

Al Dezel, of the Master Advertisers, probably the youngest man in Chicago to be a partner in an advertising firm, has taken over the handling of advertising and publicity for the Stratford Theatre in addition to several other houses which he already is handling. Among the successful campaigns recently handled in this territory by Dezel were the Dempsey-Carpentier Fight pictures; the Thomas Ince production, "Lying Lips"; "The Sailor Made Man," featuring Harold Lloyd; and "East Lynne."

Edward Laemmle, who shot the famous Borneo cannibal pictures for Universal, passed through the city last week on his way to New York, from where he was to sail for Europe on the 17th, where he was to be officially engaged on Universal's "Ivanhoe" production, in which Harry Meyers will be featured. It is understood that Mr. Laemmle did not sail, as scheduled, but probably will go over sea within a few days.

Manager Clyde Eckhardt, of Fox, is keeping his staff busy sending out announcements that Fox Week will be held September 10th to 16th, this year, and already is anticipating a banner week for his organization, which has made some wonderful records in the Windy City during the past year.

Jack Barry is now covering city territory for Clyde Elliott, having resigned from Silton Film Distributors' sales staff to accept the new position.

Hiram Abrams and Al Lichtman were among New York film notables visiting the Windy City this week.

Word has reached Chicago, his old home, of the death of William H. Swanson, at his residence in Salt Lake City, Utah, June 20th. His body will be brought to Chicago for burial. "Bill" Swanson, as he was familiarly known throughout the industry, was one of the first Chicago business men to enter the motion picture field and was identified with Colonel Selig in the first fire engine pictures filmed. He was connected with the Film Service Company and one of the organizers of the Rex Film Company, and later Universal. He ultimately sold out his interest in Universal to Powers and became an exhibitor, having theatres in St. Louis and Denver, and finally concentrating his interests in Salt Lake City, where he owned several houses. He at one time owned the Chicago Avenue and Swanson Theatres in Chicago and had friends in every branch of the industry.

Harris P. Wolfberg, formerly district manager of Paramount, with headquarters in Chicago, who resigned to become vice-president and manager of the Lake and Export Coal Company, is again connected with the picture business in the capacity of general manager for Hyman Enterprises, which owns and operates fourteen theatres in West Virginia territory. Mr. Wolfberg now makes his headquarters at Charleston, West Virginia.

For the second time within three months the Shakespeare Theatre was entered by burglars last week. As in the previous case they broke open the telephone box, secured the nickels in it, but got no other loot. The latest robbery apparently was by amateurs as they attempted to break open the safe with a sledge hammer, but only succeeded in ruining the combination mechanism. In entering the office through a skylight, the burglars broke a water pipe which flooded the room, this being the principal item of loss to Brunhild & Young, the owners. Managing Director Lamm states that the police have an excellent clew to the perpetrators, and arrests are expected shortly.

Producers Security Has New Pictures

Last week the Producers Security Corporation announced the release of Dorothy Gish's new feature "The Country Flapper," and now comes the information that this organization has secured the distribution rights of "In the Night," the screen adaptation of "The Intruder," the stage success which ran on Broadway for months. This feature will also be placed in the States Right field, and is one of many big productions the Producers Security promises to put on the Independent market.

The Producers Security Corporation has also acquired the world's rights for Maclyn Arbuckle's big feature, "Mr. Potter of Texas."

Sunset President Closing Several Deals

Anthony J. Xydias, president of Sunset Productions, is in New York for a short business stay, during which he intends to close the sale on foreign rights to the series of eight Jack Hoxie productions. He also expects to close on the New York rights. Already Mr. Xydias has sold eighty per cent of the United States territory.

Three of the series have been completed, and a fourth is now in course of production.

"The Storm" Given Big Broadway Display

NO Universal picture ever had a better advance advertising play-up on Broadway than "The Storm," the screen adaptation of Langdon McCormick's play, which now is packing the Capitol Theatre during its New York premier showing.

Three large electric signs on Broadway are devoted to the heralding of "The Storm," in addition to the electric sign in front of the Capitol Theatre itself. The largest of the electric signs for "The Storm" is on the corner of 46th Street and Broadway overlooking Times Square at its most eye-catching corner. Diagonally opposite, on 45th Street and Broadway, is another electric sign of almost equal proportions. These two signs absolutely dominate Times Square and for several weeks they have heralded the coming of "The Storm." The third Broadway electric sign is the display and moving sign across the front of the Mecca Building, Universal's home office.

Taking Final Shots on Vignola Subject

Phil Carl, assistant to Robert G. Vignola, director of "When Knighthood Was In Flower" in which Marion Davies is starred, is in Catskill, N. Y., taking the final shots of Cosmopolitan's eleven reel picture. He has with him fourteen cameramen as follows: Joe Morgan, Harold Winstrom, Adam de Buris, Arthur Hirshburg, Fred Koberg, William Wagner, Jim Dismond, Al Gandolph, Billy Tuers, Frank Cooper, Charles Gest, Joe Armstrong, James Pergola, and Harry Marsh.

"The Face in the Fog" Continuity Ready

Jack Boyle and John Lynch have finished work on the continuity of "The Face in the Fog," Boyle's story which Cosmopolitan Productions will make into a feature film immediately. Working with two authors is Alan Crosland, who will direct the picture.

Alma Rubens has been engaged to play the leading female role and Mike Connolly, casting director of Cosmopolitan Productions, will proceed to cast the picture immediately.

Acclaim "Nanook of North"

S. L. Rothafel Joins New York Press in Lauding Distinctive Production

"I CONSIDER 'Nanook of the North' the greatest sensation of this season," declared S. L. Rothafel, following the premiere of the big Pathe feature at the Capitol Theatre. "It ranks as one of the four most distinctive pictures I have ever run at the Capitol Theatre. There is more drama in it than the so-called dramatic features and it has a suspense which has spell-binding power. It is truly the marvel photoplay of the North from every standpoint of photography, beauty, laughter and extraordinary human interest. Pathe is to be commended for their remarkable vision in procuring this subject. I am proud to have run 'Nanook of the North' at my theatre."

That the photoplay is indeed a sensation can be gleaned also from the exceptional reviews which followed its opening at the Capitol. The New York Times commented as follows on the "reality" of the views:

"The struggles they have are real struggles. When Nanook, the master hunter, matches himself against a walrus, there is no pretense about the contest. Nanook's life depends upon his killing the walrus, and it is by no means certain that he will kill him. So the spectator watches Nanook, as a man engaged in a real life-and-death struggle. And how much more thrilling the sight is than that of a 'battle' between two well-paid actors firing blank cartridges at each other. Nanook is emphatically a leader, a man who does things, a man who wins, but who, at any moment, may lose. He is a genuine hero then, one who is watched with alert interest and suspense and far-reaching imagination. What 'dramatic' photoplay can show such a one?"

The New York Evening Mail says the following: "Nanook of the North" is one of the most appealing, absorbingly interesting films it has been our pleasure to see in years. The film they have made is a masterpiece, poignant with real drama, the drama of human life, a distinct contribution to the motion picture world. The daily fight for food, the terrors of arctic storms, battles with seals and walrus, the life of the 'huskies,' the marvelous speed and skill with which the strange igloo is built, the life within these odd homes where the temperature must ever be below freezing, all these and more are shown.

"Don't miss this film!"

"Talk about atmosphere in photodrama," writes Joseph Mulvaney in the New York American. "There is more atmosphere to the cubic centimeter around 'Nanook of the North' than ever was compressed into the same space in the previous history of the screen,... for that film is far and away the best thing of the kind that has been done since Shackleton's South Pole pictures, and there are scenes in which even that historical series is surpassed."

"One Clear Call" Opens at New York Strand

"ONE CLEAR CALL," the John M. Stahl production, which is being released by First National, opened at the Strand Theatre, New York, for a week's run on June 18 and played to crowded houses. This picture, based on the book of the same name by Frances Nimmo Greene, tells a remarkable story and has an unusual cast, in which are Milton Sills, Claire Windsor, Henry B. Walthall, Irene Rich and Joseph Dowling.

Commenting on the showing at the Strand, the motion picture critic of the New York American writes:

"Heart interest is what John M. Stahl evidently sought when he produced 'One Clear Call,' and he surely got it. The picture is one of the most interesting of the kind presented in a long while."

Filming "The Christian" Draws London Crowd

For the first time in the history of London a permit has been granted to a motion picture company to shoot scenes in the famous Trafalgar Square and Londoners were astounded at the enterprise of American producers in obtaining official sanction for that purpose.

The picture being taken was Sir Hall Caine's famous story, "The Christian," and the permit was obtained by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

Another important addition to the cast of "The Christian" is Cyril Chadwick. He has been engaged to act the role of Lord Robert Ure and has already left New York for the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, Calif., where all the scenes in which he participates will be photographed.

Century Comedy Booked for B'way Showing

"Short Weight," a Century Comedy which tells the trials and tribulations of a grocery clerk who doesn't want to work, will be seen the Rialto Theatre, New York, the week of June 25th. This features Johnny Fox, the new Century boy star, as the unwilling grocer's boy, and he is supported by Brownie, the wonder dog.

Hailed as amazing and a genuine surprise, it absolutely took New York by storm at the Capitol the week of June 11th.

Nanook of the North

A whirlwind of applause at every performance at The Capitol: positive enthusiasm from the New York papers!

"Beside this film the usual photoplay ....becomes as thin and blank as the celluloid on which it is printed....It is real....Its people not acting but living ....Nanook is a genuine hero, one who is watched with alert interest and suspense and far-reaching imagination.... There is body as well as dramatic vitality to Nanook's story....It is far more interesting, far more compelling purely as entertainment than any except the rare exceptions among photoplays. No matter how intelligent a spectator may be....he can enjoy 'Nanook of the North.' "—N. Y. TIMES, June 12, 1922.

"There is a powerful thematic feeling running through the picture, ending with inspired appropriateness with scenes of dogs howling in the bleak wilderness as the storm comes on, then dropping off to sleep too tired to do anything but freeze ....Fascinating."—N. Y. HERALD, June 12, 1922.

"Far more interesting than most of the features we have seen lately."—N. Y. TRIBUNE, June 12, 1922.

" 'Nanook of the North' at the Capitol is a surprise picture..... The surprise comes in the amazing beauty and dramatic texture of this simple story....It's wonderful!"—N. Y. WORLD, June 12, 1922.

"Talk about atmosphere in photodrama! There is more atmosphere to the cubic centimeter around 'Nanook of the North' than was ever compressed into the same space in the previous history of the screen! Far and away the best thing of the kind that has been done....Nanook is a real superman....The picture generates more thrills than a serial, provokes more genuine mirth than a slapstick comedy....From introduction to finale, 'Nanook of the North' is there!"—N. Y. AMERICAN, June 12, 1922.

Rotary Co-operation on "The Ruling Passion"

The successful manner in which "Eddie"' (E. O.) Weinberg, of Buffalo, N. Y., exploited "The Ruling Passion" when this United Artists release recently was shown at the Buffalo Strand, has excited a good deal of comment in up-State film circles. Buffalo exhibitors have long been anxious to obtain Rotary co-operation and Mr. Weinberg thought the George Arliss picture gave him the long sought opportunity. He tied up the synopsis of "The Ruling Passion" into a boost for the local Rotary organization, and did it in such a way that it reached the heart of every Buffalo Rotarian. It was done by way of a letter that didn't at all read like exploitation, and the response was immediate.

Loew N. Y. Chain Plays "When Devil Drives"

"When the Devil Drives," with Leah Baird, which was released by Associated Exhibitors June 4th, has begun the rounds of the Loew time in Greater New York, N. M. Schenck, booking manager of the Marcus Loew enterprises, having scheduled the attraction. It was the special Sunday feature at Loew's New York, June 18th, attracting large gatherings both to the main theatre and the Roof. In many of the Loew houses the picture is being shown two days.

Big First National Special

Elaborate Production and Unusual Talent for "Omar the Tentmaker"

REPORTS from the United Studios at Los Angeles are that Richard Walton Tully's production of Guy Bates Post in "Omar the Tentmaker" will be one of the most pretentious ever offered on the screen. "Omar the Tentmaker" will be Mr. Tully's second production for First National release, the first being Guy Bates Post in "The Masquerader."

In arranging for the making of "Omar the Tentmaker" Mr. Tully has spared neither time nor expense. Every detail has been carefully worked out for making this colorful Persian drama a masterpiece of entertainment and historic precision. Determined to surround Mr. Post with the best cast obtainable, Producer Tully, assisted by Director James Young and Assistant Director James Ewens, have spent many weeks in selecting what they consider an unusually fine cast.

Nigel de Brulier, whose phenomenal success on the screen as a character actor came with his portrayal of the "Stranger" in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," will play Nizam, the friend of Omar. Rose Dione, another established character player, of French extraction, will be the Shah's mother. Madame Dion had been selected for the Comedie Francaise, the highest honor possible for any French character, when the war closed this internationall famous institution. Douglas Gerrard, well known director and actor, will create for the screen the role of Hassan, the villain of "Omar the Tentmaker." Evelyn Selbie plays another important character role, that of Zarah, the confidante and protectress of Shireen. Boris Karloff will be the Iman Mowaffak in the forthcoming picturization of "Omar the Tentmaker." This is the role of the wise and aged teacher of the hero who first leads him on the paths of science and philosophy. He cut short his military career to enter theatrical life and he achieved considerable prominence on the English continental stage before coming here to enter pictures. His best remembered film roles were in "The Infidel" and "The Woman Conquers," starring Katherine MacDonald, "The Man from Downing Street," starring Earle Williams, and "Without Benefit of Clergy" directed by James Young and in which also appeared Evelyn Selbie and Virginia Brown Faire, who are both in the Omar cast.

Patsy Ruth Miller, the charming young film player of many Goldwyn and Fox pictures, will be Little Shireen. Will Jim Hatton plays Little Mahruss, the childhood playmate of Little Shireen.

"Grandma's Boy" Is in Sixth Week of Run

Los Angeles exhibitors are taking their hats off to Harold Lloyd's newest Associated Exhibitors feature, "Grandma's Boy," which is now completing its sixth week at the Symphony Theatre.

After three weeks of "stand-them-out" business, exhibitors began to question the ability of "Grandma's Boy" to maintain the attendance pace it was setting, for there is a limit even to the population of Los Angeles and its neighborhood. But the fourth and fifth weeks were as big as any of those preceding, and late reports say that the rush is continuing in the sixth week.

Pathe Issues Warning on Screen Snapshots

Producers of Screen Snapshots and the Pathe organization, which holds distribution rights to the new series of this "fan news magazine" of the screen, this week issued a general warning to the effect that there is only one series of Screen Snapshots and that this is issued through Pathe alone. This warning has been sent broadcast to exhibitors throughout the country. The Pathe home office declares other smaller releasing organizations in various parts of the country are advertising a Snapshots reel and that exhibitors are booking it under the impression it is Screen Snapshots.

A. E. Announces "Hot Weather" Release

"Up in the Air About Mary," the five reel comedy which Associated Exhibitors is releasing June 25th, carries a particularly strong hot weather appeal, according to statements from that organization, for the picture contains pretty bathing girls, water stunts, the seaside and the country, and a plot filled with comedy and pep.

The story is about a prospective bride who plays hookey from the marriage altar and flees to the country, preferring clover and sunflowers to orange blossoms, and a live-red-blooded farmer lad to the brainless sap whom Mama selected for her to marry. Reuben, by the way, turns out to be a millionaire, who is rusticating merely for the fun of the thing.

In the cast are included Louise Lorraine, Joe Moore, and Robert Anderson.

Madge Kennedy Making Jersey Exteriors

Madge Kennedy and her supporting company are filming exterior scenes this week in the fastnesses of New Jersey. The previous exterior scenes of the new Madge Kennedy production were taken at Oyster Bay, and since that time the Kenma Corporation, which is starring Miss Kennedy has been using two New York studios for interior shots—the Tilford studio on West 44th street and the Biograph studio on East 175th street.

Henry Kolker is directing the first Madge Kennedy production, which is an adaptation of the John Golden stage success, "Dear Me." In writing the scenario, Rufus Steele has made many changes in the story, deepening the dramatic tones of it and laying less emphasis on the comedy end.

The Madge Kennedy productions now being filmed will be ready for release in the early fall. By that time the second production, "Dorothy Vernon of Haledon Hall," will also be ready.

Johnnie Walker Featured

"In Name of the Law" for F. B. O. Release Presents Popular Player

JOHNNIE Walker, one of the featured players in the big police picture, "In The Name of the Law," will be seen in a drama of the Northwest, which the Film Booking Offices, the newly named Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, has acquired for release sometime in July. The picture has been titled "My Dad" and features Walker and Ruth Clifford. "My Dad" is a picture which will prove a most appropriate summer offering, in the belief of the Film Booking Offices. It has a Northwest background of the most vivid type and presents some excellent snow scenes.

"My Dad" affords the popular young player who rose to fame in "Over The Hill" a new type of role. No picture in which Walker has hitherto appeared, states R-C, has given him a part calling for such virile action. It may be briefly described as a heart interest story, rich in action and moving against a colorful background.

The love interest is supplied by Walker and Ruth Clifford, one of the most popular leading ladies of the screen who makes a splendid impression as the girl of the trading post who returns from the Southland to find romance and adventure in the snow country.

"My Dad" was directed by Clifford Smith who also adapted the story to the screen. It will be issued by the Film Booking Offices with a complete exploitation campaign.

Walker has just reached the R-C Studios in California where he will start production in the near future on a series of pictures for release through the Film Booking Offices. In this series Walker will assist in the selection of the stories.

"Extras" Galore for Doug

Total of 25,000 Persons Employed in Course of Filming New Subject

WHEN there came a settling down to a statistical contemplation of facts and figures in connection with the record-breaking photoplay production, "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," which Douglas Fairbanks is now producing, a series of extraordinary surprises was inevitable.

For instance, in the course of the many weeks required for filming this tremendously big romantic screen drama of the Twelfth Century, it was found that a total of about 25,000 different persons will have been given at least one full day's employment each in various supernumerary capacities, and that many of these will have worked for several weeks. On the banner day for "extras," when the great jousting contests were enacted and filmed, 1,800 men and women were used, declares United Artists, and a few days found less than a hundred doing their "bits" before Allan Dwan's battery of cameras.

A few glances through the payroll for this gigantic cinema production, which Mr. Fairbanks now plans to have ready for United Artists release this fall, reveal also further surprises, for among those who were glad to receive pay checks of the "extra" were a D. W. Griffith, a Billhart, a Jack Holt, a Mildred Davis and a Warren Harding. True, none of these was the well-known one, but each possessed a legal right to his or her name. By actual count there is a total of twenty-nine men of the name of Knight who appear as knights in this Fairbanks picture in which knighthood and romance are the dominating features.

Tie-up on Educational Film

"How to Grow Thin" is Subject of Extensive Ad Campaign in Newark

EDUCATIONAL'S one reel special "How to Grow Thin" has been booked for a week at Loew's State Theatre, Newark, and a fine tie-up has been made by Loew's advertising department with the Newark Star-Eagle.

Practically the same program will be carried out in Newark that was worked out so successfully by Loew in Boston and Buffalo, and which made this single reel special one of the best short subject box office attractions ever run at the Loew Theatres in those cities.

Beginning June 20, the Star-Eagle is carrying a big feature article each day on the subject of reducing weight and its relation to good health generally. These articles, which will run for eleven days, will all be printed under the heading "How to Grow Thin."

On the eleventh day the Star-Eagle will carry a double truck of advertising relating to the subject of weight reduction and health. Then the Star-Eagle will announce the acquisition from Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., of the picture, "How to Grow Thin," which shows in an amusing as well as instructive way, how to lose eight pounds a month by a simple home method. The announcement will then be made that the picture is to be shown at Loew's State Theatre beginning July 3.

The Fox Circuit in New York has also booked "How to Grow Thin" for a run of approximately forty-five days.

Walsh Starts His First Goldwyn Production

R. A. Walsh has begun photographing his first Goldwyn production, "Captain Blackbird," which happens to be the first story written by Carey Wilson, now a member of Goldwyn's editorial department, accepted by Goldwyn. Two other stories by him were purchased soon afterwards and will go into early production — "Women Love Diamonds" and "This Way Out." Walsh started filming "Captain Blackbird" on Monday last.

The cast so far engaged includes Antonio Moreno as Captain Blackbird, George Siegmann and William V. Mong in character parts. Harry Myers, who had been engaged for an important role, has been released at the request of another producing concern that he may go to Europe to head the cast in a picturization of one of Walter Scott's novels.

Peter B. Kyne, the novelist and short story writer, is now at the Goldwyn studios, writing the subtitles for the all-star production of his story, "Brothers Under the Skin," which Director E. Mason Hopper recently completed. In the cast are Helene Chadwick, Claire Windsor, Mae Busch, Pat O'Malley and Norman Kerry.

Big Effects Staged for "Burning Sands"

George Melford's recently completed Paramount production "Burning Sands," which features Wanda Hawley and Milton Sills, is said to furnish a demonstration not only of efficiency but of the great scale on which things are done these days in motion pictures.

One of these was the building of a complete tent city large enough to accommodate 400 people, and its conduct for nearly three weeks without mishap or delay, except that occasioned by cloudy days and a sand-storm. The location of this camp was on the sand dunes near Oxnard, Ventura county, sixty miles from Los Angeles.

The other project was the artificial lighting for night scenes of an area two miles square, said by Lee Green, manager of the Electrical Department of the Famous Players-Lasky studio, to be an unprecedented feat. The set, built at the Lasky Ranch, represented a great Arab encampment on the Libyan desert. Current for the light was furnished by six power wagons, aggregating 4650 amperes, the voltage varying between 110 and 125.

First F. B. O. Release Is Jane Novak Film

To "Colleen of the Pines," a Chester Bennett production, starring Jane Novak, will go the honor of being the first feature picture to be released through the re-named Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, which after July 1st will be known as the Film Booking Offices of America. "Colleen of the Pines," the first of a series of six Chester Bennett Productions, will be issued on July 9th.

The picture tells a novel story of the Canadian Northwest. The leading man is Edward Hearn. Chester Bennett directed.

Century Comedies Win Special Recognition

The National Committee for Better Films commended four Century Comedies in May and five during April.

The five comedies selected during April were as follows: "Hello Mars," with Harry Sweet and Johnny Fox; "Henpecked," with Lee Moran and Queenie, the equine star; "Horse Tears," with Queenie, supported by a cast of humans; "The Little Rascal," with Baby Peggy, and "Some Class," with Brownie and a cast of children.

The four comedies selected in May were "Hee Haw," featuring Harry Sweet and Maudie, the Century donkey; "Live Wires," with Brownie and a cast of children; "Short Weight," with Johnny Fox and Brownie, and "Tips," with Baby Peggy.

"Queen of Moulin Rouge" an Early Release

"THE QUEEN OF THE MOULIN ROUGE," the third production from Pyramid Pictures Inc., for distribution through American Releasing Corporation has been cut to length and completely titled and will be ready for release shortly, according to an announcement issued by A. N. Smallwood, general production manager of Pyramid.

Paul M. Potter's famous old play on which the picture is based contained an unusually interesting theme for a picture story, the possibilities of which were well realized by Garfield Thompson and Peter Milne who prepared the scenario.

N. Y. Fox Circuit Books Universal Release

Charles Rosenzweig, manager of the Big U Film Exchange, Universal's New York distribution center, announces the booking, over the Fox Circuit of New York photoplay houses, of Universal's production, "The Delicious Little Devil," starring Mae Murray with Rodolph Valentino.

This picture is now packing the Central Theatre, Broadway and Forty-seventh street, where it is in its second week, with the prospect of another week's run.

Critic Would Go Third Time to View Film

Henry M. Neely, dramatic critic for the Philadelphia Public Ledger, commented as follows on "The Silent Call," a First National picture:

"I've seen 'The Silent Call' twice. I could see it again and enjoy it. I don't know any film I have ever seen which made me more enthusiastic than that one did. And the best part of it is that it isn't the kind of film that is limited to a certain class or a certain age. It's universal in its appeal to our love of dogs and our love of the rare glimpses of nature-beauty which it shows, and it takes us quite outside ourselves. It's like a keen breath of fresh mountain air."

Seyffertitz Playing in "The Jellyfish"

Gustav Seyffertitz, well known screen player and director, is appearing in "The Jellyfish" with Wyndham Standing at Metro's New York City studios. Dorothy Mackaill, who played opposite Standing in "The Isle of Doubt" also appears opposite him in this production, which is being directed by Hamilton Smith for the Syracuse Motion Pictures Company.

Seyffertitz directed several pictures for Vitagraph, played leading roles in Vitagraph specials, "The Vengeance of Durand," "The Sporting Duchess" and others, and his most recent screen appearance was in the John Barrymore film, "Sherlock Holmes," in which he played "Professor Moriarty."

Ann Forrest Cast for "If Winter Comes"

FOX Film Corporation announces the selection of Ann Forrest, the noted screen star, for the role of Nona, Lady Lybar, the heroine in "If Winter Comes," the great Hutchinson novel, the film rights in which William Fox purchased for use as a special production for release during the season of 1922-23.

Miss Forrest sailed on the S. S. Berengaria last Tuesday for England, where she will join Mr. Fox; Harry Millarde of "Over the Hill" fame, who will direct the production; Percy Marmont, the well-known stage and screen actor, who has been chosen for the part of Mark Sabre; and Julius Steger, director-general of production at the Fox New York studios.

Assembling Cast for Goldwyn's "Gimme"

Goldwyn's production department is now busy casting the new Rupert Hughes' picture, "Gimme," which was written jointly by Mr. Hughes and his wife, Adelaide Manola Hughes. Thus far the members of the cast selected include Helene Chadwick (in the leading role), May Wallace, Georgia Woodthorpe, and Kate Lester. The men's roles have not yet been filled.

"Monte Cristo" Adheres to Original Story

THE Fox Film Home-office assign the popularity of their new special production, "Monte Cristo," largely to the remarkable fidelity of the picture version to the original story as written by Axelander Dumas. The picture enjoyed a nine week pre-release run in Boston at the Tremont Temple, and it is now entering its fourth week of an indefinite run at the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles.

Many newspaper reviewers have emphasized the strict adherence of the motion-picture to the Dumas novel. Director Emmett J. Flynn spent nearly a half-million dollars in filming the story, it is declared. There was a great amount of painstaking research work involved which extended over several months. An instance of the care with which the work was filmed is the fact that every book dealing with the Napoleonic periods was read by Director Flynn, Bernard McConville, who wrote the adaptation, or Art Director Richard E. Sibley, to preserve the picture from anachronisms. In addition, the collection of French etchings and prints owned by the "Circle Francaise" of New York and New Orleans were carefully inspected for information as to costuming, atmosphere, and setting.

John Gilbert plays the dignified and vengeful Count.

Complete Radio Station for "The Radio King"

The largest radio broadcasting station on the Pacific Coast is now being built at Universal City to be used in Universal's coming scientific chapter play, "The Radio King."

Delegates from the National Electrical Association Convention who recently visited Universal City declared that the sending station being built for "The Radio King" is the most complete that they have yet seen.

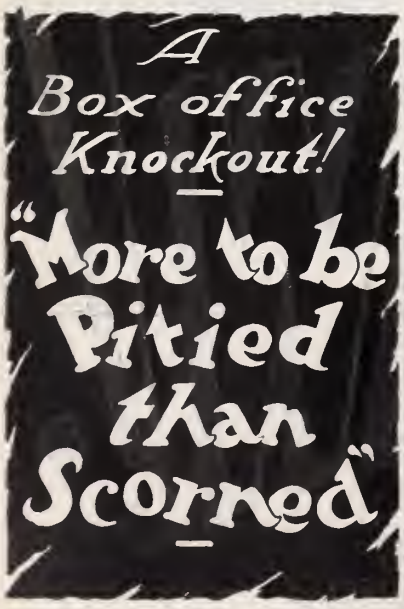
Elaborate "Ben Hur" Plans

Provide for Director of International Fame and American Players



ACTIVE preparations have already been begun by Goldwyn for filming "Ben Hur," by General Lew Wallace, although final negotiations with A. L. Erlanger for the motion picture rights were consumated only last week. Mr. Erlanger, who has controlled the dramatic rights to "Ben Hur" for the past twenty years, some time ago purchased the picture rights from Harper & Bros., publishers of the novel, and from the heirs of the author. He paid close to $1,000,000 for the film rights. The transaction with Goldwyn involves a bigger sum as it has obtained a half-interest in the dramatic rights in addition to the exclusive picture rights.

Interest in the industry at present centres in the nature of the production to be made by Goldwyn of this famous story and the identity of the director. On the latter point nothing can be said beyond the fact that he will be a director of international fame who has made many big productions which have fitted him admirably to handle "Ben Hur."

The picture will be but partly made at the Culver City studios of the Goldwyn corporation; steps are already under way for an expedition to Palestine itself, where most of the action takes place, to film the exterios. Entire temporary cities will be built there in order to reproduce the ancient civic and architectural features of Palestine in the time of Christ. An army of experts will be employed for that purpose. Parts of the picture will be made in Italy.

There are many great acting roles in "Ben Hur" and is is stated by Goldwyn that the leading members of the cast will be selected from American players.

Work of preparing the scenario is already under way and Goldwyn's research and editorial departments are absorbed in searching through old historical documents for data to be used in connection with the picture.

Weber and North Sign Nigh

Famous Director Will Present Four Super Productions for Fall Release

WILLIAM Nigh, one of the foremost directors in the independent field, has signed with the state-right team of Weber and North to direct and present four super productions for the coming season. The calibre of the pictures he will put forth is believed to be as high as "Why Girls Leave Home" and "Schooldays."

The deal should establish Weber and North among the leaders in the stateright field.

They will exend unlimited facilities for the success of Nigh's future output. Nigh will have a free hand. Every possible support will be extended to him and no expense will be spared, it is said. Nigh's own belief is that his coming productions will out-class everything he has ever done. He has at his disposal sufficient stories and stars to warrant confidence in his new output. The quartette of coming features will be made in the East. Announcement of the initial release will be made in short order.

Both parties are happy with the new association. It dates back to their first meeting on a business basis when Nigh signed up for the direction of "Why Girls Leave Home." Weber and North figured in the deal. The state-right firm was also interested in the making of "Your Best Friend," Nigh's last work.

Pathe Names Releases for Week of July 2

THE Pathe release schedule for the week of July 2nd contains the following subjects:

"The Ghost of the Rancho," a Pathe Playlet, starring Bryant Washburn.

"Screen Snapshots" No. 3 which shows a group of popular players indulging in their favorite pastimes. The group includes Carmel Myers, Bessie Love, Colleen Moore, Baby Peggy, Bryant Washburn, Anita Stewart, Buster Keaton, "Snub" Pollard, and Nell Shipman.

"Under the Ice," the thirteenth episode of the Pathe serial, "Go-Get-'Em Hutch."

"Friday, the Thirteenth," a new Hal Roach comedy featuring Paul Parrott.

"The Man Haters," the current Rolin comedy featuring the bevy of Rolin girls.

"Just Neighbors," the latest re-issued one-reel comedy starring Harold Lloyd.

The Pathe Review No. 162 subjects include "The Polar Bear Hunters of Northern Siberia"; "The Police Dogs of South Africa"; "The World's Greatest Bridge," showing the bridge that spans the Firth of Forth, Scotland; and a Pathe color presentation, "The City of Arles and Arlelatum."

High Prase from "Vet" for "Timber Queen"

Mrs. Arthur Lowry, manager of Schindler's theatres in Chicago and prominent in the film circles of the Windy City for some years, declares that "The Timber Queen" in her opinion is the best serial she has ever seen in her association with the screen. She writes in part:

"I believe that I am safe in saying that I booked 60, perhaps 70% of all the serials that have been made and believe I can qualify as a judge of good serials. I not only play them, but I see each episode of each serial, and of all the serials that have ever been made, 'The Timber Queen' is the best that I have ever seen. The first three episodes are the snappiest, brimful of action pictures, to my notion, yet produced."

"The Understudy" Current R-C Release

"The Understudy," a comedy drama starring Doris May, is the current release of R-C Pictures, being available at all R-C Exchanges on June 25th. This is the last picture to be released through the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, which after July 1st will be known as the Film Booking Offices of America.

"The Understudy" is a light and fast-moving comedy written by Ethel Hadden. Wallace MacDonald plays opposite the star and others in the cast are Otis Harlan, Arthur Hoyt, Christine Mayo and Adele Farrington. William A. Seiter directed "The Understudy."

Arliss Production Is "The Silent Voice"

Arthur S. Friend, of Distinctive Productions, announces that a New York Press item has caused photoplay editors in various sections of the country to erroneously name the forthcoming George Arliss production "The Silent Call." The new Arliss subject, for United Artists release, is an adaptation of "The Silent Voice," Jules Eckert Goodman's play that enjoyed great Broadway success a few years ago, and then found strong favor throughout the country. Distinctive has been seeking a play for Mr. Arliss for more than a year, and the Goodman play was finally purchased. There is a picture entitled "The Silent Call," which was released some time ago.

George Arliss completed his scenes in "The Silent Voice" last week and left for England on board the Mauretania for a summer rest aboard. Ann Forrest, leading woman in this production, is also going to England for a vacation.

Henry M. Hobart, producing head for Distinctive Productions, with Harmon Weight, director, and his staff went to the Holland S. Duell estate on the Hudson, at Yonkers, this week to take the final scenes for "The Silent Voice." Edward Earle, Effie Shannon and Miss Forrest will be the principal players in these scenes.

Pathe to Issue Statistical Series

With the current mid-week issue, Pathe News inaugurates a new and novel feature of statistical cartoons on vital subjects made in cooperation with the Babson Statistical Service. The first of the series illustrates Russia's financial survey.

Each cartoon of the series will have a direct bearing on business conditions and will show the operations of upward and downward business flow. The authenticity of these facts and figures visualized in graphic form, are guaranteed by Babson's experts, whose accuracy in forecasting trade conditions, have won them a world-wide reputation.

Work to Start This Week on "Clarence"

William de Mille is scheduled to begin work this week on "Clarence," his new production for Paramount adapted by Clara Beranger from Booth Tarkington's play. The cast, promising to be one of the most notable ever assembled for one picture, will include Wallace Reid, Agnes Ayres, Theodore Roberts, May McAvoy and Kathlyn Williams.

Lucia Backus Seger in New York

Lucia Backus Seger has returned to New York from Hot Springs, Va., where she has been for the past three weeks working in support of Richard Barthelmess in filming the exterior scenes for "The Bond Boy," that star's latest vehicle. Henry King is in charge of direction.

"Grandma's Boy" for B'way

Will Have New York Premiere at Strand, Opening Sept. 3rd or 10th

A CONTRACT was signed this week with the Mark Strand Theatre, Broadway and Forty-seventh Street, secures the first New York showing of the latest Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors feature, "Grandma's Boy." The opening of the run will be either September 3rd or September 10th, at the option of the Strand officials.

An informal statement this week by Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, said that the opening of the Strand run will coincide approximately with the national release of "Grandma's Boy," except in certain West Coast cities, where weather conditions in the summer are always favorable. The feature is now in the sixth week of its world's premiere at Dr. Breckwedel's Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles. It opens an indefinite run at M. L. Markowitz's Strand, San Francisco, July 9th, and it is expected that first run engagements in Seattle and Portland, Ore., may begin before the autumn season sets in.

In the arrangements which preceded the signing of the New York contract, Mr. Plunkett, managing director, acted for the Strand, Moe Mark, president and general manager, joining him in the final negotiations. W. B. Frank, general sales manager, in cooperation with Lester W. Adler, in charge of the New York exchange, represented Associated Exhibitors.

New Fan Magazine Begun

Publishers Plan Tie-Up With Exhibitors in Circulating New Monthly

A NEW motion-picture fan magazine has been launched by the Macon Publishing Corporation, with headquarters at 345 Madison Avenue, New York City. The new publication is known as the Motion Picture Review and will be issued monthly. The plan proposed is to reach the photoplay fans throughout the country via the theatre-owner. G. J. Macy of New York, formerly head of the Intercollegiate Films Co., and engaged in the advertising and publishing business for the past eight years, is in charge of the work.

In a statement issued this week by the Macon Publishing Company its plan is described as follows:

"One exhibitor in each town is asked to subscribe to one thousand copies of the magazine, which is known as Motion Picture Review. Strangely enough, the magazines cost him nothing. The name of the theatre is printed on the cover, for the attention of the patrons, and a special four-page insert is placed inside the magazine, on which the exhibitor is allowed to print his program announcement for the coming month. But these people are not exactly running a charitable enterprise, for on these four pages there is lots of space for local advertising; and out of the sale of this local advertising comes the return for the circulation costs. Not that Motion Picture Review is run as a program advertising scheme. Far from it. If the exhibitor himself would like to sell the advertising, he is allowed to do so, only provided he guarantees the circulation cost back to the home office. If he does not desire to do so, he asked to cooperate with the home office in securing a local advertising manager to sell this space, paying the circulation costs back to the home office. About two hundred dollars profit per month can be made from this advertising."

"Rough Shod" Praised by Trade Critics

"Rough Shod," the Fox production starring Charles Jones, which was released this month, has received hearty praise from all trade reviewers for its thrilling action and interest-compelling scenes, and for its excellent cast which includes Helen Ferguson, Ruth Renick and Maurice Flynn, the former famous Yale football star.

Following are a few excerpts from the trade papers:

Film Daily: "The action is evenly balanced and Director Eason has distributed it so that there are no draggy sequences. . . . Jones will be sure to please in this one, and it isn't likely they will suspect the outcome of the romance that is included. . . ."

Motion Picture News: "The director of this feature doesn't waste any time. He starts with a zip and doesn't use any brakes in slowing up the action to plant any particular incident. . . . The picture features the usual hard-riding, and Jones puts over a 'Hold-your-breath' scene when he leaps from his horse to a moving train."

Motion Picture World: "Charles Jones is an honest hero. . . . He is assisted by two such charming actresses that there is little or no favoritism as to which one he chooses, Maurice Flynn gives a typically smooth performance."

The "Wall Flower" Is Booked for Capitol

Goldwyn's latest Rupert Hughes release, "The Wall Flower," an original screen story directed by the author, will be the attraction next week at the Capitol Theatre, New York. This picture is Mr. Hughes' contribution to the producing corporation's fourth group of releases for the current season. Colleen Moore has the lead and Richard Dix appears opposite. Others in the cast are Gertrude Astor, Fanny Stockbridge, Laura Laplante, Tom Gallery and Rush Hughes, son of the author-director.

Mermaid Comedy on Broadway

"Poor Boy!" the final release of the Mermaid Comedy series in which Lloyd Hamilton is to be featured, and a current Educational release, is showing at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, the week of June 18. Irene Dalton is Hamilton's leading lady in this two-reel laugh fest, which has been classed as Hamilton's best work by several well known critics.

Mojave Desert Location for "Long Chance"

Jack Conway has taken William Bertram, Boyd Irwin and Jack Curtis to the Mojave desert for gold mining scenes of the Universal-Jewel all-star special production, "The Long Chance."

Left at Universal City, studying Peter B. Kyne's story in advance of their work, are Henry B. Walthall, Ralph Graves, Marjorie Daw and other players.

July Schedule of the Century Comedies

THE Stern Brothers announce their July release of Century Comedies as follows:

July 5th "Live Wires" a comedy featuring Brownie and Johnny Fox. The cast includes also Ena Gregory, Baby Delemeter, and Jackie Morgan.

July 12th "Apartment Wanted," starring Lee Moran, directed by Alf Goulding. The cast includes Edna Gregory, George Monberg, Alberta Vaughn and Jackie Morgan.

July 19th "You and Me" with an all-kid cast. Just the story of children at play with some fancy diving by a tiny youngster in a lake.

July 26th "Hello Mars," Harry Sweet and Johnny Fox in the story of an aviator who crashed and while he was unconscious dreamed a wonderful adventure on the planet Mars.

Pyramid Director Writes Book on Subject

Peter Milne, head of the scenario department of Pyramid Pictures, Inc., is the author of a book just issued by the Falk Publishing company, entitled "Motion Picture Directing."

Milne has been a very busy person of late, having prepared the continuity on the coming Pyramid production, "When the Desert Calls" as well as adapting for the screen another story the title for which has not as yet been selected.

He has also just finished titling "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge," another Pyramid picture shortly to be released.

William Farnum Cast in Outdoor Picture

"Moonshine Valley" is the title chosen for William Farnum's next vehicle produced by Fox. Herbert Brenon at present has his company in the village of Standish, perched on the heights of the Adirondack Mountains, N. Y. In the cast are such able players as Holmes Herbert, who also appeared in "A Stage Romance" in the role of the Prince of Wales; Sadie Mullen, and Dawn O'Day.

Bull Montana Series for Metro Release

A SERIES of eight Bull Montana Comedies will be released during the next two years by Metro Pictures Corporation. according to an announcement this week from the home offices of the company in New York.

They are to be produced and presented by Hunt Stromberg, who, upon the completion of a first one, "A Ladies' Man," signed Bull Montana for seven more.

"Get Your Story Going"

New Rule at Lasky Studio Intended to Obviate Waste at Start of Film

THERE is to be no more valuable time and effort wasted at the Lasky studio striving to establish at the outset those vague qualities known as "atmosphere" and "character environment." Hereafter, the rule to the director shall be "Get your story going, and keep it going!" This is the substance of a statement issued this week from the Paramount headquarters in New York. The statement also cites a few instances to illustrate the application of the newly adopted policy at the studios.

Take, for example, two pictures that are just getting under way this week.

Irvin Willat is making "On the High Seas" with Dorothy Dalton, Jack Holt and Mitchell Lewis. Here's the way it starts:

In a palatial stateroom on a Pacific liner a spoiled young society girl is irritated because her maid has forgotten to sew the ribbon on a slipper. In the hold the rats are leaving the ship, men are pumping water in an attempt to stay a fire. On deck the passengers are fleeing to the boats. The ship is sinking and the girl refuses to believe that she is in danger. The ship goes down and the girl and two stokers find themselves together in a leagy row boat.

That's the beginning of that one.

Then there is "The Ghost Breaker," starring Wallace Reid, directed by Al Green.

"Wally," a New Yorker visiting his old home in Kentucky, finds he has arrived just in time to dodge bullets in a feud. He fights his way out and gets back to New York followed by the chief feudist, who has sworn to kill "Wally." They meet in a hotel elevator, "Wally" shoots first and escapes out of the elevator, dashes into the first room he finds, and discovers a beautiful Spanish Princess in bed. The princess saves him from the police and he agrees to go with her to Spain to fight the ghosts that fill her ancestral castle. That's just the start.

"Get your story going, and keep it going!" is the order, and they're filling it.

Clergymen Laud "Nero"

Educators, Editors, and Business Men Join in Praising Fox Special

FOX Film Corporation has been the daily recipient of hundreds of letters from New York's most prominen clergymen, school teachers, business men, editors, and publishers expressing praise for "Nero," the Fox super-special production for the season of 1922-23, which is now in its fifth successful week of an indefinite engagement at the Lyric Theatre, New York City.

A feature of all the commendatory testimonials is based on the constructive educational and amusement value of the super-picture, which was produced in Rome under the supervision of William Fox and the direction of J. Gordon Edwards. Despite the necessarily important religious trend of the story of ancient Rome, ministers of all denominations have lauded the manner in which the subject has been handled and the great moral value of this superb spectacle.

Among the well-known New York clergymen who have written their enconiums are Rev. J. R. Henry, pastor of the Church of All Nations; Rev. Dr. John G. Benson, pastor of the Union Church; Rev. Dr. George Adams, pastor of the Reformed Episcopal Church; Rev. Dr. F. B. Upham, pastor of Old John Street Church; and Rev. D. O. Osterheld, pastor of the Cornerstone Temple, Brooklyn.

A New Florence Vidor Series for A. E.

GUS INGLIS, general manager for Florence Vidor, and member of the well known firm of Willis & Inglis, has returned to Los Angeles after spending more than a month in New York.

While in the East Mr. Inglis closed with President Arthur S. Kane, of Associated Exhibitors, a new contract, under the terms of which Florence Vidor will produce a second series of four features for that organization. This star's rapid rise to the front rank of picture favorites—she has been starred in only two pictures so far released — has been very marked. She recently has completed her third picture in her first series for Associated and is now at work on the fourth. Work on the first of the new series will begin in August, with King Vidor directing, as usual.

Village Destroyed in New Wm. Fox Special

The supreme climax in the screen drama "The Town That Forgot God," the Fox special for release during the season of 1922-23, is the flood scene in which an entire village is swept away by a great onrushing torrent. The thirty frame buildings represented an outlay of more than two hundred and fifty thousand feet of lumber, and some ten thousand shingles for the roofs. Although the cost of this scene was very great, it requires only a few minutes to show it being wrecked, on the screen.

O. F. Woody Los Angeles Manager for Selznick

O. F. Woody, who was recently appointed branch-manager at Los Angeles, was a member of the house of Selznick back in 1919, as head of the Denver Branch, and as a token of appreciation at being back in the Selznick fold he has started off on a sales drive which he promises will get results.

Activities of Exchange Managers, Exhibitors, Salesmen and Others

Cleveland

A Mid-Western Metro Convention was held in Cleveland on June 15-16-17. All of the central exchanges were represented at the meeting, including W. C. Bachmeyer, district manager, E. M. Saunders, of the home office; A. E. Atkinson of Pittsburgh; F. J. Nugent of Detroit. C. E. Almy, manager of the Cleveland Metro office, was host to the delegates. Private screenings of fall pictures releases, and sales talks about fall policies, took up the major portion of the time.

The Wid Gunning offices have moved from 607 Film Exchange Bldg. to 508 Film Exchange Bldg., occupying space in the local Robertson-Cole office. H. C. McDonald, who has been manager of the local Wid Gunning office, is in New York at the present time, but has notified his office force that he will continue to be in charge of the Cleveland territory. Jack Lawrence, formerly manager of the Lorain Fulton Theatre, Cleveland, has been appointed office manager of Wid Gunning exchange.

T. J. Guinan, Vitagraph auditor, has been in town this week.

Cleveland is doing its best to keep the country supplied with film men even unto the next generation. Last week we reported the arrival of a son in the family of Paul Tessier, former Pathe manager. This week it's J. E. Beck, local Vitagraph manager, who announces that he now has a son to contribute to the perpetuation of the film industry. J. E. Beck, Jr., weight 8 pounds, arrived last Saturday.

J. H. Skirboll, W. M. Skirboll, of Gold Seal Productions, and their mother, sail for an extended trip in Europe on June 14 on the Paris. The party motored from Cleveland to New York.

Paul Tessier says he's going to bring up his boy to be a film magnate. The boy arrived last Thursday. Tessier is one of the live wires of the present Robertson-Cole organization in Cleveland. Everybody doing well according to latest reports.

"Doc" Holah, manager of W. W. Hodkinson exchange and his chief aide, Norman Pyle, were out touring the territory this week. Strictly business!

The Grievance Committee of the Film Board of Trade of Cleveland held a special meeting last Friday morning to consider what to do with an exhibitor who buys three hundred pictures for a season, knowing that he can play only a small percentage of those pictures. Of course, the object of the exhibitor is to keep his competitors from getting the pictures. He books all the good ones on the market, picks out the best of the bunch, and then cancels the rest when they are no particular value to anyone. That is not the average exhibitor, of course. However, in every territory there are exhibitors of this type, and it is the work of the Film Board of Trade to stop abuse of this kind, which is one of the things that gives the motion picture industry a black eye among other industries. Like all laws, the rules set forth by the Film Board of Trade work a hardship only on the miscreants. Others are satisfied with the Hoy system and the workings of the Film Board of Trade, according to H. W. Christman, secretary of the board.

C. E. Perry, local Select exchange manager, travelled down to Canton this week and brought back some nice contracts.

M. Goldman, local Robertson-Cole exchange manager, has booked "Queen of the Turf" at the Strand, Akron, for this week. "Beyond the Rainbow," another big R-C production, play the Alhambra, Toledo, next week.

B. F. Keith's Hippodrome closes this week. The Keith lease on the Hippodrome has expired. Keith big time vaudeville will next be seen in Cleveland at the new million-dollar Keith theatre now being erected at the corner of Euclid avenue and East 17th street. The house will be ready some time in August and be under the management of John Royal.

C. C. Pettijohn was in town last week. He came to address the members of the Cleveland Film Board of Trade at their regular meeting last Friday night.

Kansas City

From a correspondent for motion picture trade journals to managing director of the Butterfly theatre in Milwaukee—that is the brief and dynamic record of Howard E. Jameyson, until last week advertising manager of the Liberty and Doric theatres, Kansas City. It was a double "event" for "Jamey," in that he took upon himself a bride the day before departing for the beerless town. He will have complete supervision over the Butterfly theatre, one of the chain of theatres with which Frank L. Newman is affiliated. As advertising manager of the Liberty and Doric theatres, Jameyson won the open admiration of fellow exhibitors by his unique exploitation campaigns and effective newspaper advertising.

Ample preparation for the chapter play, "The Radio King," was made last week by employees of the Kansas City Universal office. Wires were constructed on the roof of the office building and a receiving set arranged on the library table in the front of the office. An open invitation to exhibitors to "drop in" and "listen in" at all hours during the day was extended by "Curley" Calvert, branch manager.

For the first time in the history of Frank L. Newman, as an exhibitor in Kansas City, a series of stories have been booked at one of his houses, the Royal theatre, at which the Sherlock Holmes series will play its first run in Kansas City. As Mr. Newman's reputation as a conservative and wise buyer of pictures usually is regarded as a precedent in the Missouri and Kansas territory, the series should enjoy a prosperous reign in the two states named.

The announcement comes from Bert King, former branch manager of the Kansas City Vitagraph office and president of the Kansas City Film Board of Trade, that he has opened the Quality Film Company, a states rights exchange, in Dallas, Tex. Associated with Mr. King in his new venture is David Bernbaum.

The Kansas City territory has proved a good business center for the Blizzard Cooling and Ventilating Fan during the last few weeks. Orders for installations were received last week from Dubinsky Brothers for their Regent theatre, Kansas City, and from Edward Peskay of the New Penn theatre, St. Joseph, Mo. Several other installations also are pending in Missouri and Kansas.

Two changes in ownership of theatres marked the financial activity in Kansas City exhibitor circles last week. The Brooklyn theatre was purchased by J. M. Holmes from G. E. Martin, while John Ritter of the Pastime theatre, Tipton, Kas., and Joseph Buck purchased the Crystal theatre at Osborne, Kas. The Novelty theatre at Osborne, owned by Mr. Buck, will be closed for the summer.

"No unusual clouting by either team, but the game of the season," was the descriptive expression of a member of the Kansas City First National Exchange baseball team, in rehearsing the 3 to 1 victory of First National over the Vitagraph team last week. The Kansas City Film League is making a strong bid for attendance and is proving a rival to some of the best amateur teams of the city. The Pathe-Crescents and the First National grace the top of the league standings with a perfect percentage of 1,000.

L. J. McCarthy, who has been working out in the territory for the Kansas City First National office, has been assigned to special duty in the office. E. C. Rhoden, branch manager, asserted that "Mac" had been assigned to special duty because of his diplomatic powers. Leave it to "Mac."

For the third successive year, Frank L. Newman, owner of the Newman theatre, Kansas City, has just completed a week of "mob scenes" in front of the box office of the Newman theatre, during the third anniversary of that theatre. Each year Mr. Newman stages a program that rivals the best of musical comedies and Kansas City theatregoers are willing to stand in line for hours, sweating and sweltering in order to witness the program. Three birthday cakes from which sprang a chorus of twenty-six handsomely gowned women, formed the feature of the performance. As in the past, "William Tell" was the overture.

Buffalo

REPRESENTATIVES of the Buffalo and Albany Film Boards of Trade met in Syracuse last Tuesday to discuss and decide upon a definite working plan. The meeting was held in the Hotel Onondaga. The Buffalo representatives were John Kimberly, Nu-Art; W. A. V. Mack, Pathe; Robert T. Murphy, Merit; C. W. Anthony, Vitagraph, and Sydney Samson, Grand and Warner. Albany representatives were: Gibbons, Vitagraph; Kempner, Paramount, and Brunner, Pathe.

A new grievance committee has been appointed by President Sydney Samson of the Film Board of Trade as follows: Sydney Samson, president of the board, chairman; W. A. V. Mack, Pathe; C. W. Anthony, Vitagraph, and Bob Murphy, Merit. The new exhibitor members are: J. H. Michael, president of the western New York unit of the M. P. T. O., chairman; Arthur L. Skinner, Victoria, and Walter Morris, Happy Hour.

Sydney Samson, president of the Film club, and Richard C. Fox, manager of the Select exchange, journeyed to New York last Monday to attend the meeting in Charlie O'Reilley's office, where plans for the continuance of Exchange and Exhibitor grievance committee work were worked out.

"School Days" Popular Down South

THAT the southern exhibitors are getting big results from the Warner Brothers' feature, "School Days," featuring Wesley Barry, is evidenced in the report sent by M. Mitchell, who controls the southern rights, to the Warner offices.

According to Mitchell more than $10,000 in bookings were secured within a fortnight, following the announcement of the release of the feature in that territory. Virtually every key city theatre in the south has contracted to show the feature, it is said.

Mitchell controls the feature rights for Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, exclusive, of Pensacola, and North and South Carolina. The picture was produced by Harry Rapf, and directed by Will Nigh.

"Wild Youth" Players Tell Experiences

In connection with the extensive publicity campaign which is to mark the states right release of Ivan Abramson's "Wild Youth" in early September a novel and effective shot in the series of exploitation stunts being prepared was fired last week when eight screen notables in the cast of the picture told of their individual parts in the story from the stage of Moss' Broadway theater, New York City. Those who made personal appearance in behalf of the production and discussed the plot and "movies" in general included Virginia Pearson who makes her return to the screen in "Wild Youth," "Sunshine" Mary Anderson, Julia Swayne Gordon, Joseph Striker, Bobby Connelly, Harry Morey, Thurston Hall and Harry Southard.

Weather Fails to Stop "Determination"

The hot weather is having no appreciable effect on the Elks Photoplays, Inc., release, "Determination," starring Alpheus Lincoln, which is being booked in theatres throughout the five boroughs of New York City.

The Times Theatre, Eighth Avenue and Forty-second Street, Manhattan, with a daily change policy, had a successful booking on this feature on Thursday of last week. A number of bookings in Brooklyn were accompanied by personal appearances by Alpheus Lincoln, star of the production, who achieved much success in his big dual role.

Du Pre Picture Finished

Mary Pickford's Former Understudy To Be Seen in Five-Reel Feature

FROM the offices of the Casco Productions Inc., New York City, comes the official announcement that the first production starring Louise Du Pre, Mary Pickford's former understudy, has been completed, edited and titled, and that this five reel subject will be available to independent distributors at once as a special hot weather attraction.

An extensive publicity campaign has been carried on by the Casco company for the past several months. An elaborate line of advertising accessories has been prepared for this subject that will simplify the showing of this picture and secure the widest publicity for its presentation.

The picture will be released under the title of "The Proof of Innocence"—a dramatic romance of the art studies of Greenwich Village, with Louise Du Pre playing the part of an artist model. It is from an original script written especially for Miss Du Pre and presenting her in a vehicle in which she is first seen as a child of the tenements and later on as a young lady of exquisite refinement. The supporting cast is made up entirely of experienced troopers, including John Hopkins, J. Francis O'Reilly, Don Merrifield, Oliver S. Putnam and Carl Sodders.

The production was made under the direction of B. C. Rule and photographed by William Miller.

Warner Arrives with Rapf

HARRY RAPF and Jack Warner arrived last week at the eastern offices of the Warner Brothers organization with the print of the next Wesley Barry feature, "Rags to Riches," which was directed by Wallace Worsley. The feature, a Rapf production, will be released in the fall.

The sudden departure of Rapf from the coast to the east is said to have been necessary in connection with several other stories scheduled to be produced by Rapf for the coming season. Rapf reiterated the report that the coast studios are humming with activity.

This is Warner's first trip east in two years. He has confined himself mainly with the production of the Monty Banks two-reel comedies.

"Good, clean comedies," said Warner, "serve to add spice to any exhibitors program. The day of slap-dash-hokum comedies is gone. The trend of the times indicates that future short subjects must be made with good taste and discernment in screen values. By that I mean—wholesome, worth-while entertaining comedies devoid of suggestiveness. There is a constant demand for good comedies, and the popularity of some of the comedy stars proves this fact."

"The Son of Napoleon" Due

Five Part Picture is a Version of the Life of Duke of Reichstag

THE five part feature attraction "The Son of Napoleon" which is being prepared for the American State Right market by the Howells Sales Co. is a screen version of the life of the Duke of Reichstag, who it is not commonly known, was the son of Napoleon Bonaparte by Empress Eugene, and whose life was made the subject of Rostand's immortal drama "L'Aglon" in which the American star, Maude Adams, appeared several years go.

The locale, scenic investiture and interior decorations employed in this photo drama, are in every respect historically accurate, and the cast was chosen not alone because of dramatic ability, but because of physical and facial likeness to the original characters sought to be portrayed.

The Howells Sales Co. have prepared advertising matter to be distributed in connection with the attraction, original in its character and which should materially help in the booking and exhibition of the production, in addition to which an advertising campaign directed largely to the exhibitor has been planned.

"The Son of Napoleon" which has been titled and edited by Lesley Mason is the first of the early Fall releases to be distributed by way of the States Right market by the Howells Sales Co., and will be followed by the comedy "Sold for a Million."

Equity Special Ready for Release

DANIEL CARSON GOODMAN, producer of "What's Wrong With the Women," which will be Equity's big special on the state right market, has just completed the cutting and editing of this picture, the filming of which was finished at the Biograph studio two weeks ago. Dr. Goodman will turn the picture over to Equity in six reels.

"What's Wrong With Women" is from a story by Dr. Goodman. In the cast are Wilton Lackaye, Barbara Castleton, Huntley Gordon, Rod La Roque, Julia Swayne Gordon, Hedda Hopper, Constance Bennett, Montagu Love, Paul Mc Allister and Mrs. Oscar Hammerstein.

Mrs. Woodrow Talks for Movie Chats

In the newest Urban Movie Chat Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, the well-known writer on topics of especial interest to women, is asked her opinion on the moot question—"Should wives obey their husbands?"

In a pictorial interview, Mrs. Woodrow says:

"In the past the law gave men authority over their wives, but no legislation can control the instinct which insists upon equality of mind, soul and body between husband and wife.

"Marriage is a partnership and not a despotism. Partners in business aim to further their mutual interests. Partners in the home should do likewise.

"If a woman should try to carry out all orders given by her husband, she would be laughed at. But she doesn't—she has too much common sense."

Hot Weather Bookings Are Doing Well

Hot weather bookings of Second National Pictures Corporation releases are holding up well, according to reports reveived at the New York office. It is said that the suggestion of cooling sea breezes in "David and Jonathan" and "Her Story," photoplays of romantic adventure by land and sea, and of the bracing mountain air of the Canadian Rockies in "The Night Riders," is proving gratifying to patrons of the theatres showing these pictures.

Howells Perfects Plans for Distribution

THE Howells Sales Co. which has heretofore released via the States Right market the serial "The Son Of Tarzan" and among other feature attractions, "Vendetta" and "Intrigue," have been for the past two months perfecting plans looking toward the States Right distribution of a substantial series of feature attractions, and have effected such plans for an enlarged Fall market.

The first two releases which are ready for exploitation are "The Son of Napoleon," a version of Rostand's immortal stage drama, "L'Aiglon," and "Sold For a Million," a comedy drama of exceeding originality.

Rasmussen Expedition Print Arrives

Export & Import Film Company, Inc., have received a print of the exclusive motion pictures of the Rasmussen Expedition to Greenlando. The subject is now in five-reel form and is said to contain many beautiful Arctic scenes; an exciting polar bear chase; a walrus hunt and some sensational seal shots. The life of Greenland Eskimos is shown in all its picturesque barbarity.

J. G. Wainwright brought the pictures over from London. The Export & Import have not stated how they would be distributed, or in what form.

Louis Auerbach Back From Coast Trip

Louis Auerbach, vice president of the Export & Import Film Co., Inc., returned to New York Monday from a three weeks' visit at the coast, where he made arrangements for the fall producing campaign of his company.

It is understood he has opened negotiations for the world rights of several independent productions. He has made no statement regarding his conference with Col. Wm. N. Selig.

Torchy Stages "Party" on Long Island

Action upon action, superceded by hair-raising incidents replete with a wealth of highly comic angles, is said to characterize the latest Johnny Hines vehicle titled "Torchy's Feud," now in its final stages of completion.

The vicinity around Glendale, Long Island, wherein C. C. Burr is producing the Torchy comedies, was in a continual hubub of excitement this past week, due primarily to the many pistol shots heard on location. On Friday of last week a staff of cameramen was busily at work taking "shots" of a typical Kentucky mountain feud, in which some fifty actors, armed with rifles and revolvers engaged in a little Kentucky "party."

Tweedy Comedies Sold for Coast

Sanford Productions report that they have closed sales on their entire series of twelve two-reel Tweedy comedies and their eight-five-reel semi-western productions, featuring Fete Morrison, to the Peerless Film Service of San Francisco, California, for California, Arizona, Nevada and the Hawaiian Islands.

They have also sold the rights on their series of Pete Morrison productions for the entire south to the Southern States Film Co., of Atlanta, Dallas, New Orleans, and Oklahoma City.

Producer Comes East for Premier

BEN WILSON, producer and director of the Ben Wilson-Arrow special, "The Innocent Cheat," starring Roy Stewart and Kathleen Kirkham, made a flying trip from the Coast in order to attend the premier presentation of his picture at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre.

Wilson was called upon to make a few remarks at the evening performance and expressed himself as delighted with the manner in which the production was presented and the reception accorded it by the New York audience. He stated that he was busily engaged in preparing his fall productions and expected to make an announcement regarding the same in the very near future.

Le Saint, Cohn Coming to Show Picture

EDWARD LE SAINT, who directed the production of "More To Be Pitied Than Scorned," and Harry Cohn of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, arrived in New York from California this week on the Century, bringing with them the print of this first of the company's new series of melodramas.

Le Saint had not at first intended making the cross-continent trip, but changed his mind at the last moment upon receipt of word of a special showing that is being arranged for Charles E. Blaney, on whose great Broadway success the film version of "More To Be Pitied Than Scorned" is founded.

Meanwhile, the plans for the special trade showing are rapidly maturing. It is probable that a special showing will be held for exhibitors and another one for other branches of the industry—important territorial buyers, program organization heads, and others who have expressed interest in the feature because of the story itself and the strength of the cast, including Rosemary Theby, Alice Lake, J. Frank Glendon, Philo McCollough, Gordon Griffith, and Baby Joosephine Adair.

A reason for Cohn's and Le Saint's trip East is also the necessity for going over plans on the other features of the series which C. B. C. has announced.

"More To Be Pitied Than Scorned" is the first of the series—to be followed by "Only a Shop Girl" another of the Charles E. Blaney successes, which is to be produced with an all-star cast of equal strength to that in "More To Be Pitied Than Scorned."

Betty Blythe to Have Strong Support

The B. B. Production, Inc., announces that Robert Frazer and Charles Lane have been engaged to play the two leading male roles in "How Women Love," the first special starring vehicle for Betty Blythe to be released on the open market and now being produced at the Whitman Bennett Studio in Yonkers.

Frazer and Lane recently played the two leading roles with Mae Murray in "Fascination" and Miss Blythe feels particularly fortunate in having the co-operation of these two excellent artists.

The actual "shooting" of "How Women Love" began on June 12th. The production, in finished form, will be ready for showing and distribution on August 1st. Preparations for the second production, to be made in September, are already actively under way.

Print of "CrimsonGold" Due in Two Weeks

Franklyn E. Backer of East Coast Productions, expects the second picture of his series starring J. B. Warner to arrive in New York within the next couple of weeks. The title is "Crimson Gold."

There has been considerable interest shown by State Right men in this picture, as the first of the Backer series, "Big Stakes," in which Warner is also the star, is now being successfully marketed. This picture was shown in Los Angeles at the Ambassador Theatre before it was screened in New York, and made a most faborable impression in the film capital.

"Big Stakes" is an adaptation of the American Magazine story, "High Stakes," by Earl Wayland Bowman.

Polo Completes Serial, "Cap'n Kidd"

"Cap'n Kidd," the serial starring Eddie Polo, is finished.

Actual production work on this chapter-play, which is Polo's first independent serial, has been completed and the Star Serial Corporation, which holds world distribution rights on it, announces that the final chapters are now in process of last editing and titling. Immediately following the completion of production on the fifteen chapter Polo sailed for Europe for a rest.

Southern Rights Sold on "Felix" Cartoon

R. D. Craver, Franchise holder for First National in Georgia and North Carolina, and who operates his exchange system in North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Alabama, this week acquired the rights to the "Felix" cartoon comics, the series of which are controlled for world-wide distribution by Miss M. J. Winkler.

Craver, it is announced, will inaugurate, effective at once, an intensive publicity and sales campaign in behalf of the "Felix" product in his territory.

Friedman Secures Kyne Picture Rights

Ben Friedman, President of the Friedman Film Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn., was a visitor at the Arrow office last week and while there closed a deal which, according to Friedman, involves an amount in excess of fifty thousand dollars.

By the terms of this contract Friedman secures the four Peter B. Kyne pictures and the big Arrow special, "The Innocent Cheat," for the Minnesota territory. Of the Peter B. Kyne stories, "A Motion to Adjourn," "Back to Yellow Jacket" and "One-Eighth Apache" have already been produced and the fourth is now being made at the Coast. These are Ben Wilson Productions, featuring Roy Stewart, Marjorie Daw and Kathleen Kirkham.

O'Conor Sales Manager Opens N. Y. Office

F. E. Samuels, general sales manager of the O'Conor Productions, producers and distributors of the new series of Billy Franey two-reel comedies, arrived in New York this week and has opened a branch office with Frank A Tichenor at 220 West Forty-second Street.

In discussing his new connections and the state rights business conditions in general, Mr. Samuels said:

"I am looking forward to at least two months' stay in the eastern territory, making my headquarters in New York during that time. On my way east I stopped over in various of the larger cities and it appears to me that conditions are rapidly assuming normal shape. Unless there is a marked increase in production of short subjects I predict a comedy 'famine' in the Fall. In this respect my firm is fortunate, as we have four comedies completed and two under production."

Kelly Is Engaged for Housman Feature

Herbert L. Steiner, producer of the Arthur Housman feature comedies for Clark-Cornelius Corporation release, has engaged Anthony Paul Kelly to prepare the story and scenario for the second Housman comedy, which will shortly go into production in the Tilford Studios.

"The Snitching Hour," the first of the Housman comedies, is now scheduled for release by the Clark-Cornelius Corporation.

Picture of East Side Ready for Release

Artista Film Corporation of New York, which makes a specialty of subjects pertaining to Jewish Life, announces their new release, "The Orphan of the Ghetto," a drama of the life of New York's East Side, featuring Arthur Donaldson as the Pawn Broker. The picture is in six reels and is already booked in several houses of The Marcus Loew's Enterprises, also to the entire circuit of houses of The M. & S. Theatres.

Arrow Makes Foreign Deals

Pearl Films Buys United Kingdom Rights to "Ten Nights in a Barroom"

"TEN Nights in a Barroom," released by the Arrow Film Corporation, figures prominently in the news emanating from the Foreign Department of that company this week. In a statement issued by D. J. Mountan it is announced that "Ten Nights in a Barroom" has been contracted for by Pearl Films, Ltd., of London, for the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

This picture has been given a premier showing at one of London's leading theatres and is said to have met with the same success abroad that it enjoyed here. In addition to "Ten Nights in a Barroom" for England, twelve Speed Comedies and "The Blue Fox" serial starring Ann Little were sold to Interocean Film Corporation.

Mountan also announced the sale of "Ten Nights" to International Variety and Theatrical Agency for South Africa. This firm purchased a series of eighteen single reel Spotlight Comedies for South Africa.

In addition to these sales Mountan states that he has closed a foreign contract for "Ten Nights," together with ten other Arrow special attractions, a series of fourteen 2-reel Broadway Comedies and a series of twelve 2-reel Speed Comedies, the territory and buyer of which will be announced later.

Mountan expects to announce next week a foreign deal which he believes will probably be the biggest reported this year. It will include the entire output of the Arrow Film Corporation, comprising about seventy-two features, one hundred and four comedies, three serials, eleven Sport Pictorials and several novelty films.

Burr Denies Rumor on Torchy Comedies

REPORTS that production on the Torchy series featuring Johnny Hines has come to an end, were emphatically denied at the Mastodon Film office this week when C. C. Burr, the producer of the "Torchy" comedies, announced that the series would positively be continued.

Burr said: "From the inception of the Torchy comedies based on the stories by Sewell Ford, we have applied ourselves religiously towards making this series one that would fill a popular demand. As a matter of pure business policy alone it would be foolish to curtail production when the largest theatre owners in the United States persistently book our Torchy product, and consistently ask for more. Torchy comedies are being played in every sizable town in the country.

Zierler Buys Rights to "Big Stakes"

Sam Zierler, of the Commonwealth Film Corporation, has purchased from Franklyn E. Backer, of East Coast Productions, the rights of "Big Stakes" for the States of New York and Northern New Jersey.

"Big Stakes" is a Western five-reel feature in which J. B. Warner is starred. Immediately after seeing the picture screened, Zierler signed the contract with Backer.

The second of the Backer series, "Crimson Gold," has reached New York from the Coast. A different cast supports J. B. Warner, the star, in the second production. Included in the new cast are Edythe Sterling, Martha McKay, Al McQuarrie, George Berrell, Jay Morley, George Stanley, J. Pierce and Mrs. Ferri Redmann.

"Your Best Friend" Gets New Bookings

Bookings on the latest Warner Brothers attraction, "Your Best Friend," a Harry Rapf production starring Vera Gordon, being received at the Warner offices are said to reveal in no small measure the increasing popularity of the star and the merits of the feature.

From the Creole Enterprises, New Orleans, comes the report that the Saenger Enterprises have booked the attraction throughout their entire circuit. The Creole concern controls the rights for Mississippi and Louisiana.

In New England the picture was shown for an extended run at the Providence Opera House, Providence, and for a week at the Tremont Temple, Boston.

Argentine ants have become such a pest that the United States Government is making extraordinary efforts to exterminae them. The newest Urban Movie Chat shows how the work is being carried on. A slow kind of poison is used; it takes 10 days to kill the ant, but it kills them by the millions.

"The Fatal Marriage"

(R-C Pictures Corporation—4630 Ft.)

THIS was originally a Triangle production, directed by Christie Cabanne, under the supervision of D. W. Griffith, when it was called "Enoch Arden," the screen version of Alfred Tennyson's immortal poem. That there is a fifty foot shot of D. W. playing the father of Phillip Ray, with the late Robert Harron playing a child part, will indicate the age of the production. That, however, is its greatest charm, for it has what would be at present on all star cast any one producer would find difficulty to assemble. With Lillian Gish, as Annie, Wallace Reid as Philip Ray and Walter Paget in the leading role, there is a rare exploitation angle. That the photography is as good as the average today, indicates that it must have been of especial merit. Many of the scenes could not be improved upon, if the production were re-made.

The story of Annie, Philip and Enoch Arden, beginning when they were happy children together and ending with a pathetic triangle still teems with human interest. Annie marries Enoch, and to the couple three children are born. While Enoch is away, the third dies, and before Enoch is rescued from a desert island on which he lived many years, the other two are grown to maturity.

Meantime, had it not been for Philip, poverty stricken Annie and her children might have fared much worse, and after a vigil of many years, she finally consents to marry Philip.

When Enoch returns, with the mental picture of a wife and babies as he left them, he faces the cruel facts and rather than bring about the trying situation his return would occasion, he welcomes death, so that Annie may never know that he returned, when too late.

Needless to say, all of the characters are ably represented and the picture should please those who remember the popular stars as they were years ago, as well as the younger generation who will be interested in seeing flash backs of their favorites. A mighty good picture for an "Old Home Week" or reunion celebration.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Special Delivery"

(Fox Comedy—Two Reels)

AL ST. JOHN has packed a number of thrills in his latest funfilm. True we have seen them before, but they always seem to amuse. The "plot" concerns the efforts of the hero to deliver a very important message from the board of directors to a judge. In the delivering, Al has one terrible time. He starts out on a bicycle, eventually getting a seat in a trolley. Another messenger boy comes along on a cycle carrying a full meal aloft. When he gets opposite Al's window, our hero dines. He gets off the trolley and starts again on the bicycle and soon finds himself in an auto van loaded with lions. He dashes out with the lions after him.

Follows a number of amusing scenes with the beasts and Al coming out the winner after a battle in a piano box. Arriving at the home of the judge, Al finds the villains have tied up the girl. Al, the lions on his trail, releases the girl, climbs to the roof, slips and hangs from the eaves when his coat catches on a nail. Below the lions try to grab him. He finally swings his tie into a window and "ropes" a phone with which he gets in connection with the office. An army of messengers advance to the rescue. They save the hero. Arriving at the home office, there is some trouble. Al climbs up the side of the building by aid of the rain pipe, which ever and anon breaks. Atop the building Al does some of the old rocking chair stuff on the edge of the structure. He climbs a flagpole, one of the gang chops it down. It is used as a seesaw, Al on one end, the villain on the other.

These situations should cause much merriment. There's a lot of action in the comedy, which is fully up to the standard set my this popular comedian.—CHARLES LARKIN.

"Mile-a-Minute Mary"

(Christie-Educational—Two Reels)

Dorothy Devore, under the direction of Harold Baudine in a Christie comedy, represents "Mile-a-Minute Mary," an amusing story by Walter Graham, which tells of the escapades of a young girl whose father has given her a flivver. Mary invites three chums to accompany her upon a camping trip, but not until after she has mastered the knowledge of how to control the Henry. Her lessons offer reason for part of the fun, then the camping episode involves the admiration of a country boy for the girls in general. There is a little plot concerning an option on an oil gusher, which through Mary's carelessness father almost loses, but she saves the day by getting him to the lawyer's office in nick of time to take it up. It is up to Mary to race with a high powered motor, but by clever manipulation she wins. Fun races through with the cars and is at high speed when the country boy attempts to follow his ideal and present her with a bouquet. As a reward for her daring, father presents Mary with a regular car in the end. As indicated, this is practically all exteriors, for which ideal locations have been selected. Good photography, rapid action and a lot of fun.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Retribution"

(Rialto Productions, Inc.—Six Reels)

REMARKABLE, photographically. Some of the shots are as nearly perfect as any ever screened. Details of photographic values have been carefully considered. The art titles are good, too, and carry noteworthy atmosphere, but the film itself:

Relates of atrocities committed by one, Ceasar Borgia, villainous brother of Pope Alexander VI, and of Lucretia Borgia. Among Ceasar's playful deeds was the murder of Lucretia's beloved husband, the Duke of Aragon. It was the loss of her husband and the misunderstood situation Ceasar planned, that started Lucretia Borgia upon a life which made her that kind of woman none too like a lily. But the story of that life is not told in "Retribution."

The picture begins with showing concern attached to the election of a new Pope. Scenes in the Vatican where Cardinals and other Roman officials are holding the election, are among the highlights of the production. To illustrate the festivities accompanying such an occasion, thousands of people are employed. In territories where foreign made spectacles have not been shown, there is something new about "Retribution" which may draw patronage. Otherwise, it is much like its predecessors.

Some of the incidents depicting Caesar's cruelties and results therefrom, together with his band of highwaymen's terrible deeds, may entertain people who are held breathless with realistic and gruesome detail identified with hideous crime. The characters are well drawn, though it is difficult to gauge the ability of a cast swathed in garments presumably accurate as to apparel worn some five hundred years ago. One of them could act, Signor Papa, cast as the jester.

As a production, is is stupendous. There is plot and counterplot, ending in the triumph of good over evil, after all the evil has been done. The rush of the angered populace upon the iron barred and otherwise protected Vatican is most exciting and realistic, picturizing happenings of mediæval history, elaborately staged. Otherwise, it is another foreign made production which seems to be intent upon number of people employed and scenic value, rather than human interest or pleasing aftermath.—LILLIAN GALE.

British Castles

(Kineto Review-Urban—Two Reels)

WHILE not as entertaining as other reviews in the Kineto series, this one showing varied castles in England, beginning with Windsor Castle and covering points of historical and picturesque interest, is a good subject of its kind. There are views of Hampton Court showing where Henry VIII strolled with Anne Boleyn, Jane Seymour, Catherine Howard and Catherine Parr. And the pond garden, which was installed by said Henry. Photography throughout the two reels of beauteous views is up to standard.—LILLIAN GALE.

Movie Chat No. 21

(Urban-Hodkinson—Two Reels)

BEGINS with close up views of Senator Robert L. Owen, of Oklahoma, whom people may thank for one of the best banking laws for the interests of masses, ever constructed, the one which enabled U. S. to raise forty billion dollars for the world war.

Then an interesting display of Chinese babies, photographed at San Francisco's baby show. Some of the tiny Celestials are most appealing.

There may be people who will enjoy seeing the operation of diner service, on a first class train, although it would seem there are subjects which might be of more general interest.

For instance, the following discourse is upon the making of Kewpy dolls, the manufacturing process plainly in view. The second reel finishes with view of the Salmon River in Idaho.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Rapid Fire"

(Educational—Two Reels)

SLAP stick comedy unadulterated. It will please only those who enjoy low comedy and the bordering upon vulgarity in order to get laughs. This one drains humor by showing difficulties a farmer has in milking an unruly cow. And a landlord who lands in time to see his property falling apart. The incidents happen in rapid order.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Storm"

Universal-Jewel—Eight Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

HERE'S a picture for you! You may have seen Northwest stories before—you may have seen vigorous conflict with elemental, primitive nature in the background. You may have looked upon life as it is lived in the raw, with the contrasting forces in man pulsating for expression, but you have never seen such a story as this adaptation of Langdon McCormick's highly successful play, "The Storm." It towers over anything of its kind ever presented on the screen. While its vital throb is the conflict between men for a woman's love—an age old story incidentally—it is the humanity, the reality, the crashing, smashing drama of eternal romance which is vivified to the highest degree.

There are three tense pitches of climax which give this picture its rugged strength. The first comes when the French girl guides a canoe through the turbulent current—a narrow gorge of pounding, swirling rapids. Her father escapes from the Mounted and the frail craft is led into tranquil waters. The second arrives when the girl is placed in the care of the woodsman who also has for company a young city-bred Easterner. The trapper has invited the youth to winter with him, through gratitude for saving him from confidence men at a post in the clearing. This climax presents a marvelous, awe-inspiring background of snow—the storm at its height and the shelter from it in the snug, little cabin. There is no escape 'till spring. And so love comes to the two men. The girl wants them to be friends. To her they are jus' frien's.

The woodsman's love is a mighty, powerful influence in his life, while the man from the city would make an easy conquest if possible. His love is of a weak fibre. So you see the storm in these men's hearts. The ultimate climax reveals a huge, colorful forest fire—the like of which has never been seen before. A color process has been used and the flames soar, the timber breaks and our little triumvirate seems doomed. A coin is tossed as to whether one or the other of the lovers will try to make the Pass and get provisions. And the weakling wins by trickery. The woodsman is forced to come back and lead them through the mounting flames. It is the only escape. When they reach safety his rival shows enough manhood by admitting his mistakes. His gratitude carries a spirituality which conquers his weak impulses.

What makes this picture great? Well, it is excellently directed—with emphasis being placed upon the elemental conflict of nature and that hidden in the souls of the two men. The story is simplicity itself, and builds easily and surely. The subtitles are immense, part of them being in French-Canadian dialect, the expressions of the girl, and all are interwoven in the plot so that the action is ever advancing. The backgrounds of forest, mountains, gorges, rivers, snow, ice and fire, vital and vivid, lend a ruggedness. Indeed they are a part of the story.

Finally the acting is excellent. Some of it is more than excellent. We are speaking of House Peters' truly inspired portrayal of the woodsman. Think over all the actors who might interpret the role and Peters tops them all. His virility is ever dominant. His poise and repression is acting of the highest order. Matt Moore and Virginia Valli give cameo renditions. The picture could be trimmed of some of its cabin detail. But even as it stands it is thoroughly absorbing.

Adapted from play by Langdon McCormick. Directed by Reginald Barker. Produced by Universal.

The Story—Woodsman shows gratitude to Easterner for saving his bankroll from confidence men and invites him to spend the winter in the woods. A girl is placed in the trapper's care and during the snowbound days they fall in love with her—the woodsman's love being of an ideal quality—the other's a feeling of little consequence. Finally when the woodsman saves his companions from a huge forest fire, the weakling appreciates the other's fine manliness. So the girl remains in the woods with him.

Classification—Northwest story of elemental conflict between men's souls and conflict between them and elements of nature. Strong love interest and dramatic triangle.

Production Highlights—The superb acting by Peters and the excellent directing by Barker. The backgrounds. The mad race of the canoe through the turbulent waters. The snow-storm. The human interest. The comedy touches. The immense forest fire. The even trend of the plot.

Exploitation Angles—Universal has put out an immense amount of paper on this one. Get hold of it and use it. Play up that it is the biggest thing of its kind ever shown. Tell that it is adapted from a highly successful play. Don't mince matters. Feature the acting. Use ballyhoos and all the ideas you have for catching the public.

Drawing Power—Will go big in every community. Good enough for extended run.

"The Half Breed"

First National—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

ANOTHER motion picture has been released. There is nothing in "The Half Breed" which entitles it to a place off the well beaten path of western dramas. In truth, it approaches mediocrity. The production is in six reels. In order to stretch the story to that length much padding is evident. We see close-ups of the stars for no reason whatever. We see a lot of hokum dormitory scenes in a girl's college and useless campus stuff. We see a title every few minutes, the continuity being so poor that a great abundance of them are required to explain what's going on. The director must have had a hard job with the material at hand.

The picture has some good cattle roundup shots, some dramatic moments in which the two rival parties stage a battle at a small stream, and a number of attractive and deep shots of the western plains. The pursuit of the half breed and the girl at the close of the picture, a fast freight saving the two from the posse is perhaps the most thrilling bit in the film. Audiences who care not for logic, smoothness of story telling, naturalness in interpretation and other essentials of successful modern film production, will like this one. Also in theatres where patrons like their western stuff spread on thick. "The Half Breed" will qualify.

"The Half Breed" may have been a success on the stage, but it is certainly not strong enough in plot for a six reel feature. The whole production recalls some of our early westerns. Wheeler Oakman appears in the role of half breed taking it out of the realms of reality in several spots. Mary Anderson in the leading feminine part is called upon for a lot of work. Her personal attractiveness is one of the bright spots of the picture. Her acting is one of the few redeeming featu

CINDERELLA has returned again d

Much of this action could be spensed with as it merely accentuates the avy sentiment. Even coincidence enters nen the philandering employer climbs to e roof to keep his appointment with the rl and discovers the artist as the husband the woman he enticed away.

You can see the happiness building from e first reel, though the suffering figures ust experience severe trials before good rtune smiles upon them. As it is made in alifornia the snow storm never appears enuine. However, it adds in suggesting athos for the youngster during a "blizrd" and he is forced to find shelter. The btitles are many, which, of course, makes e picture look padded.

The chief fault of the offering is in burying ay McAvoy's talents. The star who played izel never has a chance to ring a true note. blonde wig covers her attractive dark hair presumably to keep in character with the ea that all shop girls are blonde. It is an d-fashioned picture in every department id only the sentimentalists will appreciate it.

YOU have to wait for a stirring climax in this western to discover the value of the le. The preceding scenes present the faliar line of action, most of which concerns ranch owner determined to rout the unruly ement bent upon rustling cattle. Direcr Lynn Reynolds has offered nothing novel re. The stunts that Mix contributes have en used before. There are three bandits the melodramatic scheme. It is the star's rpose to rout them individually and colctively. And he uses a lariat to pull over shack in which they are plotting against m.

The hero rides into the picture keeping his entity more or less hidden from the ranch wner and the boys. They never suspect at he is the real owner. And he starts ings a-humming by cleaning out the place, pturing the crooked sheriff, aiding a young y and the latter's father, and riding to the scue of the girl who has been tied to a ee by the arch-villain. The latter, through venge for being discharged, returns to burn e ranch house and barn. This scene proides the thrilling climax—and it is exciting say the least. The fire soon spreads to the adjoining alfalfa and creeps toward the girl. Be it said that the villain perishes in the flames—after which the hero discloses the information that he is the real owner.

The love interest beckons here and there, but the action is so rampant with rough riding and typical western incident that one has no time to pay attention to it. There are no fights on the cliff this time. They all take place on sure ground. "Rough Shod" is not so "tricky" as some previous Mix pictures. It moves rapidly enough for those who like action in the raw. There may be many who might say—"Give us something new." Cattle rustling seems to be the central idea of westerns, and it's time such stories were replaced by an occasional theme carrying a note of novelty.

The Cast

"Clean-up" Sudden.....Tom Mix
Dorothy Clark.....Patsy Ruth Miller
Scott Mason.....Sid Jordan
Rowell Clark.....Bert Sprotte
Ramon Valdez.....Joe Harris
Sheriff Blaisdell.....Al Fremont
Tin Horn Johnnie.....Earl Simpson

Direction by Lynn Reynolds. Photography by Dan Clark.

The Story—New owner of ranch refuses to disclose his ownership of property, his plan being to drive out the unruly elements which rustles cattle across the boundary. The hero rescues a little boy and saves his father and punishes the crooked sheriff and the latter's henchman, the foreman. Saves the daughter from harm but arrives too late to save the ranch house and barn from destruction by fire.

Classification—Western with usual theme—that of cattle rustling. Moderate amount of thrills. Romantic interest.

Production Highlights—Mix's horsemanship again. The fire scenes with Mix riding to rescue of heroine. This bit of action really thrilling. The stunts which show Mix punishing the villains.

Exploitation Angles—The usual scheme of exploitation is good enough for this feature. Tell them that it features a thrilling fire. Cowboy songs sung by a quartette garbed in cowboy regalia will provide a fitting prologue.

Drawing Power—Good for transient trade in downtown houses. Also all houses where westerns in general, and Mix in particular, are popular.

"Taking Chances"

Goldstone (S. R.)—5000 Feet

(Reviewed by Eugene Carlton)

"IT never could happen, but it was a cracking good picture."

A thirty second degree movie fan, elbowing his way out of a crowded theatre where he had witnessed "Taking Chances," thus voiced the status of the production. And his summarization was not far amiss. The picture does abound with improbabilities, but the mere fact that it is plainly evident that neither director nor author made any attempt at a realistic plot, makes it all the more entertaining.

From the time that Richard Talmadge drops from the balcony of a wealthy man's home, where he has just forced his acquaintance upon the daughter of the house, into his car and tries to sell him a book, action aplenty begins. And the physical thrills do not cease until the last foot of film has been run off. A trip to Mexico, as private secretary of the girl's wealthy father, who is the victim of a ruse, affords plenty of opportunities for Talmadge to jump indifferently about the roof of buildings, combat a band of villians, swim ashore from a boat and eventually win himself into the good graces of the father to the extent that he becomes one of the family. The work of the star is by no means ordinary, as some of his feats are "taking chances" in actuality. It is a 50-50 break between comedy and drama with a love story thrown in for good measure.

The Cast

By Himself.....Richard Talmadge
Mildred Arlington.....Zella Gray
Jose Borquez.....Elmer Dewey
James Arlington.....Percy Challenger

Produced by Phil Goldstone. From the story, "Vim, Vigor and Vitality. Directed by Grover Jones. Directed by Leon Metzetti. Photography by Harry Fowler.

The Story—Youth out of college, with desire to be an author, climbs upon balcony of home of wealthy man to talk to daughter. Becomes popular with father and is employed as private secretary. Goes to Mexico with father, who has been induced to go there through a ruse. Hero battles band of villains conspiring against father, wins admiration of both father and daughter by his daring feats and marries the daughter.

Classification—Comedy drama, spiced with physical thrills and containing a love story.

Production Highlights—Interior scene of battle with Mexicans; daring feats in jumping from roofs of buildings to roofs of other buildings and escape from villains on board ship.

Exploitation Angles—The best bet for exploitation lies in the playing up of Richard Talmadge's name and the thrilling feats performed by him.

Drawing Power—Should go good anywhere as the appeal is wide.

"Up in the Air About Mary"

Associated Exhibitors—Five Reels

FOR those who like to go to the "movies" to laugh and not to use their brains, this production will do very nicely. It is a picture "that has everything." That is, the producers have tried to cram into it about everything imaginable. Our censorship board must have been "occupied" with other things when they passed the bathing girl scenes in this one. They are real, honest to goodness, one piece clad beauties of the surf and the audience is given a considerable eye-full. Exhibitors who have difficulty in getting father to accompany mother to the theatre should find this feature an entering wedge in attracting the pater familias.

The picture opens with a number of amusing scenes "down on the farm." We are given views of a pig power milk churner, a chicken donned in trousers, a little porker, all bathed and beribboned, dashing back into the mud hole, some "old swimmin' hole" scenes with more feasts for the eye, supplied by the attractive Louise Lorraine. From the farm the observer is switched to the Hermitage hotel by the sea and there we come in for a goodly number of close-ups of feminine curves. We see the sirens aqua-planing, on the beach, on the rocks and soon they're on the mind. Some amusing scenes in the hotel, including a burlesque on "The Miracle Man," follow and then comes the kidnaping of the heroine and the rescue by the "dumb bell" who rides forth on land and sea a la jackass. Follows then another rescue via "pony blimp" which is not without its thrilling moments.

We were surprised to find our old friend Robert Anderson mixed up in this concoction. Bob should be at better things. Joe Moore is the hero and is called upon to change his character every few moments. He starts out as a farm hand, then he becomes a chauffeur, waiter, Miracle Man, aviator and millionaire in turn. Louise Lorraine is an attractive heroine.

The production is filled with inane absurdities; there is no effort at continuity, but it is not of the type of picture in which one expects to see seriousness.

The Cast

Joe Thornby.....Joe Moore
Mary Lorraine.....Louise Lorraine
Mary's Mother.....Laura Lavarnie
Algernon Emptihead.....Robert Anderson

Story by William Watson. Directed by William Watson. Distributed by Associated Exhibitors through Pathe exchanges.

The Story—Joe works on a farm "because he likes chickens." To the farm comes the attractive Mary, who has run away on the day of her wedding to a "solid ivory" sweetheart. Mary's folks and the groom pursue her to the farm, whence they take her to the seashore. Joe takes the part of the chauffeur, after getting the real driver filled with home brew. At the seashore, Joe takes the part of a waiter and later a fake "Miracle Man." He tells the girl she is in love with a boy she met in the country and that she will eventually be his. Mother arranges to have her daughter kidnapped by a pair of bandits and saved by Algernon. Joe learns of the plot and goes to the rescue astride a mule. Joe is caught in a bad spot and Algernon "gets away" with the girl. But not for long. Joe jumps into a Blimp and rushing to the scene of the wedding, carries the bride from the room and away in the airship. The mother, finding that Joe is in reality a millionaire, is well satisfied.

Classification—A comedy burlesque which "has everything." Made for fun purposes only and not to be taken seriously.

Production Highlights—The bathing girl scenes, which for father's sake, we hope the censors allow to remain. Some amusing scenes on the farm, such as the pig power churner, the chicken with pants and the pig bath. The moments at "the old swimming hole." The kidnapping and rescue scenes at the beach. Some more bathing girl scenes.

Exploitation Angles—This one is light and airy and very timely for summer offering, especially in the summer resort towns. Play up the bathing girl scenes, the comedy, the "down on the farm" fun and the "flapper" background.

Drawing Power—This one should be good for presentation this summer in second class first run houses, towns and summer resorts.

"Divorce Coupons"

Vitagraph—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

INTERESTING departure from time worn stories. "Divorce Coupons" bears the distinction of a modern slant on the subject of men, women and matrimony. It is very entertaining, light society drama, a cast in support of Corinne Griffith who ranks among screen favorites, recognized for their several abilities as well as screen personalities.

Miss Griffith is afforded sufficient room to display added versatility, with a tendency to add laurels to her reputation as a screen actress already in favor. She is winsome and appealing, when, in the beginning of the film, she is seen as the well bred, poverty stricken southern girl. After she has consummated her plan to marry a man for his money, she appears to advantage in becoming apparel, as wife of wealthy New Yorker.

There are cavities in the assembling, the story, therefore, could be told a bit more directly, eliminating tendency to drag, but to the casual seeker of entertainment, this picture is in the running for favor.

Account of the initial locale being in Georgia, there are some lovely exterior views of southern country. The production has required several lavish sets for interior scenes, which are not found wanting.

As the millionaire man-about-town (until captivated by the Georgia girl), Holmes E. Herbert is artistically convincing. He not only looks the part, but plays it. Characters represented by Mona Lisa, Diana Allen, Cyril Ring and Vincent Coleman are, needless to mention, cleverly portrayed. It might have helped to have had more scenes including Mr. Coleman.

The Cast

Linda Catherton.....Corinne Griffith
Roland Bland.....Holmes E. Herbert
Ishtar Lane.....Mona Lisa
Teddy Beaudine.....Diana Allen
Conrad Fontaine.....Cyril Ring
Buddy.....Vincent Coleman

Story by Ethel Watts Mumford. Scenario by William B. Courtney. Directed by Webster Campbell. Produced by Vitagraph.

The Story—About a girl whose aristocratic family has fallen into poverty. She tires of a struggle to keep up appearances, and sets her cap for a man about town. She confides in her chum that she only wishes to marry to relieve trying situation pending alimony. After she has learned to love her husband dearly, letter in which she committed herself, is sent him by her chum's husband, who wishes to destroy their happiness for selfish purposes of his own.

Classification—Society drama; borders on being melodramatic. Of southern and New York locale. Double love interest.

Production Highlights—Scene when the young wife discovers orgy in her own home, with husband in arms of a strange woman.

Exploitation Angles—Play up the fact that instead of being the eternal triangle situation, the story tells of two women who loved one man and what each underwent to prove it.

Drawing Power—Should do well where light melodrama is preferred, especially where Corrinne Griffith has local popularity.

"One Clear Call"

First National—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

FEW pictures have ever been produced that could be recommended to please everybody. Nevertheless, a 90% film depending upon its story, cast and direction rather than spectacular appeal is "One Clear Call."

There is a marked "human-interest" vein, combining humor and pathos in this colorful society drama. It is a decidedly well directed picture, one that account of smoothness in cointinuity leaves the spectator refreshed, rather than tired trying to figure it out.

As an example of improved modern photography, "One Clear Call," might hold its own in a contest, standing a good chance to win. The sets are lavish and designed to carry atmospheric detail, exteriors exceedingly well selected, delivering in the last analysis what is always welcome, a good picture.

It is only fair to mention that the cast is one of the best ever assembled and may be truthfully described as "all star." Milton B. Sills, Henry B. Walthall, Claire Windsor and little Stanley Goethals stand out in that they have leading roles but the admirable quality of their respective characterizations, is ably supported by a splendid company.

There is sufficient melodrama incorporating the mobilizing of the Ku-klux-klan to gratify those looking for thrill and suspense. It is thoroughly clean, carries moral lesson and is relieved with just the right amount of humor at the psychological moment to offset threatening tears.

The Cast

Dr. Alan Hamilton.....Milton Sills

Story by Frances Nimmo Greene. Directed by John M. Stahl. Produced by Louis B. Mayer.

The Story—Henry Garnett, ne're do well son of Southern parents becomes proprietor of a dance-hall resort. Dr. Hamilton, local physician, attends attractive feminine patient, whose identity is unknown. The two become infatuated When convalescent she advises that she has leased a home bordering upon the doctor's sister's estate, where he resides.

When it develops that the mysterious patient is wife of Henry Garnett, Dr. Hamilton, who has done all in his power to save Garnett from approaching death by disease, takes to hard drink. Hamilton operates successfully.

Complications throw the wife of the sick man and the doctor together, again. She is firm in her resolve to return to her husband, when she is relieved of the unfair responsibility occasioned by his death.

Classification—Society melodrama of southe locale. General appeal.

Production Highlights—Mobilizing of K klux-klan and scenes where disreputable cha acter is defended against mob, by one respecte citizen. Scenes holding breathless suspense du ing operation to save life of child.

Exploitation Angles—Do not hesitate to off guarantee of satisfaction. Refer to unusu cast and herald the Ku-klux klan gathering ar approach as second only to "The Birth of Nation."

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Dedicated to the Allied Film Laboratories Association, Inc.

An Organization

Based on fundamental principles essential to the ultimate success of all great industries.

Co-operating to improve the quality of their product to this industry thru standardization.

Instigating technical research for the advancement of the motion picture industry.

Promoting good will and fair treatment among themselves and those they serve.

A Good Work Well Begun

THE Allied Film Laboratories Association offers a commendable example of the unification so greatly needed in this industry. It is not surprising that at the end of two years of unselfish cooperation, we find greater accomplishments than would be normally expected from these laboratories had they functioned entirely independently. It is organization, and organization alone, that will most effectively serve this or any industry.

The members of the Allied Film Laboratories Association are striving to serve the producers and distributors by improving the quality of their work and also by promoting good will and fair treatment.

It is their firm belief that through close cooperation they have materially improved the picture on the screen. Also by the application of the most modern scientific processes additional life has been given to the prints.

The Allied Film Laboratories Association has been the instigator of technical research for the general advancement of the printing and developing of motion picture film. A movement has been inaugurated promoting meetings at which are presented papers and discussions for the betterment of the finished product as turned out by the individuals of this organization.

The urgent need of standardization is realized by the Association. Standardization means the acceptance by all the associated laboratories of the same methods and specifications for use in their work. This will tend to eliminate waste and secure a uniform product for the screen.

A great amount of inefficiency is experienced in this industry through lack of standardization. As a consequence the laboratories are confronted with many problems. For example, the density of individual prints of a picture must be varied. In the larger and most modern theatres the light for projection purposes is nearly unlimited. Therefore the prints used should be of relatively high density. This permits the tonal qualities of the picture to be presented to best advantage. The reverse is true for the small theatre. Here, usually, the picture is projected with a low intensity of screen illumination. A film printed with a heavy density would appear dark.

The members of the Allied Film Laboratories Association probably are the first to work as a commercial organization for the improvement of this industry. The natural result to be expected is an advancement in the quality of their product and a lowering of the final cost.

The Laboratories Association is proving a success because it is based on fundamental principles essential to the ultimate success of all great industries. As the organization's work proceeds into its second year, we find it commanding a much stronger position. The members have become more firmly bound together. This advancement can, in the large part, be credited to the unified efforts concentrated on giving the best possible product to the industry along with the policy of good will and fair treatment among its members, the producers and distributors.

The men behind this organization represent many of our pioneers. It is only through their unselfish determination to push an organization which they consider of vital importance to the industry, that the remarkable advance has been possible.

The Association is headed by Major Tom Evans, President of the Evans Film Manufacturing Company; the Vice-Presidents are H. J. Yates of the Republic Laboratory and L. J. San of the Craftsmen Laboratory; M. E. A. Tucker of the Kineto Company as Treasurer and Allen Lownes of the Cromlow Laboratory, Secretary.

OUR SECOND YEAR

In our second year we are fulfilling our aims by promoting good will and fair treatment to the producers and distributors and by improving the quality of our work.

The Association recognizes the necessity for Standardization and is instigating cooperation of the individual members to this end.

The acceptance of Standards of Specifications and Methods for use by the various laboratories improves the quality of their product.

By giving our individual attention to the quality of our work we have universally improved the picture on the screen.

Prints to be used under different conditions receive the attention necessary to insure complete satisfaction.

The Allied Laboratories Association has proved the determining factor in the advancement of the Motion Picture Industry having for its basis the fundamental principles necessary for its great future.

A Standard Density in the Printing of Motion Picture Film

Paper Presented at Meeting of Allied Film Laboratories Association

By Dr. Wm. E. Story.

WE are herewith reprinting a talk by Dr. William E. Story, Jr., of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers given at a banquet of the Allied Film Laboratories Association, held at the Hotel Astor, February 1, 1922.

The Laboratories Association is encouraging the advancement of the standardization of the methods and specifications used throughout this industry.

Dr. Story outlined in some detail the great possibilities open to this industry along these lines.

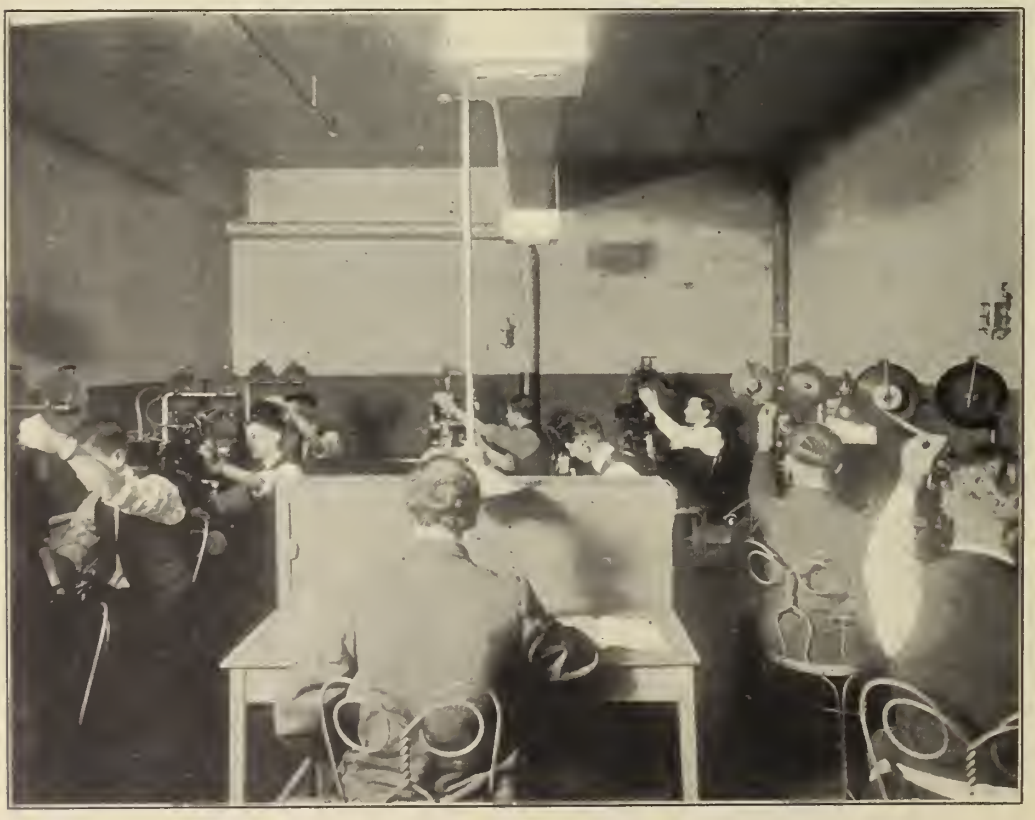
GENTLEMEN: I think I had better confess at the outset that my motives in coming here tonight are purely selfish. The Society of Motion Picture Engineers has directed its Committee on Standards to report upon the desirability and feasibility of a standard density in the printing of motion picture film. When then, I was given this opportunity of meeting the members of the Association of Allied Film Laboratories, I at once welcomed the occasion as offering means of collecting the opinions of that group of men most familiar with the most interested in this particular phase of the motion picture process. I come not as one bringing information, but as one seeking knowledge: a collector and tabulator of ideas, not an originator of them; and if some of the things I may say seem to show an opinion already formed, I assure you, gentlemen, that the formation is so recent and of such an unfinished nature as to be easily subject to revision

Fundamental Units

There are many kinds of units. The fundamental units of length, mass and time are of such vital importance in all human relations that the governments of all civilized countries of the world have taken the matter of standardizing these quantities into their own hands. It is, of course, much to be regretted that all countries have not the same standards. This is a condition that everyone now wishes had long ago been corrected. Unfortunately, however, the more the need arises for a uniform standard and system of measuring, the more machinery has been made according to the old standards and the greater the loss entailed in a change. Accordingly, we in this country waste yearly a tremendous amount of time in calculations with our cumbersome system of weights and measures, for lack of the courage to accept a larger loss once and for all. Everyone wishes to pass this loss along one more generation. So the evil continues.

There are a great many units which are, by definition, determined when these three fundamentals are once fixed: such, for example, as the units of volume, velocity, and inertia. Each branch of science has built up a still more complicated system of units, more or less convenient, in which it measures those quantities specially belonging to it. Some of these units are chosen arbitrarily and the others in turn derived from these as, for example, the unit magnetic pole is defined in terms of electric current and length. The actual size of these "special" units, if I may so designate them, is determined by common agreement among those most interested in their use There was no theoretical necessity for the adoption of the resistance of a meter of mercury one millimeter in cross-section, at a given temperature and pressure, as the value of an ohm. A silver bar of the same size might have been chosen and would have served as well on theoretical grounds—or the mercury column could have been twice as long or had twice the area. It was simply that the British Association decided arbitrarily on this particular standard, and so good did this seem to the electrical world, and so great was the prestige of the British Association, that this mercury column became the standard ohm.

Arbitrary Standards



In this same way engineering bodies have chosen certain arbitrary units in terms of which their measurements are made. Each of these units must have a standard with which it can be directly compared; or its numerical value must be given in terms of some other standard of this branch of engineering, or of some standard already well established. Examples of such arbitrarily chosen standards can be found in every branch of engineering. We need mention but one as illustration—the standard gauge in use among railroads. I think I am right in saying that the majority of those best able to judge now think it would be better if this standard were larger, but again, so great a loss would a change involve that it seems at present out of the question. This illustrates the need of the greatest care and foresight in the establishing of engineering standards.

The establishment of such standards is one of the prime reasons for the existence of engineering bodies, and, I might add, one of their greatest sources of dissension. The bitter controversies waged about those dimensions fixed long ago, have been forgotten in the convenience and harmony that a satisfactory universal standard invariably brings. So we now, in our effort to standardize, should not be too much influenced by the objections of a small minority At the same time, we must never lose sight of the incalculable injury that would be caused by the selection of a standard dimension that is now, or will soon become, unsatisfactory.

This Industry's Opportunity

The motion picture industry has perhaps the least excuse of any branch of applied science for not obtaining and using satisfactory standards. There is no engineering line, except perhaps railroading, in which the same elaborate and accurately cut product passes through as many different and independent processes as does the motion picture film; and often no two of these processes are controlled by the same concern. Not only is the film manufactured by one company, taken by another, developed and printed by a third and used by a fourth, but the theatres can use any one film but a short time to advantage. Accordingly, a circulating system is essential. This, again, is the strongest of reasons for having the film interchangeable. It is to be regretted that the dimensions adopted in America do not agree exactly with those of the English as adopted by the Incorporated Association of Kinematograph Manufacturers, tho both standards can be run on the same machine.

At present, then, there is thorough cooperation between the various branches of the industry with respect to the size of the film used. There are two other factors, however, that if not as necessary of standardization, should not be left out of consideration entirely. These two things are average density of negative, and contrast, and it is the investigation of these two properties of the film in which we are at present particularly interested.

Our Present Method

I believe it is now the universal custom to make a number of prints of different densities from each negative film, and from the examination of these to choose the time of exposure of the final print. To one unfamiliar with the technique of printing, this method would seem to have objections It is obviously impossible that the judging be carried on under the same conditions as those under which the film will be used, since theatres differ so much in the screen and auditorium illumination, in the size and distance of the picture and in many other ways that will affect the appearance of the screen. Apart from any difference of opinion among the judges, an allowance must be made for the different conditions obtaining in the final projection. I have it on good authority that sometimes eight times the intensity of illumination is used for judging as is found on the average theatre screen. I know that many prints are judged by holding them up to the sky or in front of a screen illuminated by daylight. Such surroundings and illumination will change so much during a few hours, or even minutes, as to cause serious doubt as to the reproducibility of results obtained by such methods. In any event it would seem quite impossible to make sufficient allowance for such "abnormal" methods of viewing a film.

Need of Specific Valves

The only obviously accurate way of determining that density of film that "looks" the best is to decide, first of all, upon some specific value of the various factors that go to determine the appearance of a picture in a theatre.

The average values of these factors as found at present might be selected as standard, or some arbitrary values might be chosen, with the expectation of the theatre gradually conforming to these standards or making allowance for the departure they find necessary. Prints selected under these conditions would represent, apart from individual judgment, the proper printing of the negative in question for a theatre complying with the standards selected.

There are, of course, great objections to this method of judging films. Apart from the trouble and time required, a theatre is necessary Again, the length of film that must be printed to each density for trial is considerably greater than at present, and perhaps the difficulty of comparing different trials, run successively as they would probably be, might be great.

These are doubtless some of the difficulties that have prevented the adoption of standard in printing. And to balance all this trouble an expense, what is the gain—an added ease in th determination of the amperage necessary fo projection, with a little lower allowance for th over-dense film; slightly more assurance agains the flaring out of the thin film; a little mor uniformly successful picture.

If you will allow me, I shall read a part of paper presented before the last meeting of th Society of Motion Picture Engineers on th printing of film.

The one absolute essential for a print is tha detail necessary for the understanding of th picture must be present on the screen. Ob viously this detail cannot appear on the scree unless corresponding detail exists in the posi tive film.

Sufficient Contrast Needed

Now detail exists in a picture only throug contrast, and, in the case of monochrome through density contract. It is true that detai depends also on contrast gradient, that is, o the width of the strip through which one den sity fades into another, as well as upon the dif ference in the two densities. The width of thi strip depends, however, on the sharpness of th negative. With this the present discussion ha nothing to do; it deals simply with the printing of a given negative.

The first step in the solution of the problem is, then, to have sufficient contrast in the necessary parts of the picture. By "necessary" is meant those parts necessary for the understanding of the picture

Characteristics of Positive

Whether or not the contrast will be sufficient, will depend, apart from the contrast of the negative, on the slope of the characteristic curve of the positive film. Since this slope is a maximum at one point and but slightly less than this through a considerable range[1] (the so-called "region of correct exposure"), falling off then more rapidly to zero for exposures below and above this region, the positive must for maximum contrast be printed such a length of time that every part of interest has an exposure in or near this region. If there is sufficient contrast in a particular area of the negative, the time of printing may depart considerably from that of the region of correct exposure for this area. If there is but slight contrast, then any under or over-exposure may lessen the contrast beyond the limit of eye sansitivity. If the contrast in the negative is too low, satisfactory detail will be impossible for any exposure, unless in some way the slope of the characteristic curve can be increased. Knowing the characteristic curve of the positive film the latitude of exposure for the necessary contrast of each part of the film can then be determined, and those exposures which all parts have in common, represent the latitude of the whole picture.

That the time of exposure shall lie within these limits is a necessity; but for the great majority of films there is a wide range of exposure that satisfies this condition. Are there any other conditions it is desirable to fulfill?

Apparent Contrast

So far the physical or objective contrast alone of the screen picture has been considered. The subjective or apparent contrast is naturally that of most interest. This depends not only upon the physical contrast but also upon the actual quantity of illumination. If this illumination is of too low a value, the physical contrast would not seem as great as it would if more light entered the eye.[2] In other words, unless there is sufficient light on the screen, full benefit of the physical contrast will not be obtained. Accordingly, since the light on the screen is proportional to the transmission factor of the film, if the source and the optical system are not such as to put sufficient light on the screen through a film printed to maximum contrast, then a decrease in density will perhaps give a greater apparent conutrast, though a smalier physical one. Though too much light decreases the apparent conutrast also, this condition is so rare in motion picture projection as to be of little interest.

Eye-strain would probably be reduced to a minimum if the eyes were required to change their adaptation level as littlc as possible. The eye-strain is often quite noticeable when a change is made from a dark title to a light picture, such as a cartoon, and becomes really painful when in the midst of a dark scene the film breaks. The continual adjustment of eye sensitivity necessary with films as printed at present, would be done away with if every film had the same average transmission. Titles at present transmit far less light than the majority of scenes. They are printed dark to give great contrast between the white letters and the black ground. It is a question as to whether the ease of reading thus obtained is not more than neutralized by the effort to adjust the eyes for the change in illumination. The illusion of darkness and blinding light are desirable at times to obtain "effects," and the sudden transition to a lower or higher level of illumination could probably be made far more marked if all scenes in which it was not desired to call attention to the change in illumination, were printed the same average density.

Still another thing that should be considered in timing the exposure of positive film is that the projection apparatus of theatres is illumination with the average run of film as now printed. Any wide departure of future standard densities from the present average film density may involve a hardship to some theatres, though probably only to those having at present a low screen illumination.

Exposures by Definite Rule

These considerations would make it seem advisable to have some universal means of determining the time of exposing positive film that would enable each laboratory to expose its film according to some definite rule of density. If then all laboratories adopted the same rule and the same numerical values, each theatre could arrange its projection and general illumination to get the maximum clearness and minimum eye-strain for all pictures, thus contributing materially to the comfort of its audience.

To find out, if possible, about what such a rule for printing might be, twenty strips of positive prints from as many different negatives were obtained from a prominent motion picture laboratory. Each strip consisted of a number of sections, each section having a different time of exposure. The section having what was regarded by the expert judge as the "correct" ex-credit is due the pioneer in this particular branch. Mr. Dintenfass, president and owner of the National Film Laboratory of Hudson Heights, N. J., entered the motion picture industry when it was still in its infancy and has the honor of having started the first commercial laboratory at Eleventh Avenue and Forty-third Street, New York City.

Mr. Dintenfass has been thoroughly educated in all the various phases of this industry. He has been an exhibitor, producer, distributor and laboratory owner. He states that he was the first independent film producer in this country. Also, that when the famous Motion Picture Patents case came up years ago, the entire matter centered around him.

Mr. Dintenfass further states that he has studied the motion picture industry from all its vantage points—as an exchange man, producer, exhibitor, distributor and laboratory man and feels the great possibility of the industry. He prides himself on the vast numbers of friends in this field and takes a great interest and pride in his laboratory in Hudson Heights.

Film Developing Laboratory's Policy

The Film Developing Laboratory is one of the laboratories that has had a rapid rise to success due to the constant attention the officers and department heads have given the needs of the trade.

The officers have made it their policy to assure the trade that a promise by the Film Developing Laboratory is "law." From the number of friends and the volume of business that has constantly poured in at all times, it would appear that the trade appreciates the value of this policy.

Cromlow Built Up Business Under Bold Slogan

In the production of motion pictures, the work of the laboratory where the negative is developed and commercial prints made, is of paramount importance. The best negative can be spoiled in printing and frequently a poor or only fair negative can be so handled and treated as to produce good results. Infinite care must be given to the details required in work of this kind, and it is not to be wondered at that results obtained are not always what the directors and producers aspire to.

The Cromlow Film Laboratories have built up their business under the bold slogan "We never Disappoint." Anyone acquainted with motion picture production knows how difficult it is to live up to such a slogan in the printing and developing of motion pictures, and also in getting the product out on time according to promise. Cromlow is a commercial laboratory, doing business for many of the best known motion picture producing companies and for several of the Departments of the United States Government, and seeking the trade of all who require expert specialized individual service.

"Major" Evans Celebrates Fifteenth Year

Thomas Evans, known to many of his intimates as Major Tommy, and known to many hundred others as the president of one of the largest laboratories in the industry, the Evans Film Mfg. Company, will soon celebrate his fifteenth year in the laboratory end of the motion picture business.

Mr. Evans is, perhaps, one of the pioneer laboratory men in the East. He established his company in 1907 with but a meager equipment that could turn out a mere few thousand feet a day. This unit has grown into a plant that now calculates its capacity in the million of feet. While it is situated in New York City, where real estate is very high.

Mr. Evans also served during the war, and was one of the very few men in the industry who attained a commission higher than cap-

During the recent formation of the Allied Film Laboratories, which is comprised of the major portion of independent laboratories of the country, Mr. Evans was one of the prime movers and organizers. To-day he is president of that association. Also in the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry which is presided over by Mr. Hays, Mr. Evans was selected to act as chairman of the Laboratory Division.

The policy of the Evans Laboratories can be summed up in a few words as they were expressed recently by a man who had been recommended to Mr. Evans, when he said: "I was told to come to you with my negative, and that you would take a personal interest in it."

Mr. Evans is constantly pounding home to his employees the personal interest phase of his policy of conducting his business.

Corcoran Film Tanks Universally Known

The equipment used in a laboratory is of the utmost importance both with respect to the quality of the work as well as the efficiency of the plant.

Mr. Corcoran of the Corcoran Film Tanks Company realizes the importance of the laboratory equipment and has spent a great amount of time in perfecting his product.

The name Corcoran is one of the best known in American Laboratories as almost every laboratory of any size uses the Corcona Tank.

The tanks are specially constructed at the large Corcoran factory in New Jersey where Mr. Corcoran, the owner, specializes in furnishing a high grade product and service to the laboratories.

Kineto's New Laboratory

Up at Urban Institute at Irvington-on-Hudson, the new plant of the Kineto Company of America and the Urban Motion Picture Industries, Inc., there has just been completed one of the finest of film laboratories.

With a finely equipped personnel under the direction of Stanley Hollebone and Abe Heller, and a physical equipment that is the best that money and experience could create, the Urban factory has a laboratory that is extremely efficient.

The laboratory's capacity is in excess of 2,000,000 feet a week, and this stupendous output can be accomplished at a minimum of expenditure, because the production machinery is all of the most modern labor-saving type.

In an interview with Mr. Hollebone, he explains the working of the automatic developing machines from the time the film is received from the printing machines.

"A great feature has been installed in this machine to prevent waste, should the film break in any operation. This is by a series of "elevators," one at the start of the machine and the other situated between the washing tanks and the dryer. Should a break occur in the drying machine, it will cause a bell to ring, automatically the "elevator" containing about 50 feet of film will gradually rise giving time for the operator to repair the film but at the same time not affecting the working of the other operations."

The plant is located 22 miles from New York, high on the banks of the Hudson River, in a perfectly clean and dustless atmosphere.

The power plant is contained in the factory itself and assures uniformity at all times. No coal is burned; only oil, another help to perfect cleanliness. The plant has its own private water supply, as well as a supply from the municipal works.

The Kineto Company's Laboratories are equipped with the latest Duplex machines.

posure, was marked with a notch in the side of the film. The light passing through these different prints was then measured by allowing the light from a constant source to shine through the film into a photoelectric cell. The galvanometer deflections, very closely proportional to the illumination, are given in the table. It should be noted, however, that the sensitivity of the cell was lowered for columns IV, V, and VI, in order to read the deflections on the scale.

The films are arranged in the order of total light transmitted for correct exposure, as shown in Column V. The measurements of each correctly exposed section are given in columns V, X, XI and XII. A frame differing from this in exposure by two steps lighter was also measured and noted in columns IV, VII, VIII and IX, and by two steps darker in columns VI, XIII, XIV and XV.

Columns VII, X and XIII give the readings when a 1/16" opening in a mask was put over the highest light in which detail was desirable; columns VIII, XI and XIV, when over the darkest shadow requiring detail; and columns IX, XII and XV, the square of the product of the two columns immediately preceding each. The geometric rather than the arithmetric mean might be chosen to represent the average light through the film, since contrasts are judged largely by differences of illumination relative to total illumination rather than by absolute differences. The logarithms of the values in columns IX, XII and XV are then inversely proportional to the arithmetric mean of the densities.

An examination of the table has so far failed to show any method of selection or comparison by which the light transmitted by the different films gives an indication as to the proper time of exposure. Columns IV, V and VI overlap to such an extent that the exposure can not apparently be judged from the total quantity of illumination passing through a frame. Columns VII, X and XIII, and columns VIII, XI and XIV show that there is a great variation in the light passing through the lightest and darkest points of interest. Nor does either the geometric mean of the light (columns IX, XII and XV) or the arithmetric mean (not calculated throughout), show any regularity from which time of printing could be foretold. The subjects give no indication, except that the two consisting of titles allow but little light to pass.

The assumption throughout these tests has been that the so-called "correct" exposure was, in reality, the most desirable, though it is evident from the readings that some, if not all, of those qualities mentioned above as theoretically advantageous, are lacking. Certain it is that, by the present method of judging film density, but little account has been taken of the fact that scenes are never run singly, but are links of a long chain; and it is the result of the whole series of prints by which the performance is to be judged—not by the excellence of any single part. The brightness of a picture for best effect, depends largely upon the adaptation level of the eye when the picture is presented, if the scene is of short duration, as so many now are. For long scenes the eye will adjust itself to any level within wide limits. It is, then, impossible to know how bright a picture will appear unless we know, among other things, how bright was the picture that immediately preceded it on the screen. This brings us to the conclusion that all the present tests, which take account of nothing but the individual film, if not entirely meaningless for short scenes, at least leave out of account one of the most important factors that go to make a proper film density.

All of this, gentlemen, sounds most unorthodox, but these are the questions that are coming into men's minds more and more as the motion picture industry grows; for no business can reach the colossal proportions of the motion picture business and can be kept so constantly before the public, without attracting minds of every kind to it and its problems. You may say "things cannot be improved enough to pay for the cost of improvement," but this statement will not stand without proof. Real evidence of an experimental nature must be brought forward to show whether improvement can or cannot be made.

Joseph Depew on Location

Joseph Depew, the prominent child actor, whose services are much in demand, is working in Maine on the exteriors for "Timothy's Request." This is one of Kate Douglas Wiggins' best known stories and is being picturized by Dirigo Films under the direction of Sidney Olcott. The part is ideally suited to Joe and gives the capable youngster an opportunity to display his talent.

Yosemite Setting For "The Siren Call"

Report comes from Yosemite Valley where Irvin Willat is making his production "The Siren Call" for Paramount, with Dorothy Dalton featured, to the effect that he will return shortly to the studio to complete the film. The beautiful scenery of the Yosemite has afforded some wonderful backgrounds for the Alaskan story by I. E. Nash which was adapted by the author and Philip Hurn. Mitchell Lewis has a prominent part and David Powell is leading man.

First Nat'l Films on "Exceptional List"

Three First National attractions are singled out for special commendation in the March-April-May issue of "Exceptional Photoplays," the official organ of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. The pictures are "Sonny," starring Richard Barthelmess; "One Clear Call," a John M. Stahl production; and "Fools First," produced by Marshall Neilan.

Exploitation Tie-Up for Metro Picture

As an aid to the exploitation of both the novel and the Metro photoplay now being made for it, the publishers of Richard Washburn Child's "The Hands of Nara," are having a new packet printed for the book which will be distributed to booksellers throughout the country. The new cover will have a picture of a scene from the photoplay with text as follows: "Clara Kimball Young, in 'The Hands of Nara,' by Richard Washburn Child. Produced by Samuel Zierler Photoplay Corporation. Distributed by Metro Pictures Corporation."

"Bill and Bob" Series Interest Campers

Exhibitors playing Pathe's "Adventures of Bill and Bob" series report that the opening of the camping season is resulting in an unusual amount of interest being shown in these pictures, which are built around the experiences of two boy trappers. Boys are said to be particularly enthusiastic over the "Bill and Bob" pictures now being shown, and theatre owners report they are often approached by prospective boy campers for additional information on the details shown in the films.

Katherine MacDonald in "The Lonely Road"

Katherine MacDonald's next starring vehicle for Associated First National release is to be "The Lonely Road," an original story from the pen of Charles A. Logue, who has written two other recent McDonald film stories.

The picture will be directed by Tom Forman, who was responsible for the direction of "The Woman Conquers" and who is now directing Miss McDonald in "White Shoulders."

"Determination" Goes Well in Providence

The deluxe photo drama "Determination" surprised the exhibitors, the independent exchangemen and in fact all the people of the industry in New England by playing to capacity houses last week at E. F. Albee's Victory theatre, Providence, Rhode Island, despite the hot weather and strong opposition, according to word from the Lee-Bradford offices.

The Lee-Bradford Corporation advises that the New England rights has been disposed of for this production and will announce the purchaser within the coming week.

Paramount to Establish Scandinavian Offices

NEW and increased distribution facilities for Paramount Pictures in Sweden, Norway and Denmark are provided for in a contract just signed by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, with Carl York and W. W. LeMat, two prominent film importers and distributors in the Scandinavian territory. The contract becomes effective August 21st, and calls for the releasing of eighty Paramount Pictures during the coming year.

Exchanges will be opened in Stockholm, Copenhagen and Christiania at once and distribution will be begun under a plan in which Ingvald C. Oes, Scandinavian representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will have an active part.

Jessen's Studio News by Wire

FIRST NATIONAL

Constance Talmadge and her company sailed for San Francisco to film Chinatown scenes for "East Is West."

Frank Lloyd is directing Norma Talmadge in "The Voice From The Minaret." Eugene O'Brien is playing opposite Miss Talmadge. The latter will next make "The Garden Of Allah."

Jack Coogan, Sr. has written the next story for Jackie. E. Mason Hopper will direct.

Katherine McDonald's next is titled "Money, Money, Money." It is by Larry Evans and Tom Forman will direct.

LASKY

George Fitzmaurice has finished "To Have And To Hold."

"The Ghost Breaker" company, with Wally Reid, Lila Lee and others, under the direction of Al Green, are at San Diego for scenes showing a hydroplane pursuing an ocean liner.

William De Mille starts "Clarence" June 22.

George Melford begins "Ebb Tide" July 3.

In production are: "On The High Seas," direction Irving Willat, starring Dorothy Dalton; "The Old Homestead," direction James Cruze, all-star; De Mille's "Manslaughter," "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew," Sam Woods production, starring Gloria Swanson; "Pink Gods," all-star.

UNIVERSAL

"The Rainbow Chaser," under the direction of Harry Pollard, starring Herbert Rawlinson, is in production with Harriet Hammond playing the lead.

The Hoot Gibson Company is filming "Misfit Turns Chaperon" at Victorville. Nat Ross is directing. Edna Murphy has been engaged as leading woman.

Marjorie Daw has been engaged for the lead for an all-star cast for refilming "The Long Chance," under the direction of Jack Conway.

Von Stroheim's next will have the principal scenes laid in Vienna. Sets are being built.

METRO

Marion Fairfax has been engaged to write an original for Billie Dove, who begins work next week in the first subject "Country Love" under the direction of Emile C. Hautard. Lloyd Sheldon is also writing an original for Miss Dove.

Bernard McConville has written the continuity for "Quincy Adams Sawyer," a Sawyer and Lubin production of a new series. Clarence Badger is to direct. Barbara Lamar has been engaged for the lead.

Cullen Landis, John Harron, Edward Connelly, Arline Pretty and Bruce Guerin are in the cast for Dana's "Page Tim O'Brien." Harry Beaumont will direct.

Rex Ingram has completed all scenes for "Black Orchids." Editing will require a month.

Louis Gottschak has completed the musical score for "The Prisoner of Zenda."

Douglas Fairbanks' Robin Hood company has gone to Verdugo Hills for mountain exteriors.

Mary Pickford has finished all "Tess" exteriors and is beginning on the three final interior sets of the production.

The Mission Film Company will next make "The Shepardess And The Chimney Sweep," from the Anderson fairy tale. Clarence H. Geldert will direct.

Finis Fox is directing the Cosmopolitan Productions' seven-reel feature "The Bishop Of The Ozarks," by Congressman Milford W. Howard, who will appear in the title role.

Perfect Pictures Corporation is making "The Century Flower" with an all-star cast. Nat Deverich is directing.

Selznick Will Produce Wm. MacHarg Story

Myron Selznick has purchased the motion picture rights to the story "Wine" by William Mac Harg, which originally appeared in Hearst's International magazine. "Wine," despite its name, is a modern story and will be produced for the screen as a special production and with an all star cast.

In the schedule of production "Wine" will follow "The Easiest Way" and "Rupert of Hentzau," soon to be made on the Coast.

Norman Taurog Making Century Comedies

Norman Taurog, Larry Semon's former director and co-author is working on his first comedy for Century. With him as associate director is Gill Pratt, former Star Comedy director and comedy man of note. Both Taurog and Pratt are working together on Johnny Fox's second starring vehicle, the title of which has not yet been decided.

"Still Going Strong" New Comedy Title

"Still Going Strong" is the title that has been given the first comedy on the new series built up around the adventures of the redoubtable Fercy and Ferdie Hallroom.

The comedies, based on H. A. MacGill's cartoons of the Hallroom Boys, are three years old—and they are literally "Still Going Strong."

ITEMS OF THE EXCHANGES AND THEATRES

CANADA

The first presentation of Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm" has been scheduled for Montreal, Quebec, where a special indefinite run is to be started at the Princess theatre immediately after the close of the winter vaudeville season in June. Prices arranged for this engagement range up to $1.10.

The St. Denis theatre, Montreal, one of the largest theatres in Canada, was engaged by the employes of the Montreal Tramway Company for the week of May 28 for the presentation of the special picture, "The New Disciple." A feature of the week was the appearances of the Tramway band of forty pieces, made up of employes of the local street railway company. The proceeds of the engagement were devoted to the employes' benevolent fund.

The first important public screening of "Foolish Wives" was offered at the Toronto Pantages theatre, starting with the week of June 5. No advance in admission prices was made by Manager Miller, and the much-discussed feature was shown along with five acts of vaudeville and short film subjects.

The Winnipeg branch of the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Limited, has retained the Weeks' silver cup, won last year by Winnipeg, for the best showing of any of the company's exchanges for Paramount Week in Canada. The Winnipeg officer is Carl Weeks. To celebrate the victory, Manager Weeks entertained his entire staff at a theatre party in the Pantages theatre, which was followed by a supper and dance in the exchange offices. A guest was J. O'Neill of Toronto, chief auditor of the company, who was accompanied by Mrs. O'Neill.

V. Armand, chief operator of the Capital theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, attended the twenty-second annual convention of the I. A. T. S. E. at Cincinnati, Ohio, after which he journeyed on to New York, where he visited the Fox and Famous-Lasky studios and also several theatre equipment supply houses.

Judgment in a mortgage action brought some time ago by the Bryson Estate, Limited, against Loew's Ottawa Theatre, Limited, Ottawa, Ontario, was foreclosed at the Ottawa court house on May 25. The amount of principal owing to the Bryson Estate, Limited, was shown to be $150,000, and unpaid interest amounted to $4,500. The foreclosure was signed by John Bishop, K. C., the local master. Though the mortgage has been legally foreclosed, the Loew theatre interests have been allowed five weeks' grace in which to redeem the mortgage. T. C. Bate, vice-president of the Loew company in Ottawa, declared that he had no statement to make regarding prospective developments or plans for the local theatre.

Nikitas Dipson, owner of the Family and Grand theatres in Batavia, N. Y., was arrested last week by State troopers, charged with reckless driving in that big Cadillac limousine of his. The State trooper claims that Mr. Dipson was gliding through the village of Stafford, N. Y., at a speed of 50 miles an hour. The justice before whom the theatre owner was arraigned, released him on $25 bail. Mr. Dipson denied the trooper's statement, saying that he was accompanied by his wife and children and had no reason for operating his automobile in a reckless manner.

Herman Lorence, manager of the Bellevue in Niagara Falls, N. Y., put on a novel musical stunt last week when he presented Carle Burch, local baritone in the prologue from "Il Pagliacci," accompanied by the Ampico reproducing piano.

A verdict of $912.88 was returned in Supreme Court in Buffalo by the jury that heard the trial of the action brought by the Victoria theatre to collect burglary insurance from the New Amsterdam Casualty Company of New York City. The theatre, which is at Grant and Ferry streets, was robbed October 13 last by two men. A claim was filed, but the insurance company refused payment because a watchman was not in the place at the time.

L. R. Lipowitz has opened the new Family theatre in Lackawanna, N. Y. The house, which will be devoted to motion pictures, has a seating capacity of 450 seats. Two Simplex machines have been installed. The program will be changed daily.

Members of Boy Scout troop 24, of Binghamton, N. Y., were the guests of H. M. Addison, of the Binghamton theatre last week. The theatre treat came as an award for taking second honors in the health and safety day parade in connection with the children's week program.

Thomas Joy, formerly a member of the Metro sales staff in Buffalo, will manage the Hippodrome in Carthage, N. Y., when it reopens July 1.

Judge John W. Schatt, owner of the Gowanda Opera House, is confined to a Buffalo hospital with serious illness.

SPOKANE

A pre-view of "Very Truly Yours," the film version of "Cinderella with a Difference," a scenario by Hannah Hinsdale, Spokane writer, was shown at the Class A last week after 11 p. m. to a number of the author's friends here.

"Foolish Wives," Universal's stupendous $1,000,000 production, opened Saturday at the Casino.

Other show bills at Spokane theatres of the current week included "Beauty's Worth," at the Clemmer; "Three Live Ghosts" at the Liberty; Frank Mayo's last picture story, "Tracked to Earth," at the Class A; "All Dolled Up," with Gladys Walton as the flapper queen, at the Lyric; "The Yellow Typhoon," with Anita Stewart, at the Majestic.

Mark G. Keller, for the last five years manager of a chain of theatres in San Francisco, has just accepted the position here as general manager of the Stilwell theatre interests in Spokane.

SAN DIEGO

The Superba theatre was turned over to children on the morning of Saturday, May 20, when a radio film, "Build It Yourself," was presented under an arrangement with the Evening Sun. An elaborate program was prepared by G. A. and Kent Bush, proprietors of the theatre, including special music by Organist Paul Maiss. By use of the radiophone and magnavox the singing by Mrs. Maiss three blocks away was given as a surprise number.

E. J. Phillips, who opened the California theatre in Brawley several years ago, died in Westmoreland, Cal., recently, aged 50 years.

Claude K. Webster, well known local musician who has played at several motion picture houses here, has taken a position as head of the orchestra at The Barn, a suburban dance cafe.

CINCINNATI

A new organization, to be known as the Stage and Screen Scribes of America, has been formed by the theatrical writers of the Cincinnati daily newspapers, press representatives of the theatres and motion picture producers, and theatre managers. The association will be limited to those who write upon theatrical topics. The following officers were elected to serve for the year 1922: William S. Goldenburg, president; Albert Thompson, vice-president; Myrtle Miles, secretary; Elmer Dressman, treasurer; Wm. G. Stiegler, Carl B. Adams, Lew Heck, Charles O'Neal and Bob Newhall, directors.

Cleve Adams, Cincinnati manager of the Universal Film Company, has appointed N. Schechter as publicity manager for the district controlled from the local office. Mr. Schechter was formerly in charge of the publicity for Ascher's Capitol theatre.

The Capitol Unit Orchestra, with Theodore Hahn, Jr., as director, has been retained by the Libson interests which have taken over the control of Ascher's Capitol theatre.

Prices at the Capitol will be the same as those at the Walnut and Strand theatres, also controlled by the Libson interests, where lower floor seats are 40 cents and balcony prices 25 cents, including war tax.

Newspaper friends of Eugene Quigley, manager of Ascher's Capitol theatre, who will leave Cincinnati to take up managerial duties with the Ascher Brothers in Chicago, tendered him a testimonial dinner at the Business Men's Club. The four daily newspapers of Cincinnati were represented, and Mr. Quigley was presented with a desk set and gold fountain pen.

Clarence Runey, of the Pathe Times-Star moving picture service, "scooped" the world in moving pictures of the Kentucky Derby, won by Morvich. Runey's staff photographers took pictures of the sporting event, which was run a few minutes before six o'clock Saturday evening, and Sunday at noon the pictures were being exhibited at the Walnut and Strand theatres in this city, the first exhibited anywhere.

MINNEAPOLIS

Vitagraph is going to have a new building in Minneapolis at Western avenue and Eleventh street. Construction work is to be started at an early date and the building will be ready for occupancy about the first of August, according to J. M. Duncan, district manager for Vitagraph. The new exchange will be one of the most up-to-date and most modern equipped in the United States according to plans.

On a charge of embezzlement of government funds, John Bergstrom, one time secretary of the United Theatrical Protective League, and former prominent Minneapolis exhibitor, has been arrested. Bergstrom is alleged to have defrauded the government of sums not less than $344 in admission taxes during the latter part of 1920 while operating the Nicollet theatre. An early hearing in the case is expected.

The New Grand theatre, Minneapolis, which was a vaudeville house for many years, changing to musical tab at the beginning of the fall season last year, but was changed to a motion picture house this spring and later devoted to vaudeville, is once more a motion picture house exclusively. The house is featuring the minor first runs with occasional second runs previously shown at other downtown theatres.

Patrons of the Bijou theatre, Minneapolis, want Fatty Arbuckle pictures according to a vote taken recently at that house. The balloting, which extended over three days, showed that out of 1,328 patrons 993 desired the management show the Arbuckle pictures. The referendum was conducted by Manager G. I. Ferry, of the Bijou, who states that no attempt was made to influence the patrons in their voting. An announcement of the balloting was posted in the lobby with the request that patrons place their opinion on the case on cards which were distributed.

The local Famous Players-Lasky exchange is said to have sponsored the voting and according to Sales Manager Frank Marshall, the Bijou referendum is the first of several to be conducted in the Twin Cities.

After being dark for a year, the Calhoun theatre, one of the most beautiful suburban houses in Minneapolis, is soon to be opened as a dance hall by the Finkelstein and Ruben enterprises. Several thousand dollars have been spent in remodeling the Calhoun and it is claimed when finished that it will be the most modern and finest dance hall in the Northwest. Smoking rooms for the gentlemen and retiring rooms for the ladies with a maid in attendance will be provided and everything for the comfort and convenience of patrons will be installed. H. W. Plain, of Chicago, will manage the dance hall, assisted by Bob LaPiner, well known Minneapolitan. Dave Rubinoff, well known Twin Cities orchestra leader, will direct the orchestra. Finkelstein and Ruben will continue to operate the Calhoun.

Despite general poor business "Beyond the Rocks" went over so big at the Pantages theatre, Minneapolis, and the Tower theatre, St. Paul, that it was held over for an additional week's showing at both of these houses.

Patrons at the Strand theatre, Minneapolis, are treated to a radio concert every evening. The set was installed by Manager Charles P. Murphy at a cost of $500. The orchestra and organ numbers are halted each evening while the broadcasted concerts are being received.

WESTERN NEW YORK

Buffalo's large neighborhood houses, the Victoria, Regent, Elmwood and North Park will undoubtedly remain open all summer. They all closed last year.

Betty Blythe was in Buffalo the past week, appearing in person at the new Lafayette Square theatre in connection with the showing of "Fair Lady." She attracted capacity audiences. Manager Fred Shafer played up her "Queen of Sheba," stardom.

The Lincoln Theatre Corporation of Dunkirk, N. Y., has been capitalized at $500,000. The officers are: Henry P. Lally, president; Mark F. Lally, vice president; John J. Walsh, secretary. The new corporation will take over all the theatres in Dunkirk, including the Regent. Drohen avenue and Empire and now is negotiating for two other theatres in western New York cities.

The plan of the corporation is to give Dunkirk a community theatrical corporation. The company has obtained a lease of the Drohen avenue theatre for 15 years and a lease on the Empire, in addition to taking over the Regent. The company also owns the Schweda block in Main street and will be prepared when the city grows to take care of its theatre needs.

The three houses will be operated under one management. The Empire is one of

Harry Dixon, star salesman of the Vitagraph staff, set a new mark for sales last week, when he signed up a record amount of business in the leading houses of western New York. Hot weather means nothing in Harry's life.

R. S. Bendell is now covering the eastern part of the Southern Tier for R-C Pictures corporation. F. J. Shepherd who had been representing the company in the Rochester and Syracuse territory, has resigned. Mike Resnick is now on a tour of Southern Tier cities. The new Lafayette Square Theatre will play "The Glory of Clementina," soon. The R-C office comes into the new Beyer Film building next week, occupying half of the third floor.

W. A. V. Mack, Pathe branch manager; E. M. Hopcraft, Associated Exhibitors' representative, and Bill Wittneben, salesman, made a tour down state last week in the interest of "Grandma's Boy," Harold Lloyd's new five part comedy, which was signed up in a number of the towns. Basil Brady and Louis Schindler, perpetrators of "By Wireless," the new song hit, are becoming wealthy through the big sale of this masterpiece.

They're building a new private office for Tom Brady in the Hodkinson exchange. Some class to this boy. He's also purchased a new Jordan sport model. Business must be looking up. Fenton Lawlor, salesman de luxe on the main line, has also bought a new car. It's a Dort, but Fenton has ambitions. Jack Thomson is now stamping the Syracuse streets for Hodkinson. There's only one cloud on Tom Brady's life just now. He's on jury duty. Peter T. Dana and Frances Karger, bridegroom and bride, respectively, from the home office of Hodkinson, spent their honeymoon in Buffalo and Niagara Falls, calling on their old friend G. M. Farley, local office manager.

H. E. Beecroft has succeeded Jeff Lazarus as exploitation man at the local First National exchange. Jeff has been transferred to Chicago. Mr. Beecroft comes to Buffalo from Gotham. E. J. Hayes, branch manager, had a conference with R. H. Clark in New York last week on the fall product.

Maurice Cohen, formerly in charge of the Nu-Art exchange in Albany, has been engaged by Sydney Samson to represent Grand & Warner in the same territory. Business continues fair at the Buffalo Nu-Art exchange. "Determination" is now being boosted by General Manager Fred M. Zimmerman. It has been booked by the Lafayette Square for July showing. "The Worldly Madonna" will be shown by the same house in August.

William Charles Gehring, formerly assistant manager at the Fox office, is now in charge of the educational department for the same company at the Buffalo and Albany offices. He will have his headquarters in Buffalo. His new duties will commence July 3. O. R. Rieffel, former cashier, is back on the job, following an extended illness. We wouldn't be surprised if he succeeded Mr. Gehring as assistant manager. Construction on the new building at 496 Pearl Street will begin July 1. The new exchange will open about September 15. C. P. Sheehan, district manager, attended the dinner in New York in honor of Senator James Walker.

Harry Warner was in town last week. He was the guest of Walter Hays of the Mark-Strand interests on a tour of the city.

Henry W. Kahn got his first real taste of water recently when he was caught in the flood that followed the cloud burst at Syracuse. Henry got so wet that they had to rush dry clothes to him from Buffalo. It was a unique experience for Henry. He was in one of the marooned trains at the time. Henry never expected to be baptized.

Washington

E. O. SHERWOOD, formerly manager in Washington for Select Pictures, is now city salesman for R-C Pictures.

Fred E. Klein, of the R-C Pictures sales force, has recently returned from a successful trip in Virginia, said that everywhere in the Old Dominion, things looked very bright.

Leo J. Garner, selling for Reliance Film Exchange of Washington, on returning from a tour of the Shenandoah Valley, said that not only was his business good, but that every one had a job in the Valley, that farmers were buying freely and the prevailing impression of theatre owners was that the film business was the last to feel the slump and the last to reflect a business revival.

Ed. M. Ooghe is now with The Empire Film Distributing Company here.

The new Paramount Exchange at New Jersey Avenue and K Street, N. W., is in line with all Paramount buildings, and is one-story, California Mission-Bungalow type.

The other new exchange at Second and K Streets, N. W., is being erected by the Kirby interests, and among others will house Goldwyn and Vitagraph Corporations.

Mr. M. P. Cavanaugh, Assistant Manager at the Washington Fox Film Exchange, is leaving for Chicago, to assume the duties of that position in Fox's Chicago office., being replaced here by George Roberts, formerly with the Cincinnati Exchange, and more recently at the home office of The Fox Corporation.

Miss MacIntosh, formerly with Select Pictures, is now bookkeeper for The Electric Film Corporation.

Mr. J. Howard Beaver, Manager of Electric Film Exchange, returned from an extended motor tour through Pennsylvania and Ohio, last week.

John A. Bachman, Baltimore salesman for Mr. Beaver, was married on June 15 to Miss Margarette Hauf, bookkeeper at his office in Baltimore, also employed by Electric Films, Washington. Their honeymoon is being enjoyed at the Alamac Hotel, Atlantic City.

Earl Taylor, of the Arrow Film Company, Washington, was married to Miss Madelaine Royale of the Electric Exchange, Saturday afternoon, June 17.

Manager Robin, of the Pathe Exchange, following his policy of every salesman a car owner, has spent most of his time on the road throughout this territory, maintaining trade relations with exhibitor and salesman. He owns a custom built Biddle car. He contemplates securing red and gold Pathe rooster emblems, nickel-plated for all cars owned by his staff. He recently made a report to his principals giving as his opinion that Maryland conditions were very good and getting better. As far as personal contact with the trade being his aim, Robin only sees Washington between trips. His motor sales force of Pathe Go-getters follows: Jack Whittle, Davis; Elmore Hunter, Buick; Roy Breitbath, Chevrolet; Fred Steele, Overland; Buck Taylor, Ford; all these cars being secured for business purposes, primarily.

The recent effective operation of the Hoy System and the Arbitration Committee of The Motion Picture Board of Trade in the Washington territory has pleased all factions of the industry since its installation.

Canada

THE Famous - Players Film Service, Limited, Toronto, an Allen exchange organization, is releasing throughout the Dominion the one-reel special which shows the Carpentier-Ted Lewis fight which took place in London, England.

The Alhambra and Domino theatres, Montreal, have been reopened under new management. The Rex theatre, Montreal, has been closed for the summer.

Joe Ledden, former manager of the Victoria theatre, Quebec City, has been appointed manager of the new Papineau theatre, Montreal, by the Independent and United Amusements, Limited, Montreal.

J. P. O'Loghlin of Montreal, president and general manager of the Standard Films, Limited, engaged in releasing the pictures in Canada of the Canadian Releasing Corporation, has announced that two of the company's releases have been sold to the Famous Players Canadian Corporation for presentation in the entire chain of Capitol theatres from coast to coast in the Dominion.

Claude William Bissell and John F. Haines have organized the Canadian Industrial Film Company under a Manitoba charter with head office at Winnipeg, Manitoba. The company proposes to produce industrial, topical, scenic and other releases in the Canadian West.

J. A. Schuberg of Vancouver, former owner of the Province, Gaiety and Bijou theatres in Winnipeg, Manitoba, has arrived in Winnipeg to negotiate an important theatre deal, it is announced. Mr. Schuberg sold the three local theatres mentioned to Jule and J. J. Allen several years ago and then took up permanent residence on the Pacific Coast.

Des Moines

MR. ROY STRAUS, assistant booker at the Pathe Exchange, resigned his position to take a position in Chicago. Miss Esther Frost, who was the booker's stenographer, received the promotion to assistant booker. She celebrated by going on her two weeks' vacation trip. Miss Frost's home is in Des Moines and her vacation will be spent in a visit to Omaha and a trip to the lakes.

The Odion Theatre at Marshalltown will be closed for the month of July for redecorating and will open August 1. Mr. Lavine is manager.

Booth Brothers, of Bell Plain, visited the Des Moines exchanges.

Mr. A. G. Stolte, leader in his class in the First National contest of exhibitors during First National Week, will leave this week for the California coast to be entertained by First National stars and executives at the studios. Nine men are so honored. Mr. Stolte will visit his mother while on the western coast. Mrs. Stolte, who recently returned from California, will not make the trip with Mr. Stolte. Mr. Stolte is acting manager of the Des Moines Theatre.

Nicholas Amos, formerly representative with Universal and Realcraft, is now associated with the Pathe Film Company.

Mr. Plues, manager of the Pathe Film Exchange, took a trip with Mr. Amos, visiting most of the sixteen key cities of Iowa. Getting acquainted with the exhibitors was the purpose of the trip.

With the closing of the Sherman Theatre, Mr. Clarke, who had acted as manager during most of the winter, returned to his home in Topeka, Kansas, and Mr. Hays, who recently was in charge, leaves for Chicago Tuesday. A strike of the orchestra affected business during the past few weeks. The vaudeville and picture program had begun to prove too expensive before the music strike affected business, however. All picture contracts were cancelled, Pathe being most affected.

New Hope Theatre Heralded as Most Beautiful in Southwest

Million Dollar House Having 2,000 Capacity Is Triumph of Elegance

THE new million-dollar Hope theatre recently opened at Dallas, Texas, is heralded as the most beautiful picture palace of the southwest. It has a seating capacity of 2,000 and is a triumph of elegance and beauty, combining all that is most modern in theatre construction. It is operated by the J. D. Williams Amusement Company, incorporated in Delaware, of which Mr. J. D. Williams, general manager of Associated First National Pictures of New York, is president. "Buddy" Stewart, a Dallas boy and recent assistant manager of the New York Capitol, is managing director, Louis Faucher, house manager. Miss Hope Hampton, the first Texas girl to attain stardom, appeared in person and the opening production was "Stardust," the house being named after the picture's star.

The Hope is designed in the Spanish Renaissance period style, a fitting selection for a southern location, with its elegant dignity and softness, combined with bigness of space and sweep. Not a pillar mars the vision, and the lines of the house are perfectly synchronized to the screen. The color tones are cream and tan, with rich red touches in panels and relief work, plaster friezes adorn the walls and balcony front, and the wall bases are of gray marble of soft color. The broad foyer is flanked by grand staircases of Neapolitan marble, rising to the luxurious promenade. At the bases are handsome panels in oil, done by the noted artist, A. Lincoln Cooper. The walls are of gray marble, the severity of which is lessened by rich friezes at the top and the warmer colors of the ceiling with bronze chandeliers. The promenade is richly furnished and equipped with artistic rest rooms for ladies and men's club rooms. No expense was spared in providing luxury and comfort here as in other parts of the house.

The great proscenium arch and stage setting are in harmony with the general scheme, with artistic grille arches on either side. The main curtain is of orange velvet, with gold fringe, and opens and closes on a graceful curving line; the screen curtain is of a light green. From the proscenium arch hangs a green velvet valance with gold bail-fringe, and two Moorish red covers in the center. Stately columns flank the screen, with dainty grilles at the sides.

HOPE Theatre, Dallas, Texas, cost, it is claimed, one million dollars to construct. This is simply one more illustration of the tendency in the large cities, i. e. the construction of the most costly and beautiful buildings. This tendency will put the motion picture industry in greater prominence and will also lend it distinction.

The more theatres of this type that are constructed the more popular will the motion picture become. Theatres of the Class of the "Hope" not only attract the ordinary public but also draw upon a select and discriminating clientele.

The modern theatre in the smaller town does well, in following to a comparative degree, the example set by such houses as the "Hope."

Handsome cane-bottomed seats are used throughout, with a mushroom ventilator under every other one, and the floor is slanted for perfect vision. The theatre has its own refrigerating and heating plants of modern type. The Hope is the seventh theatre in America to install the Wittenmeier washed air cooling system, which changes its 65,000 cubic feet of air every five minutes and keeps 15 degrees below outside temperature.

The projection room is a model, containing three Powers 6B type E projectors, 3 Peerless automatic arc controls, 2 generator sets, stereoptican and spotlights. A specially built Minusa gold fibre screen is used. The stage curtains can be operated from the booth. A modern major switchboard handles the complex light and color combinations.

The patrons of the Hope are assured of good music through the $40,000 Wurlitzer grand unit organ which is played by Cesar Barre, an eminent Belgian organist who achieved notable success at Covent Garden, Albert Hall, and concerts on the continent. The splendid twenty-piece orchestra is led by Graham Harris, until recently concert-master at the Capitol in New York City. Quartettes, soloists, dancers and prologues will furnish other diversion. An art shop and music library are features of the basement.

The slogan of the Hope is "The Pride of Dallas," and it is well chosen, as it is a palace of amusement of which even the greatest city in the world might well be proud. Feature pictures are shown exclusively, with a fine presentation of short subjects and specialties.

This great theatre contributes to the growing prestige of the motion picture, placing it on the high plane which it deserves as an art.

Among those interested in the construction are:

Vollmer & Bergren, decorators, New York.

Finne & Dunne, architects, Houston, Texas.

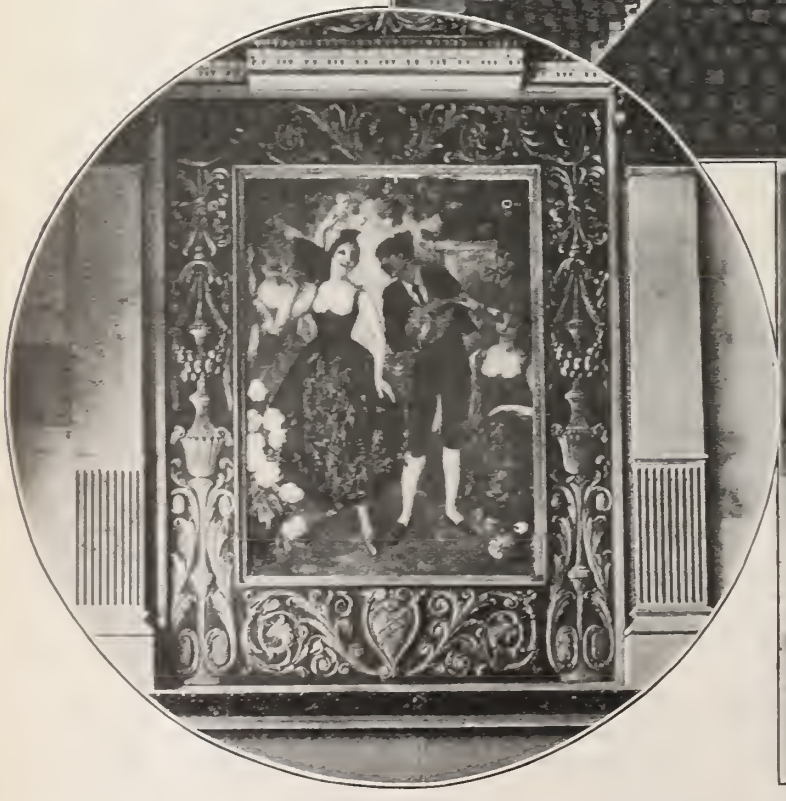
G. D. Hewitt, contractor, Dallas, Texas.

Wittenmeier Mchy. Co., ventilations, Chicago.

A. T. Vick, electrical work, Houston, Texas.

Southern Theatre Supply Co., equipment, Dallas and Atlanta.

John Wanamaker, stage furnishings, New York.—HUTSON.



The new beautiful million dollar Hope theatre, Dallas, Texas, which was dedicated to Miss Hope Hampton, the first Texas girl to attain stardom. These elegant entertainment palaces that are becoming more and more numerous in this country have a decided influence in increasing the popularity of the motion picture. Not only are they added incentive to the average audience but also to a discriminating clientel. Theatres in the smaller towns may well follow this example to a comparative degree and aid in placing the motion pictures on a high plane

The Hope theatre apparently has justly laid claim to the most beautiful in the Southwest. The Hope theatre is designed in the Spanish Renaisance period style, a fitting selection for a Southern location. The auditorium has a seating capacity of 2,000 and is well designed permitting a good view of the screen from every seat. The broad and hospitable lobby, with its graceful marquee presents an inviting front to the house. The oil painting which decorate the foyer give a touch of distinction to the house

Properties of the Component Elements for Projection

Continuation of Motion Picture Projection with Mazda Lamps
by H. H. Madgsick and C. E. Egler, National Lamp Works of G. E. Co.

Plano-Convex Condenser Combination

The beam of light from two plano-convex lenses is very uniform near the lens and this combination is therefore suitable for slide projection. Where it is used both for this purpose and the projection of the film, the usual practice is to have the slide holder fixed in front of the condensers, where it intercepts 15 per cent or more of the light which would otherwise pass through the film aperture. To avoid this unnecessary loss provision should be made for raising or lowering the slide holder away from the condensers, or moving it to one side during the projection of motion picture film.

The plano-convex condenser produces a well defined image of the lamp filament slightly beyond the smallest cross section of the beam, and there is a resultant unevenness of illumination at the narrowest part, where the aperture must be placed for best efficiency. Its success in motion picture projection is therefore dependent on the extent to which the source can be made uniform by filling in the spaces between the coils with coil images from the mirrored reflector. If the reflector is carefully set by precision methods applicable in laboratory rather than in theater practice, and certain source condenser and condenser-aperture spacings are employed, it is possible to obtain with plano-convex condensers screen illumination values as high as those obtained with the prismatic condenser, with a tolerable uniformity of screen illumination. But a slight deviation from this exact adjustment of the mirrored reflector results in marked vertical streaks on the screen and the projected picture is unsatisfactory. Table 1 shows spacing distances for the plano-convex condensers which are at present of interest only for laboratory application. They do not hold true with the method of reflector adjustment ordinarily employed in theaters, namely, that of observing pinhole images of the filament on the fire shutter. With this method of reflector adjustment, the lamp-condenser or condenser-aperture spacing must be materially decreased, but such settings produce a loss in the light projected of the order of 30 to 50 per cent.

Fig. 19—Plano-Convex Condensing Lens Combination

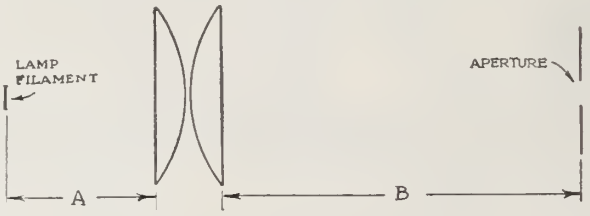

Fig. 20—Spacing Designations for Plano-Convex Condensing Lens (as used in Table 1)

In view of the practical difficulties of obtaining the mirrored reflector adjustment for maximum screen illumination with the plano-convex condenser combination, its use with Mazda lamps is not recommended for theater projection.

We would be glad to discuss any of the above explanation that is not entirely clear to the readers.—Editor.

Dear Sir:

Inclosed find a small portion of end of one reel of a feature. There were about 60 punch holes in all. I see there are a great improvement in the films I get now and hope it will keep up. I have two Simplex and have the Mazda lamps 900 watt and Gold King screen. Am getting good projection. I did have some trouble with my light on the screen. It had yellow streaks in it at first but if you will put a piece of white card in front of the aperture plate, and turn it up to the same size as the filament of the lamp and turn and spot it on the aperture plate between the filament of the lamp, with a little work you will get a good clear light on the screen. Hope this will help some one.

Will close now and ask you to please send me some labels.

Dear Editor:

Enclosed find my membership blank also price of N. A. M. L. button. I always read the News but turn first to the Forum. But from some cause or other I didn't understand all I wanted to about the League so I wrote for information.

As for punching holes, making bad patches, misframes, etc., in films, I am not quitting. I always try to put every film I get into first class condition as I realize it will be shown again. But some fellows think that they are the last ones to show a picture. I sure have received some bad ones that made me wonder who showed it before it came to me.

Not so long ago I got a film from the Pathe Exchange and honest I worked four hours trying to get all the misframes out of two reels. There were three or four for every two feet at the worst and little

Improperly Designed Lighting System Proves Expensive Proposition

The writer is acquainted with the lighting system of a very beautiful modern theatre here in the East. The manager and owners of this house are progressive and endeavor to secure the most up to date apparatus and ideas for their patrons.

It was therefore decided to install a colored lighting system. The architect, contractor and builder installed a lighting system, but a lighting system in name only. The efficiency of this system is somewhat under one-tenth of one per cent (which is represented by the fraction .001).

But why, we ask, should such an inefficient system be designed and installed by men well up in their particular professions. The answer lays in the fact that these men are efficient in only one general line and they therefore designed and built their individual portion of the installation.

Figure A of the accompanying sketch gives a rough layout of the installation. The architect and builder constructed the trough around the large circular auditorium dome, the electrician installed an exceedingly large number of high wattage colored lamps and the decorator gave the dome a general dark blue finish.

With the above combination, what results could be expected? In the first place the trough and lights were so designed and placed making necessary an enormous amount of lamps to permit sufficient light to fall on the dome. When we say "sufficient light" in this case, it means a great amount more light than should be required. The reason for this is due to the dark blue finish of the dome. For instance, amber light when falling on a dark blue surface has an extremely low reflective efficiency.

The resultant of the above conditions make it necessary for the exhibitor to pay for lighting many times greater than would have been necessary had a properly designed system been installed.

To insure an efficient and satisfactorily designed plan, the architect, builder and designer should cooperate. It is always advisable to have the advice of some illuminating engineer who probably can offer advice of a very desirable nature.

Referring again to the installation discussed above, Figure B of the accompanying sketch shows how this system could have been designed to secure a highly efficient and satisfactory result. The trough should be designed to accommodate angle reflectors. The angle reflectors should be used on every lamp, thus throwing the maximum amount of light out over the dome.

As several colored tonal effects are desirous, various colored lamps should be used.

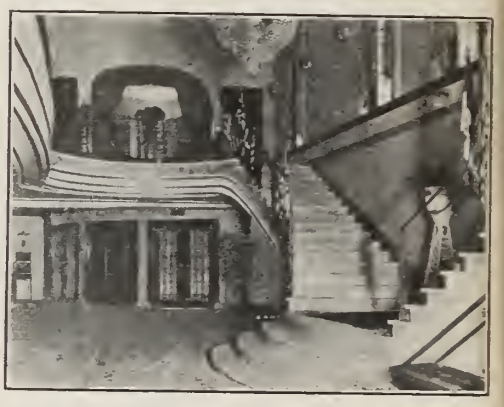
By finishing the dome in some comparatively light color the different colored lighting tones will have a high reflective efficiency. This general layout not only will give commendable lighting effects but will greatly reduce the number of lamps necessary.

Elmwood Theatre to Install Wurlitzer

A $40,000 Wurlitzer Hope Jones orchestral organ will be installed in the Elmwood theatre, Buffalo this summer according to an announcement by Bruce Fowler, manager. The installation will necessitate the closing of the house for three weeks. The organ will be similar to that in the new Lafayette Square, Buffalo, which has created no end of comment. The Elmwood is one of the finest neighborhood houses in the Queen City of the Lakes.—Taylor.

American Seating Publishes Booklet on Layouts

The American Seating Company has recently issued a booklet entitled "Our Theatre Engineer Speaks." This pamphlet contains many valuable suggestions regarding the proper method of installing, selecting and laying out the seating plan for motion picture theatres.



Photographic Methods of Testing Developers

The Research Laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Company has published a very commendable work by J. I. Crabtree of their laboratory, on Photographic Methods of Testing Developers. This subject is treated in thorough detail.

Harry Lucas Visits New York

Harry Lucas, of the Lucas Theatre Supply Company, Atlanta, Georgia, is now paying his fourth recent visit to New York City.

According to Harry, business has every indication of a boom for which he is making full preparation.

The Series Arc M-G Set That Produces Perfect Arcs

TransVerteR (Double Arc Type) is a series arc motor generator, having automatic voltage regulation.

No more amperes used than actually required for the light or dark pictures.

Only such voltage is generated as is used in the arc itself (no ballast being used).

TransVerteR produces better results and uses less current than any other device.

TransVerteR is ball bearing; gives better light and better pictures. It is easy to operate, thoroughly reliable, and is an important factor in drawing full houses, by reason of superior projection.

better at the best. But I can honestly say that every film I use leaves in first class condition minus the misframes and any other bad places.

Some time I will send in my idea of a signal for a change over.

Here's hoping that every fellow sees the need of co-operation with the moving picture industry and points the league.

Truly,
E. H. McGee,
Pastime Theatre,
Belton, S. C.

Dear Editor:

I have been a member for some time but have never written since I joined. Have just been sitting back and reading the good things that the other boys have been writing.

I like the looks of the diagram that Brother Hunter sent in but I should think it would be a little difficult to drill the holes through. Why not make that extension shutter shaft in one solid piece? That is the way I did it and it works better than the shaft that comes on the projectors, especially the Powers 6B.

I am sending you a sample of what I found at the end of six reels, each reel had just such work did to it. I think it is a dirty shame. Guess that some punch mark kings will never wake up unless the same thing happens to them that did to me a year or so ago. I was fined $5 for just such a trick. This happened to me by the Southern Enterprise Co. Oh, yes, I almost forgot, I want one of the new buttons. You will find the 25c. enclosed. Please send it as soon as possible and don't forget to send some labels.

Very truly yours,
C. A. Pritchett, No. 1662,
Majestic Theatre,

Dear Editor:

Please find enclosed 50c in stamps as payment for two applications for membership to the Anti Misframe League that have already been forwarded you. Please send badges by return mail. Hoping that you can give this matter your prompt attention, I wish to remain,

How to Use This Book

THE projectionist can use THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS to very good advantage in more than one way.

For instance, take the "Feature Release Chart" which may be found near the back of the book. Here is tabulated the length and date of release of the various features from which the projectionist may judge his running time and may also estimate the probable condition of the print he will receive.

The same holds true for the short feature and comedy release charts.

While the Technical Department of this publication devotes the space under the heading of this form entirely to the projectionist, a great many articles which are of extreme value and interest to the projectionist are often found in other parts of this section.

This department strives to keep its readers informed on all the latest developments in this field as well as the best accepted engineering methods for the motion picture theatre in general.

Dear Sirs:

I am sending you a report which I would like for you to publish. I sent one in the box of film to the exchange and give one to the manager. And he knows how the films come and go. I am in on the bronze button. Write me as soon as I can get mine and I will send you the money.

Yours,
J. G. Butt,
Glasgow, Ky.

Dear Editor:

Please send me some of the N. A. M. L. labels, my number is 1680. Also Chas. E. Williams, projection at the Beckley theatre, and whose number is 1681 has requested me to order him some of the labels.

Very truly yours,
John H. Hull,

Thanking you, I remain,

Dear Sir:

Received your labels a week ago but have to write to you again as you only sent me a small supply. I wish you would send me plenty of them this time as we only run first-class stuff, and we hold 880 people. This is the biggest house in town. Would like to hear from you real soon.

Truly,

Gentlemen:

Please excuse me for waiting so long about writing for a membership with the N. A. M. L. I want to get in line. Please fix me up and give me my papers.

Very truly yours,

Dear Sir:

I saw your article in Motion Picture News announcing that the N. A. M. L. pins are ready for distribution. Please find the enclosed 25c. for one of these buttons I will write an article for the Forum later.

Yours truly,
Fred D. Yoder, No. 1660.

Dear Editor:

I received the card O. K. and thanking you for same I will try to put all films in the best condition possible. Enclosed find 25c for which please send me a membership button. Also send a bunch of labels as I have never received any from you. I am thanking you for same. I am yours truly,

NATIONAL ANTI-MISFRAME LEAGUE PLEDGE

AS a motion picture projectionist who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the projection-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in reasonably good condition, according to conditions of film when received. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother projectionists and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Four New Model Motiographs Installed in One Night in San Antonio

Manger O. F. Spahr of the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Company reports very good business and big demand for the new Model Motiograph in Texas and Southern territory. Installation of eight new model Motiograph projectors has been completed in the W. J. Lytle Southern Enterprise theatres in San Antonio, Texas in the Rivoli, Wigwam, Princess and Royal theatres. At the last moment before installation it was decided to build a new operating room in the RoyalTheatre, which is one of the big first run houses of that city. Mr. E. J. Ferney, of the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Company, C. K. Goee, of the R. D. Thrash Theatre Equipment Company, C. C. Cook, of the Lytle Enterprise Theatre removed thirty-two chairs from the center of the balcony and constructed a concrete and steel booth installing the two new Motiographs, a motor-generator, a rectifier and compensarc, as well as plumbing fixtures, and all electric wiring from 11:30 one night until 10:30 A. M., next morning. At the same time these lives wires installed two new model Motiographs in the Marcus Lowe Southern Enterprise's Princess Theatre, a 1400 seat San Antonio house. Previous to this installation new model Motiograph Projectors were installed in the Rivoli and Wigwam Theatres by the same men who also installed eight Gardiner Velvet Gold Fibre Screens in various threatres in San Antonio.

Projection room of the Royal theatre, San Antonio, Texas, equipped with Motiograph machines

New Model Motiographs have recently been installed in the following Texas Theatres:

The New Gem Theatre, Texarkana, Texas.

The Emoryl Theatre, Emory Texas.

The Hope Theatre, Mexia, Texas.

The R. & R. American at Bonham, and installations are now in progress in the Rialto theatre at Beeville and the local distributor, R. D. Thrash reports a constantly increasing demand, which is very pleasing to himself.

California Leads in Proposed Theatres

CALIFORNIA

Hollywood—A brick theatre and store building costing more than $50,000 will be erected on the south side of Sunset Boulevard between Rodney Drive and Vermont Avenue, for Nick Lazarevich, 4628 Hollywood Boulevard. The building will be 50 x 135, auditorium 50 x 80, seating capacity about 800. Plans by F. A. Noyes, Jr. and Gordon La Barr, engineers, 1022 California Building, Hollywood, Cal.

Live News from Correspondents

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Cosmos theatre closed Sunday evening, midnight, for a complete re-roofing, new stage, re-arrangement of orchestra pit, and other minor changes.

Julian Brylawski's previous announcement of a proposed new Cosmos has met an unexpected delay, due to a long-time tenant refusing to permit interruption to his business during building operations.

While conditions in small towns and rural sections of the Washington territory, are showing distinct improvement, some Baltimore, Washington and Alexandria theatres are closing or planning to close on account of the "summer slump." Daylight-saving as practised in Baltimore, carnivals, amusement parks, and block parties, all are blamed by Vice-President J. Louis Rome, of the Baltimore Exhibitors' League. Rome, who manages a chain of Baltimore theatres such as the Rialto, Apollo, Broadway, Sunset, and Capitol, said in a recent interview in the Baltimore Sun that business had gone to smash completely, and predicted a complete closing of movie palaces during the next two months. The Poplar and Apollo theatres had cut daily performances, only Saturday matinee and the six evening performances being retained. Their evening showings begin at 6 P. M. Some smaller houses are having their mortgages foreclosed. Operators who at current time rates earned from $48.45 up to $65 a week, receive only $20 to $25 a week, on the shorter hours. Orchestra musicians are being dismissed. Alexandria, Va., across the Potomac from Washington, has been hard hit by the closing down of the Virginia ship yards, and dismissal of some thirteen hundred railway employees at the nearby division points of six railway systems. W. H. Reed closes his lower King street house this week. One of the two colored theatres is closed, and the other has just been purchased by a local business man.

Harry Crandall and two of his executives, Messrs. Bell and Boyd, received a letter of thanks from the M. P. T. O. A. for their services as chairmen of local committees at the recent meetings here of their convention.

Local golf clubs are rather indignant at the attempts of Harry M. Crandall and John J. Payette to learn golf on their courses. As golfers, a local wit says, they are some lawn mowers.

WESTERN NEW YORK

H. Tobias, of the Princess, Corning, has purchased the Regent theatre in the Southern Tier City from Winifred Deuel.

Frank Bovay, of the Lyric, Binghamton, was seriously injured in an automobile accident last week.

Walter Hays, vice-president of the Mark-Strand interests, has signed up Pathe's "Nanook of the North," for showing at the Strand theatres in Buffalo, Syracuse and Albany.

Harry Greenman, who four years ago was assistant manager of the Victoria theatre, Buffalo, under Eddie Hyman, now at the Strand, Brooklyn, was a Buffalo visitor last week. Harry is now manager of the Fox Liberty theatre in St. Louis.

Charles F. Ast, 345 Niagara Street, Buffalo, has been found guilty by a jury in Supreme Court of the charge of manslaughter, first degree, growing out of the auto accident last December in which Charles C. Lodge, former assistant manager at Shea's Hippodrome, lost his life.

M. Shea is installing one of the largest Wurlitzer organs ever huilt in Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo. The instrument will be ready this fall. A famous organist will be engaged to play it. The organ will be featured as one of the big attractions at the popular western New York house.

Vaudeville has been discontinued at the Cataract theatre, Niagara Falls, and motion pictures will be shown exclusively for the summer. The new Strand, next door to the Cataract, is expected to open late this summer. A. C. Hayman, head of the Cataract company, is also head of the Strand company. The new house will be one of the finest in the State.

The Griffin theatre, in Welland, Ont., has been leased by the Lambert Theatre Company. The house has been closed pending the decision on a policy for the theatre. The Grand and Lambert theatres will remain open all summer in Welland.

Free film shows are being given Sunday evenings at Erie Beach on the Canadian shore opposite Buffalo.

PITTSBURGH

The Million Dollar Grand, of Pittsburgh, celebrated its fourth anniversary this week.

C. J. Harden will be branch manager for the Hoy Reporting Service, covering the Pittsburgh territory.

The Pittsburgh Motion Picture Supply Co. is the latest concern to enter the local supply field. They will be located at 636 Grant Street, the quarters formerly used by the Hollis-Smith, Morton Co. The new firm has the exclusive agency for the Motiograph Machine as well as a complete line of motion picture accessories.

Pete Santy is completing a movie theatre to seat about four hundred at Anawalt, W. Va.

The West Virginia Amusement Co. has awarded a building contract to the Valley Engineering Co. for a $300,000 theatre. Work on the structure has begun and it is expected to be completed within a few months. J. E. Watson, Jr., is the president and Samuel Brady is the secretary of the new company.

The following concerns are now housed in the new film building on Forbes Street. Hollis, Smith, Morton Co., S. & S. Film Supply Co., Quality Film Corp., and the Select Film Co.

C. Benson, of Wilcox, has purchased the interest of C. H. Burgeson, one of the owners of the Star theatre in the above town. The other owner is a Mr. Aldrich.

John G. Furrer, for over three years with the Standard Film Co., has changed his vocation and is at present selling automobiles for the Erny Motor Co., dealers in Chevrolet and Willys-Knight cars.

Joe Simons, who formerly was house manager for the Nemo theatre, Johnstown, has been appointed manager of the Deford theatre, Martinsburg, Pa., a few miles out of Altoona.

Mike Rosenbloom, of the Majestic theatre, Charleroi, has taken over the Liberty theatre, Bentlyville, and will run for three days a week.

George Ridenour & Sons, who operate the Photoplay theatre at Rockwood, Pa., have taken over the Grand theatre, of Somerset, and will operate both theatres.

Mr. Elliot, owner of the Star theatre, in Vandegrift, has taken over the Kiski theatre of the same town, and will operate both theatres. Mr. Elswick expects to take a trip to Sweden very shortly.

Mike Hogan, formerly on the road for the Vitagraph Exchange, is now on the main line for Universal.

Bennie Gould, for the past four years on the road for the local Fox Exchange, has been promoted to the branch management of the Albany office for the same concern.

Chas. Lynch succeeds W. R. Johnson as assistant branch manager for Pathe. Mr. Johnson has been transferred to the West Virginia territory.

HOW CAN THEY TELL?

We all read announcements from time to time wherein manufacturers of new machines (and "improved" ones too) tell the world that their new machines will stand up for ten years without repairs.

HOW DO THEY KNOW?

THEY DON'T!!!

But they believe that they have the same right to borrow Simplex advertising claims as they have to borrow Simplex construction features.

Perhaps they have—

BUT THERE IS ONLY THIS DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THEIR CLAIMS AND OURS

THEIRS IS ONLY ON PAPER!!

SIMPLEX CLAIMS FOR SUPREMACY
ARE BASED ON THE FACT THAT

TODAY THERE ARE THOUSANDS OF 7, 8 and 9-YEAR-OLD SIMPLEXES IN ACTUAL USE

SO WHY SHOULD YOU EXPERIMENT?

Reginald Denny, star of "The Kentucky Derby"

Making New Series of "Leather Pushers"

"THE Leather Pushers," the series of two-reelers made as Universal-Jewels from H. C. Witwer's amusing Collier's stories of the prize ring, have proved such a screen success that Universal is to make more of them. The original series of six will be increased by six more, made by the same director, star and featured players.

"The Leather Pushers" series was directed by Harry Pollard, with Reginald Denny in the starring role. Denny's chief supporting player was Hayden Stevenson. Among the leading women used during the series were Norma Shearer, Doreen Banks and Elsa Petersen. Since the completion of the first series, Denny has been made a regular Universal star, and Pollard a regular Universal director. Denny is to be taken from five-reel productions long enough to produce the remaining Witwer stories.

Babby Peggy Pictures to be "Specials"

Hereafter, pictures made by Baby Peggy, the popular child star of Century Comedies, will be released as Baby Peggy-Century Comedy Specials, it is announced.

"The Storm" Packs Capitol

Universal-Jewel Production Wins Commendation of New York Critics

"THE STORM," Universal's Jewel screen production of Langdon McCormick's celebrated stage drama, had its world's premiere presentation last week in the Capitol theatre, New York City, and set a pace for itself in the esteem of the picture-going public as one of the greatest successes of the year.

Universal hails it as the greatest Universal picture since "The Heart of Humanity," and predicts it will far exceed that box-office marvel in its money-making power. Film men who have seen it, and the newspaper critics who have reviewed it, unite in placing it at the pinnacle of screen achievement.

Samuel Rothapfel, manager of the Capitol, booked "The Storm," on sight. He characterized it as a "great picture" when he booked it. After he saw the crowds which flocked to his theatre last Sunday night, at the opening of "The Storm," causing a sell-out early in the evening, and again later, he labelled the feature as the best picture shown in the Capitol in a long time.

Newspaper critics were loud in their unstinted praise of "The Storm."

"One of the greatest works of screen art of the year is 'The Storm,' a Universal-Jewel production, at the Capitol this week," said the New York World. "Paeans of thanksgiving are due Reginald Barker, director, and the three principals of the cast of six, Virginia Valli, House Peters and Matt Moore. They have produced one of the classics of the cinema.

"The Capitol should be jammed to capacity all week for this picture. It merits the limit of patronage of the picture-going public."

'The Winning Nine' Ready

Nine Universal Attractions Form First Group for Fall Release

INSTEAD of a Star Series, Universal is going to sell its big five-reel features this year in blocks of nine. The pictures themselves will be released one each week, instead of three a month, as was the case last year. In these nine it is planned to have two features each of four stars, and one feature made by a special company in which the biggest stars available will be utilized. The four stars represented in the series are Herbert Rawlinson, Gladys Walton, Frank Mayo and Hoot Gibson. Among the stars scheduled to appear in the all-star casts are Henry B. Walthall, Marjorie Daw, Mahlon Hamilton, Gladys Brockwell, Stuart Holmes, and Ralph Graves.

The first feature of the Winning Nine, by which name the first block of features is to be called, is "Don't Shoot," starring Herbert Rawlinson and directed by Jack Conway. The second will be "Paid Back," an all-star picture directed by Irving Cummings; the third, Gladys Walton in "Top o' the Morning," directed by Edward Laemmle, and the fourth, Hoot Gibson in "The Galloping Kid," directed by Nat Ross.

The others are "Caught Bluffing," starring Frank Mayo and directed by Lambert Hillyer; "Confidence," starring Herbert Rawlinson and directed by Harry A. Pollard who made "The Leather Pushers"; "The Long Chance" directed by Jack Conway with Henry B. Walthall, Marjorie Daw, and Ralph Graves; "The Girl Who Ran Wild," starring Gladys Walton, from Bret Harte's story (M'Liss) directed by Rupert Julian, and "False Play," a Hoot Gibson picture directed by Nat Ross.

Priscilla Dean Best in "Under Two Flags"

"UNDER Two Flags," Universal's great Jewel production, with Priscilla Dean in the starring role, of Ouida's famous novel and stage play, has been completed at the Universal City studios and the film now is being cut and edited by Tod Browning, the director. It is said to be Miss Dean's greatest screen portrayal. As Cigarette, "the daughter of the regiment," she has a role entirely different from any heretofore enacted by her.

"Under Two Flags" is scheduled for release in November. Included in the cast are James Kirkwood, John Davidson, Stuart Holmes, Ethel Grey Terry and others.

London's "Fish Patrol" as Universal Series

Universal is preparing to produce a series of two reelers based upon Jack London's famous "Fish Patrol" stories. This series will be one of the best sea-series ever attempted.

The stories deal with the patrol established to maintain order among the rough fishermen of mixed nationality that operate in San Francisco Bay.

Gladys Walton, Universal favorite

Art Acord, star in "Days of Buffalo Bill"

Radio Laboratory Built for "The Radio King"

In preparation for its production of "The Radio King," a chapter-play based on the marvels of the radio-phone, Universal has installed one of the most powerful radio broadcasting stations in the country at Universal City, and also has equipped a large radio laboratory. A committee of nationally known experts on radiotelephony is being assembled to direct the working out of advanced radio experiments for the serial.

Acord to Be Featured in Lumber Jack Series

As soon as Art Acord, now recuperating from an automobile accident, is on his feet again, he will be starred in a series of two-reelers written around the life and adventure of the lumber camps. The pictures will be known as the Lumber Jack Series, and will be filled with thrilling episodes and spirited action, it is promised by George Levine, Universal's new Short Subject Sales Chief.

Four Century Comedies for July Release

FOUR rollicking Century Comedies are announced for July release through Universal exchanges.

"Live Wires," the two-reeler for release July 5, features Brownie, the dog-star, and Johnny Fox. The cast includes Edna Gregory, Baby Delemeter and Jackie Morgan.

"Apartment Wanted," to be released the following week, stars Lee Moran. It was directed by Alf Goulding and shows the popular comedian in a lot of new apartment hunting gags. Edna Gregory, George Monberg, Alberta Vaughn and Jackie Morgan are in the cast.

On July 19 will come a wonderful "kid" picture, "You and Me," entirely enacted by youngsters. It features some fancy diving by children. The final Century release for the month will be "Hello, Mars," with Harry Sweet and Johnny Fox.

October Release for "Human Hearts"

"HUMAN Hearts," Universal's long heralded Jewel production of Hal Reid's famous stage drama, will be released early in October, it is announced by Art Schmidt, newly appointed sales chief at 1600 Broadway.

Few stage plays have had the vogue of "Human Hearts." A decade or so ago no theatre season was complete unless a "Human Hearts" road show passed through. Universal predicts that its picture will prove just as popular.

House Peters, the virile lead in "The Storm" and other great successes, is the star. He is supported by a strong cast, including George Hackathorne, Edith Hallor, Ramsey Wallace and others equally as well known.

King Baggot directed the production, and is said to have turned out a master-piece of screen art in his homely delineation of the characters and incidents of the play.

"Human Hearts" is said to be a worthy successor to "The Storm" in Universal's schedule of Jewel releases.

Harry Carey Successes Now in 2-Reel Series

A distinct novelty in "westerns" is promised by Universal in the form of a revival of Harry Carey successes, which now are being cut down and re-edited for release as two-reelers.

There will be a series of eight of these pictures—one a week beginning about the middle of September. They will be concentrated editions of the popular western star's best work. The entire list will be announced soon.

Virginia Valli, new Universal star

House Peters stars in two big fall pictures

Universal's Fall Jewels Strongest in History

The most imposing list of Universal-Jewel productions ever lined up for release are announced for the coming fall and winter by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

Beginning with "The Storm," the House Peters production now creating a sensation in New York, the list includes a new picture by Priscilla Dean, another House Peters special, and several strong all-star features.

"The Storm" is scheduled for general release in September. It will be followed in October by "Human Hearts," another House Peters picture, adapted to the screen by King Baggot from Hal Reid's famous stage play.

Then will come "Under Two Flags," Priscilla Dean's long heralded portrayal of Ouida's world-famous novel. Tod Browning directed this picture and is said to have made a screen classic of it.

"The Kentucky Derby," a thrilling picturization of Charles T. Dazey's popular racing melodrama, "The Suburban" has been completed by King Baggot, with Reginald Denny in the starring role, and will be released in December. Parts of the picture were taken during the Kentucky Derby at Churchill Downs, Louisville, this year.

Following "The Kentucky Derby," Universal will release "The Flirt," featuring Eileen Percy and Helen Jerome Eddy. This is a screen production of Booth Tarkington's celebrated novel of the same name. It is being directed by Hobart Henley.

Carl Laemmle "Talks" in Sat. Eve. Post Ads

BEGINNING July 15, Universal pictures will be advertised weekly in the Saturday Evening Post, in a column uniquely designed to appeal to the theatre-goer along the same lines as Mr. Carl Laemmle's well known Straight - from - the - Shoulder Talks to exhibitors. The campaign is calculated to be of great benefit to Universal's exhibitor patrons. The first ad will deal with Universal-Jewels.

"Days of Buffalo Bill" Praised by Educator

Ernest L. Crandall, Director of Lectures and Visual Instruction for the Board of Education, New York City, has persuaded Universal to give him pre-release excerpts from "In the Days of Buffalo Bill," the forthcoming "thrills from history" chapter-play.

The New York educator, after pre-viewing the serial, was loud in his praise of its entertaining and instructive values, and asked for the loan of a number of historical excerpts, including those dealing with Abraham Lincoln and the closing days of the Civil War.

Crandall has asked permission of Universal to show these excerpts at the meeting of national educators, now taking place in Boston. He also has applied to Universal for permanent possession of the film for regular use in the New York City schools.

"In the Days of Buffalo Bill," which was directed by Edward Laemmle, with Art Acord in the starring role, deals with the thrilling events in American history from 1865 to the building of the first transcontinental railroad.

Novelty Reel Issued by Int. News

INTERNATIONAL NEWS has just announced the issue through Universal of a series of weekly novelty reels to be known as The Mirror, which is to feature interesting news movies of a decade ago and more.

The first issue, which is being released in various first run theatres as a try-out, contains pictures made twenty-five years ago, when the moving picture camera was hardly more than an experimental toy. They are pictures of President McKinley's inauguration.

Neely Edwards to Make More Tramp Comedies

Neely Edwards, the eccentric screen comedian, has proven such a success in the "Nervy Nat" tramp impersonations adopted in his recent one-reel Comedies, made and distributed by Universal, that it has been decided to continue the "Nervy Nat" series indefinitely. The latest, is "Easy to Cop."

Every One a Winner

Metro pictures are produced with a single, dominating principle always in mind: that every release must be a winner for the man exhibiting them, that every picture must turn over a sound profit for the showman.

That principle is the basis for Metro's successes in the past, for its present enviable place in the faith of the exhibitor, and for its policy during the coming season of 1922-1923. To adhere to that principle is becoming more and more difficult of achievement, as the demands of the public are becoming more and more difficult of satisfaction.

The public no longer selects its evening's screen entertainment with the carelessness of a man buying a straw hat. The public shops for movies now with the discerning eye of a woman who can only afford one hat a season.

What the public shops for is the Special Production.

And since Metro must give the exhibitor what the public wants, special productions only constitute the Metro schedule for the crucial year to come.

Every Metro picture during this period will come easily under the classification of a super-production. The most dramatic story material available, the most capable directors in the world today, stars that pull irresistibly, with casts of players of proven artistry—these essentials of photoplay excellence Metro has gathered together for the purpose of making every Metro picture a winner.

The wise exhibitor, then, is the exhibitor who books Metro solid, for thus he insures the solidity of his profits.

Wilderness Tales by ROBERT C. BRUCE

Played the Capitol Theatre, New York, the week of June 4th and was held over during week of June 11th. Read what S. L. Rothafel says in his program:

"'MY COUNTRY', the Robert C. Bruce picture which is being presented this week, whose only story is that of the natural beauties of the Pacific northwest, seemed to us too inspired and beautiful to 'adapt' music to it. Mortimer Wilson, the well known American composer, who is attached to the Capitol staff, has therefore written an original symphonic score from the theme of 'My Country 'Tis of Thee', a procedure which we believe is another milestone in the development of motion picture entertainment."

An Open Letter

To the Officers and

Members of the MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS' ASSOCIATION, EXHIBITORS' ORGANIZATIONS, CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE, Etc.

In the Moving Picture World of May 27th, 1922, appeared an article by Mr. E. C. Mills, entitled "The Other Side of the Music Tax," containing a suggestion relative to the most practicable solution of this matter.

In the Motion Picture News of June 17th, 1922, appeared an editorial under the caption "The Music Tax—Its Stipulations," in which there was again clearly suggested a solution of the differences between exhibitors as a class, and the proprietors of copyrighted music as represented by this Society.

We responded to both of these articles with a paid advertisement headed "An Invitation," addressed to all concerned in this aged controversy. The advertisement contained an invitation to a conference; it was cordial, sincere and well-intentioned.

We have received no response to the invitation. It was extended by us, and printed in two of the trade papers, because of our desire to reach an amicable understanding with the exhibitors and their leaders, based upon justice and right, founded upon law and equity, conceived in a friendly and honorable understanding and recognition of each other's lawful rights.

When exhibitors violate the law which protects our rights, and in defense of them we summon such exhibitors into Court, it is quite the custom to accuse us of having done so without fair warning to the exhibitor; without having given him a chance to inform himself on the subject.

When exhibitors are advised of our rights, and urged not to infringe them; when they are advised that only under certain circumstances and conditions have they a lawful right to publicly perform our compositions, and then when we have, after repeatedly warning them of the consequences of a violation of these rights, sent our inspectors into their theatres and found them violating the law with utter disregard—which, of course, results in the filing of actions to protect our rights—we are accused of unjustly summoning them to Court, of "spying" upon them.

When we state a fee for licenses, fixed at a figure ridiculously low in comparison with the value of the product which we furnish, and WITHOUT WHICH THE MOTION PICTURE THEATRE CANNOT EXIST; when we permit this fee to be paid in installments; when we maintain the fee at the same fixed figure at which it has been placed for years, in the face of advancing costs, we are accused of extortion, and called "robbers."

When we openly and frankly tell the exhibitors, and their leaders, that we welcome them to a conference at which it is hoped a mutual understanding may be reached, there is no response, no notice, and we therefore continue in our discovery of violations of the law, and punishment of the guilty exhibitors.

When you assemble in your conventions from time to time and adopt resolutions on this subject, that are NEVER carried out; when year after year this old question is brought up and militantly discussed—without eventual result of any sort, don't you think it is time to "get together?"

When, year in and year out, in case after case, we bring exhibitors into Court and our rights are then upheld at the great cost of the exhibitor, don't you think it is time that you knew the TRUTH about this whole matter, and learned it from your leaders, your trade press, and your own lawyers?

Or, are you determined to mislead yourselves and your followers with such "bunk" as is in fact what the resolutions adopted at your last national Convention with respect to this subject, amounted to?

We have invited you to a free and open conference, where whosoever has aught to say may be freely heard, in the hope that we may render you, more than ourselves, a service. Bear in mind that our rights are secure, and are being protected, but we could wish that there were more good will, more friendly understanding, than now prevails. It is to that end, to the end that we reach a mutually acceptable basis for operation, that we invite the conference.

Do you gentlemen fear to discuss the question? Do you already know so well that our position is just that you hope to evade the final and logical solution of the vexing question in order that you may continue to use it for propaganda purposes?

Let's have the TRUTH!! We know what it is in respect of our position; our members know what it is in respect of the operation of this Society; does the rank and file of the exhibitors know what it is?

We repeat the invitation to meet with us, individually or collectively, officially or informally, at our offices or yours, at your convenience, for the purpose of discussing issues related to the so-called "Music Tax," and arriving at an equitable adjustment of all differences that may now exist.

June 28, 1922.

Some Pointers About

in

"How Women Love"

Star

Betty Blythe fresh from her triumphs in "The Queen of Sheba," "Fair Lady" and "His Wife's Husband." The most beautiful dramatic artist on the American screen.

Story

Story founded on "The Dangerous Inheritance" by Izola Forrester, published as a novel by Houghton-Mifflin, now being syndicated in leading newspapers throughout the country. An elaborate society melodrama of metropolitan life against a background of wealth and operatic Bohemia.

Cast

Supporting Miss Blythe are the following players: Gladys Hulette, Robert Frazer, Charles Lane, Julia Swayne Gordon, Harry Sothern, Henry Sedley, Katherine Stewart, Templar Saxe and Signor Salerno. These names must carry weight with all genuine "fans" and experienced exhibitors.

Director

Kenneth Webb, who has been with the Whitman Bennett Studios almost continually since leaving Famous Players. He directed Miss Blythe in "Fair Lady" and "His Wife's Husband."

Scenario

By Dorothy Farnum, who wrote the scripts for "Fair Lady" and "His Wife's Husband"—regular writer for the Whitman Bennett studios in conjunction with productions directed by Mr. Webb.

Sets

By Elsa Lopez formerly with Griffith and Famous Players—art director for "Fair Lady" and "His Wife's Husband." The sets will be as elaborate as any ever constructed by the Whitman Bennett Studios for First National or United.

Atmosphere

The atmosphere combines New York "high society" and "Bohemia." It is correct to the most minute detail. Two hundred extra and type artists are used in the "society opera" episode alone.

Motion Picture News

The Fall Season

(Note: This editorial was written at the request of Associated First National Pictures, to appear in a symposium of editorials on the same subject by editors of the trade press. The articles by the other editors appear on page 157.)

"FIVE hundred years ago a bunch of theological sharps sat around debating such questions as this:

"'Would an angel, going from one place to another, have to pass through the intervening space?'

"Today the business world is full of angels—automobiles, tires, moving pictures, electric utilities and other giant industries, that have gone from a shoestring to a capitalization of millions without passing through the intervening space. They have not learned the lessons that slower and more staple industries have had to learn—lessons in selling, promotion, dealer co-operation, advertising. Everything they have done has been successful, because nothing they could do could stop their growth. They have missed the discipline that comes from making mistakes and learning by them."

I borrow the above quotation from an impressive booklet I have just read because it seems to me to ring the bell on the general status of this industry today.

We are beginning "to discipline" ourselves.

The period of depression just behind us was a period also of business atonement, of stock taking. And out of it has come the beginning of a new era of doing things by the business yardstick—by figures, known figures.

Figures! Great guns! how we need them!

The "game," meaning the prodigal rush of a new business, used to yank along the exhibitor, distributor and producer who ran his business with loose figures or none at all. But there "ain't no game any more." And there's no hope now for the firm without figures. For the man with figures there's the best job the industry has to offer.

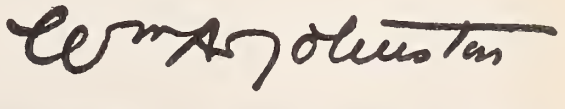
Business in general is going to be good this fall. There isn't the least bit of question about that. It's hard to make a motion picture man feel optimistic with a summer slump—and a mighty tough one—staring him in the face. But the business revival is on. We'll hit normal times this December and in 1923 there'll be a boom that will descend to normal again in 1924-25. We've got three solid years of prosperity just ahead of us. Did anyone miss that American Telephone and Telegraph chart in the June 3rd issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS? If so turn back to it. It's the most definite and impressive business forecast I have ever seen—based upon sound sense and information and lots of each.

Will there be a shortage of pictures this year? I don't think so now.

There has been, of course, a long and pronounced slump in production, but the studios are speeding up and we are hearing a lot about independent production.

How many features do we need, anyway?

The first run theatres use only 250 a year. To furnish these picked features, production has got to supply, say, 450. Then there are the later run theatre zones where two or three competing theatres demand from six to twelve features a week. But it must be remembered that these late run houses are always catching up on the overproduction that has always existed before; also they take reissues. And again new and already released pictures will be held back this summer both because of the season and because of closed houses.



From September 1st, 1921, to March 1st, 1922—six months—323 features were released, or at the rate of 626 a year.

If we have five hundred new features this year this supply will meet the demand; and this number is one third less than we have produced each year before this.

Will the pictures be good ones?—that's the main question. And it's a bigger question this year than ever before.

Reduced production will prove a blessing. Exhibitor, distributor and producer will all feel the good effects of it. Overproduction is bad all around. When the market is overcrowded pictures kick each other along too fast. Many good ones don't get the play they deserve. And the producer and distributor don't bear this loss alone; the exhibitor pays it, must pay it, in higher rentals for what he does play.

Fewer pictures will permit of intensive advertising effort. And that's just exactly as important as good pictures. There's got to be a big improvement here. We have more assurance of good pictures than we have of good advertising. The best picture is no good if the public doesn't know it's good. Advertising is the genius of this business and yet it is less developed than other factors.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

OCEAN VIEW, Virginia, one of the most attractive summer resorts in the country, will be the scene on July 11th to 13th of the annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Virginia. Messrs. W. F. Harris and E. T. Crall are in New York making extensive preparations for what is confidently expected to be the most successful convention thus far held by the Virginia State League. Exhibitors will attend from Virginia, North Carolina, Maryland and the District of Columbia. A lot of delightful entertainment is promised including a ball, a seashore dinner, bathing, boating, etc. A large number of motion picture stars from New York will attend the dance.

Edgar Lewis' post cards from Potsdam, Germany: "Greetings from the capital of German filmland. Everybody seems busy and happy here."

WHAT is being done by the industry regarding the Massachusetts referendum? This referendum takes place on November election day and the time for effective work is getting very short. We hear of lots of promises but no reports of actual work.

It is unnecessary to call to anyone's attention the fact that every State in the Union will be heavily influenced by the Massachusetts situation. So far as we know at the present writing the only publicity sent out on behalf of the industry has come from the Freedom of the Screen Committee of the A. M. P. A.

Isn't it about time to let the people of Massachusetts know about the removal of Mrs. Snow in Ohio, about the practical failure of censorship elsewhere and about the recent report of the Federated Council of Churches in which censorship is decried as an impossible thing?

SPEAKING of censorship, the New York World of last week says editorially:

"The reason why Mr. Will Hays was called into the moving-picture business was to cleanse that business in time to prevent the creation of forty-eight conflicting State Censorship Boards. That is a good reason, and The World sympathizes both with Mr. Hays's effort to clean the movies and with his desire to avoid censorship.

"Yesterday he was in conference in this city with the representatives of some fifty national civic organizations. He was asking for advice, and no doubt he received plenty of it. The important thing, however, is that these influential organizations testified by their presence to the only possible principle in this matter.

"The principle is that no amount of legal censoring will really improve the movies. At best it will merely cut out a few objectionable scenes here and there. More probably it will drive the best playwrights out of the industry, for no artist could possibly write with the prejudice and tastes of forty-eight censors in mind. Reform and improvement must come from within. It can not be imposed from outside."

THE Government tax reports show that the amusement business advanced in May over April to the extent of $378,517. The figures are $5,817,531 for May as against $5,439,014 for April.

However, as usual, these figures mean nothing to the Motion Picture industry. The increase for May is undoubtedly largely due to the opening of the baseball season. On the other hand, more theatres are changing their admission prices down to the no-tax limit of ten cents.

Again we make an appeal to every exhibitor to send back the Babson questionnaire, recently sent forth under the auspices of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Columbia University and the Babson Statistical Bureau.

We need volume of replies. Many are already in and already the figures are growing interesting. It will be possible from now on to tell just how the box-office gross is rising or falling. Many other vital facts such as rental prices, their proportion to box-office income, production and distribution costs, admission prices and how they are changing will be at last established. We appeal to every exhibitor—send back your questionnaire today.

The Department of Commerce at Washington reports that screen advertising is proving popular in Italy. Films advertising men's and women's wear, perfumery, etc., are being produced right along and interspersed with the regular theatre program. Prominent stars are taking part in the advertising films.

Another picture-ballroom venture, similar to that in Salt Lake City told of in these columns some months ago, will be launched this fall by Andrew Karzas, president of the Woodlawn Theatre Co. of Chicago. The floor will accommodate 3,000 dancers at one time.

Presentation of prizes won by Fox News cameramen for exceptional work during the past year was formally made on the steps of City Hall, New York City, June 20. Mayor John F. Mary Alden, one of the few screen artists who can successfully portray the girl of twenty and the woman of fifty, has just completed another dual role that promises to add new laurels to her already splendid record. In "The Bond Boy," starring vehicle for Richard Barthelmess, under direction of Henry King, Mary plays opposite Dick as his girl sweetheart and young wife. In the end, she is mother of their son, with Dick, of course in the title role.

The Future Outlook—As Seen By Trade Paper Editors

By Martin J. Quigley
Publisher, Exhibitor's Herald

THE motion picture industry's greatest need today—and it is a need that has been conspicuous since the commencement of the business—is the general adoption of a commercial code consistent with the principles of right, equity and fair-dealing. Of overwhelming importance for the commercial, and likewise the artistic, advance of this business is the elimination of the spirit and the deed of oppression; the introduction as a practical thing in this business of the sane and logical idea that the industry in reality is a business family and that one factor or one individual cannot be imposed upon and injured without a retributive loss being suffered by every factor and every other individual. This is the lesson that has been taught by the world's experience in business; this is the lesson that the motion picture industry is just now learning. With respect to the future of this business, nothing matters so much as the question of just how soon this lesson will be fully learned and practiced!

No one but a fool would contend that an industry constituted as the motion picture business, with its interests and contacts reaching every class of people in every city, town and crossroad in the land, could not be affected by every turn of the general business situation. The general business situation, as every one of intelligence knows, has been bad; in fact, the nation is just now emerging from what has really been a quiet panic gnawing at the nation's prosperity for more than two years.

The end of the panic period has been reached. Unemployment is no longer a problem. General industries are awakening out of the depression that held them practically inert during this panic period. The public's purse is fattening. It is getting back in its normal stride. A new and better day is dawning for business and no industry need look with troubled eye upon the conditions that are to come. When this summer is at an end every industry must look to itself and not to conditions for an explanation if the return of prosperity has not been won.

Putting aside the internal problems which this industry must solve, there is nothing wanting in the prospect to afford grounds for enthusiastic and substantial confidence. Business has improved and with the new theatrical season attendance will be found at former levels unless we fail in our task of affording the type of amusement which the public expects.

We believe that such questions as the possible shortage of features, the ascendency of either the "special" or the program subject and other similar items are of no more than passing consequence. This industry, from its very nature, is a flexible machine; it must keep in step with public opinion and trade requirements, and, if its internal reorganization has been effective, if it learns the lessons of the modern business world, and if it does not forget what the panic period has taught, there is nothing to be feared.

There is a particular requirement that is fixed upon many industries and this one is markedly fixed upon the motion picture business. We refer to the demand for quality advancement. In this respect what has been done yesterday and last year will certainly not do for tomorrow and next year. The motion picture informs and educates. Since its first early struggles to be something in the world of entertainment it has steadily advanced the public's taste. It has taken the public by the hand and led it up and up the scale of appreciation. Unless pictures progress in artistic merit and in entertainment quality, they will become to the public as a fourth grade school book is to a high school boy.

But, again, we see no cause for apprehension here. Pictures generally are vastly improved. They are more even, more logical and they represent more thought and intelligence month by month.

It is simply a case of everyone putting his best foot forward with full realization that it will strike on solid ground and will carry him on.

Editor, Moving Picture World

THE business prospects for the fall and winter for the exhibitor first and then for the producer and distributor are brighter now than they were before the period of depression. Business should return to what we have come to know as normal, which means normally large profits, because we are justified in expecting a return of heavy attendance by reason of the large number of attraction pictures that are in view for the coming market. The exhibitor will benefit by these conditions and so will the producer and distributor, as a matter of course, but none of the three elements will benefit if the pictures are expected to sell themselves first to the trade and secondly to the general public.

Will there be a shortage of features? There will be a shortage of features of the kind that bring people into the theatres, but there will be plenty of pictures available, particularly in view of the fact that the revival habit has now fastened itself on the business. There is every prospect that we will have more fine pictures this year than ever before, but we will not have enough to fill the demand and a choice must be made after the big features are taken care of, as there will remain a number of middle grade products. In this choosing the exhibitor must use his own judgment as a showman and once he has chosen must get back of his entertainments and work in their behalf to sell them to his patrons.

A decided improvement is unquestionably under way in the entertainment quality of pictures, but we have a long distance to go before conditions may be regarded as fully satisfactory in this respect.

Curtailment in production has been beneficial in only one respect. It has lessened the number of poor pictures, and there naturally will be a great demand for those which have been made, especially those which are of show quality.

The coming season will have many big specials, but the program picture, on which the exhibitor must depend, must continue to be the important factor. The exhibitor must have pictures that will make him a profit week in and week out, and he cannot depend for his revenues merely on big specials. The cost of the big special makes his margin of profit smaller unless his business is tremendous, and tremendous business is hard to maintain week after week.

There has been a turn for the better in pictures because the entire industry is looking upward and forward. There is an appreciation of the public demand for clean and yet tremendously interesting entertainment.

As we have stated before, the industry's chief thing to do is the shelving of poor pictures that drive away customers from the box office. When this problem is solved the majority of the industry's difficulties will disappear as a mist before the morning sun.

IN commenting on the general condition and outlook of the industry, let me begin by pointing out that Exhibitors' Trade Review recently completed a survey of the theatre field, which uncovered an almost unanimous belief on the part of exhibitors that the coming fall and winter will usher in the greatest season of normal prosperity the industry has ever known.

This survey was made first-hand by our correspondents in all parts of the country, and is a significant index to the real situa-

O'Reilly Statement Declares Move Is Made to Preserve State Independence

PRESIDENT CHARLES L. O'REILLY of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the State of New York has issued the following statement:

"The officers and Board of Directors of our State Organization were called for the purpose of considering the very many definite requests of the various local units and members of our organization throughout the State to discontinue any further relations with our former national organization, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

"This subject brought up for discussion was the first order of business at the meeting on Monday, at State Headquarters, and the order to withdraw from the national organization was passed by an overwhelming vote. Howard Smith of Buffalo was the only member of the Board of Directors who voted to continue our relations with the national organization. Smith subsequently resigned, and his resignation was unanimously accepted.

"The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the State of New York, in taking this action, realize its importance to the exhibiting branch of the industry throughout the country, and for that reason and because of the fact that the State Organization wishes the theatre owners of the country to know definitely its position in the matter, this statement is issued.

"The theatre owners of the country must realize that Sydney S. Cohen was formerly the president of this organization, and was sponsored by it for the national presidency at two former national conventions—Cleveland and Minneapolis.

"We wish the exhibitors of the country, as well as the leaders of the other State Organizations throughout the country to know, despite innuendos, rumors and statements to the contrary, that no attempt will be made by the New York State Organization to promote any new national organization, or to, in any way, create dissatisfaction within the ranks of the membership of other states.

"As a matter of fact, the same feelin of friendship still exists in the hearts o the exhibitors of the State of New York and their desire for cooperation with thei sister states is as keen as ever.

"We are more than willing to confe and to cooperate with the other State Or ganizations on any issue that may arise i the future where the strength of the Stat of New York can be of benefit to the ex hibiting branch of the industry, or to th industry as a whole. But, under no condi tion, will the State of New York rec ognize the leadership of Sydney S. Cohen

"Many State leaders are members o the national Board of Directors. They ar men who have given of their time and thei money to build up organization for th protection of exhibitor rights, and we wis to definitely assure them that our strengt and our treasury will always willingly b used in the defence of those exhibito rights any place in the United States.

"We are forced officially to withdraw from the national organization which w in New York State did so much to creat and promote, to preserve our independ ence from being crushed by Sydney S Cohen with his high-handed attempt t force an illegal constitution upon us. Ha we subscribed to Mr. Cohen's constitu tion we would have sold our independence and placed in the hands of that man whom we have learned to mistrust a weapon which, in our opinion, not only will eventu ally disrupt the national organization, bu will be used by him in an effort to destroy any State Organization that dares to as sert an opinion which would run counte to his ruthless personal ambitions."

Exhibitors Praise "News" for Fair Dealing

W. A. JOHNSTON,
Motion Picture News,
Godfrey Building,
New York City, New York.

Dear Mr. Johnston:

About two weeks ago this organization, under my signature, issued a statement denying the persistent rumors that were current at that time, that this organization was about to split with Sydney S. Cohen.

The statement was issued to all of the trade papers through their Kansas City correspondents. I have carefully watched the editions of the different trade papers since the issuance of the statement and I want to say to you that out of all the trade papers in the field, your publication was the only one that published the statement in full, for which I want to thank you. I also want to commend your publication and extend the thanks of this organization for your fairness and squareness in publishing the statement in full.

With my kindnest personal regards, I am, Very truly yours,

F.B.O. Division Chiefs to Hold Conference

New Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation Will Discuss Coming Activities in Chicago

A GENERAL meeting of branch managers and division chiefs will mark the birth of the Film Booking Offices of America, the new name of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation. The convention is scheduled to be held at Chicago on July 14th and 15th.

Branch managers from all sections of the country will have an opportunity to meet the executives and officials of R-C Pictures and the F. B. O. for the first time since the reorganization of R-C several months ago. While P. A. Powers has left New York for the West Coast where he is engaged in supervising the production activities at the R-C Studios, Joseph I. Schnitzer, vice-president, Harry M. Berman, who takes up his duties as general manager of distributing on July 1st, and Nat G. Rothstein, advertising and publicity director, will attend and address the branch managers.

The meeting has been called in order to get all of the F. B. O. men in the field fully acquainted with the policy formulated by Powers for the distribution of R-C and independent productions. This policy is radically different from that in vogue with the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation in the past, and consists of developing a highly specialized sales and exploitation force to act simply as a selling medium for high class independent productions. It will be explained to the branch managers that the aim of the F. B. O. is to win the reputation of being the most efficient film clearing house in the industry; that its object is not to submerge the individual picture or brand of pictures under the trade name of the Film Booking Offices; and that the organization is prepared to foster independent productions and assist the exchang managers with a complete line of sales an exploitation aids.

"Our plans are too big, our policy to radically different to be explained in an other way than through personal contact," stated Mr. Schnitzer, in announcing th meeting. "Our branch managers are wit us heart and soul now for we have re ceived congratulatory messages fro every exchange since we announced ou policy of expansion and sales and exploi tation specialization but when we can sho our men in the field that our coming sea son's product far surpasses anything tha they have handled in the past, the sam enthusiasm and spirit of loyalty that pre vails in the home office will surely be re flected in the fullest extent among all th branch managers."

T.O.C.C. Approves Code of Ethics Drawn by Producers Association

Agreement Will Establish Equitable Basis for Uniform Contracts

(Editorial Note: In publishing the correspondence between Mr. Hays and Mr. Edelhertz we are requested by Mr. Hays' office to make plain these facts: That Mr. Hays for the Producers and Distributors Association is conferring with three organized exhibitor groups—the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, and the M. P. T. O. of New York state; that these conferences are all progressing with equal speed and harmony, and that in each case the same satisfactory results are looked for.)

A "CODE OF ETHICS" designed to establish an equitable basis for arriving at a uniform contract between distributors and exhibitors, has been drawn up by a committee of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. Upon submission of the tentative draft, embodying three concrete principles, to Bernard Edelhertz, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, it met with unqualified approval.

In transmitting the draft to Mr. Edelhertz, Mr. Hays wrote as follows:

Mr. Bernard Edelhertz, Chairman, Board of Directors, Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, 1540 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Edelhertz:

I take pleasure in transmitting herewith three copies of a memorandum embodying the principles that have been suggested by our Committee, subject to approval of counsel, as a basis of a uniform contract between distributors and exhibitors.

I hope you will agree with me that this draft marks a decided advance in eliminating, as far as possible at this time, consistent with sound business and the natural right of a manufacturer to exert a reasonable control over his product, various grievances both of the distributors and exhibitors.

The present draft eliminates all penalties on both sides.

It sets up what I hope will prove to be a workable and fair method of selecting play dates which will cure at the same time the evils both of over-buying and over-selling.

It provides for the delivery of all pictures released by a distributor during the period of the contract, which we hope will reach the complaint that it has been the practice occasionally to withhold a picture intended to be delivered when the contract was written but which by reason of superior merit was subsequently withheld because it was belived it would command a higher price.

It cuts down the period of payment of license fees from seven to three days in advance of shipment of the film.

It provides for a uniform payment for film lost or destroyed.

It provides in every case of a re-issue or a re-named negative, that the photoplay should be specifically enumerated in the contract as a re-issue.

To cure the complaint that signed applications of exhibitors are not acted upon with reasonable promptness, we propose to provide that unless a written acceptance is mailed within fifteen days from the date of the application by the exhibitor, such application shall be deemed withdrawn.

We have consented to the assignment of contracts in the case of a sale of a theatre, under suitable regulations, and finally, we propose with your cooperation to promulgate a mutually agreeable code of ethics, a copy of which is enclosed, in which we announce and declare our views as to certain practices to be observed by both parties, which do not properly belong in a formal contract and tend to unduly extend it.

I should like very much to have your written comments, if any, by noon Thursday, and would then like as soon as possible, thereafter, to meet your Special Committee for a discussion which I hope will be in the nature of a final conference.

With very kindest regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) Wm. H. Hays.

Mr. Edelhertz's reply follows:

Hon. Will H. Hays, 522 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

My Dear Mr. Hays:

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 21st instant enclosing three copies of a memorandum, embodying the principles of the proposed uniform contract between the exhibitor and distributor; also the proposed code of ethics.

I have no hesitation in saying, that the principles embodied in this form of contract, when, finally agreed upon, will mark a new era in the business relations between the exhibitor and distributor. Furthermore, I am firmly of the opinion that it will mean the taking of a long step in the direction of a better and more harmonious understanding between these two important branches in the motion picture industry.

I am particularly pleased with the excellent standard and high order of principles set up by your code of ethics. It shows good faith and will undoubtedly serve as an important factor in the consumation of the fundamental idea you have so forcibly advocated, to wit:—Confidence and Cooperation.

In our conference yesterday, we have submitted to your special committee, certain modifications which I have no doubt, will be adjusted in our final conference.

With kind personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

Bernard Edelherz,

Chairman Board of Directors.

Following is the code of ethics:

1. While a salesman has every right to trade among respective customers to obtain the best offer possible for his product, after he has selected a particular Exhibitor whose offer he believes to be the best, and takes a written application from such Exhibitor he should forward the same to the home office and make no further effort to sell the same service to any other Exhibitor in competitor's territory until the application so forwarded has been formally rejected or accepted.

2. No paid advertising should be inserted in any feature picture, comedy, scenic or news reel.

3. In the event of the adoption of standard clauses for a uniform contract, contracts already taken for 1922-'23 product—should be carried out in the spirit of the new form of agreement.

Exhibitors of Kansas Endorse Cohen

THE most important session in the history of the executive board of the M. P. T. O. Kansas was completed Wednesday at midnight after a strenuous all day meeting. The strength of the much heralded anti-Cohen faction, which, it has been rumored persistently, existed in the organization and was contemplating secession from the state body, upon being put to an acid test, failed to develop the expected opposition.

The following resolution was introduced by President M. Van Praag and adopted by the board:

"Whereas the M. P. T. O. Kansas always has been affiliated with the M. P. T. O. A. and was one of the state units to aid in pioneering its formation, and whereas there have been persistent rumors from seemingly authentic sources that there was dissention among this board, its officers and members, and that Kansas would secede from the national organization, and whereas we have always had high regard, confidence and esteem for our national president, Sydney Cohen, and whereas our president and vice-president have denied these false rumors,

Therefore, be it resolved that we extend and express a vote of sincere confidence in our national president, Sydney Cohen, and pledge our hearty co-operation to the program by constructive work laid out by the M. P. T. O. A.

Sir Charles Higham Urges "Clean Standards"

Would Refuse to Advertise "Puerile or Vile" Picture, He Says at A.M.P.A. Luncheon

FOLLOWING the A. M. P. A. luncheon at the Biltmore, New York City, on Thursday of last week, June 22nd, at which Sir Charles Higham, the distinguished British advertising man, was the guest of honor, C. L. Yearsley, president of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers. was the recipient of a letter of thanks and appreciation from Sir Charles for the cordial reception extended to him on that occasion. In his letter, Sir Charles again complimented the organization for the poster advertising, and particularly for the newspaper advertising created by the advertising executives of the motion-picture industry. Sir Charles's letter follows:

"Dear Mr. Yearsley:

"I want to thank you personally, and every member of your association for the splendid luncheon and audience you gave me today.

"First let me compliment you on your splendid poster advertising, and particularly your newspaper advertising. Little did I realize that the moving picture men had gone forward so fast during the past five years.

"By comparing your present work with the work done five or six years ago, I can readily see that you are doing all the things I asked you to do, and possibly it was presumptuous on my part even to seem to lecture you.

"Your business and mine—advertising and motion picture—I think is the greatest in the world, and I am sure you men realize it just as much as I do."

The receipt of a verbatim account of Sir Charles's address after the hour of going to press made it impossible for Motion Picture News to carry the speech in last week's issue. Sir Charles, after being welcomed at last week's luncheon by D. W. Griffith on behalf of the motion-picture industry, responded with a brilliant and highly interesting speech, the most striking utterances of which follow:

"Today Mr. Hays is meeting to discuss how you can make the business of the films better. There is only one way you can make the film industry a great one—far greater than it is now, far greater than you ever dreamed of and that is first of all by making it clean and the only way you can make it clean is by being clean men and women yourselves. There is no use of trying to make pictures if you do not believe in them . . . I believe in human nature. I am a human man. I have touched most of the passions and vices. I am not standing up to you as a goody-goody man, but I believe this motion picture business appealing as it does to the eye—and photographing on the brain of illiterate and all kinds of people of misunderstanding—photographing as it does on their brain what they will never see or hear, must be very, very careful of what it puts into those pictures, and I believe it is possible and if I didn't—I wouldn't have the audacity to say that it is possible—to make virile, dynamic striking pieces and put them on the screen that will hold audiences' attention and hold them spellbound without having actors jumping off cliffs or seducing women.

"You can make those pictures big and bold enough to fill every plush seat in every cinema in the world without all that. You have got men big enough and you will help those men to carry through their ideas and ideals if you will help them. . . . You are all in a great calling—and I don't believe the fringe of the film business has been touched. You advertising men—what do you know? You take the story for what it is worth and you are told to put it over. What is your business?—To fill plush seats? You merely retell a tale. How many of you are big enough advertising men so that when you get a big picture handed to you which is puerile or vile, that you get a big picture like that, say 'I won't advertise for that picture.' Until you do that—until that day comes, you are not worthy men.—I'll tell you why. Because you have the greatest gift given to man or woman—the ability to make a million or ten million people act in unison on a given thing. A doctor, scientist, preacher, couldn't do it. The only men that have that gift are advertising men.

"You have started well. You have got Will Hays. I have never seen him, but all I know is the effect of him in my country. Over there, they say that the American film industry is going to be cleaned up. . . . We need a man like him in Great Britain. No one needs him more than the American Film industry in my country. The method of exploitation and selling pictures and of booking—a great deal of it is wrong. I do not think that any one man will ever clean the film industry—either ethically or financially. The only way is to love it more than you do yourself, unselfishly. And every day to say to yourself that 'I damned well won't do anything today that is going to make this industry worse. Only to do good for it.'

"Next time you look at a motion picture, next time you publicity men are asked to exploit a picture in your country or mine, look at it from the angle that in the greatest country in the world where freedom is supposed to be everything, that you are wielding a power to put a story over—look at that picture and say to yourselves that picture that makes me proud that some other country's Father and Mother bred me on this soil—made me an American boy or girl and I am proud of it and if you can't say that—scot it. That is the way to build a great cinema industry—that is the way to make the motion picture industry ten times as big as you are making it. I am not misunderstanding the value of money. I know the temptation of every man to make it. I know it is difficult to preach to you—that doesn't bring gold into your pocket. But a cleaner, a more human picture—a picture that once and for all says—'Hollywood is dead' and all the rotten mess is gone and our pictures and people are so clean and high and we love our world so much we have wiped it out. You can't wipe it out by burning down the buildings—you can't by burning the fields—you can't wipe out that stigma by stopping Arbuckles pictures—there is only one way and that is by wiping it out of yourselves—and then you will be proud to belong to the picture business."

Pictures were taken exclusively by Kinograms, Educational's news reel, of the guest of honor and a few other prominent guests immediately after Sir Charles's address at the dinner. Sir Charles visited Educational's home office Monday, and had a private showing of the entire length of film. After the showing, the film was presented to Sir Charles, who is taking it back to London as a souvenir and an example of the high speed work of the "film newspaper" in America.

Southern California Denies Dissension

AT a meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Southern California, held in Los Angeles last Monday, allegiance was unanimously pledged to the national organization and to Sydney S. Cohen.

Erroneous reports had been circulated and printed to the effect that the Southern California Association had dissension in its ranks and that the association was divided in its loyalty to the national body.

A wire from the Southern California association reads in part:

"There is no dissension of any nature in the Southern California organization and we are whole heartedly with the national organization."

Hahn Named Manager for Rothacker

John G. Hahn has been named assistant general manager of the Rothacker Film Company. His appointment was made by the board of directors. He will be at the helm in Chicago while Watterson R. Rothacker is in Europe this summer.

Hahn was Rothacker's private secretary fourteen years ago when the latter was Western manager of the Billboard. He was with Universal on the Coast for two years before joining the Rothacker forces in Chicago in 1916. Hahn is secretary of The Illinois Rothacker Corporation and is on the board of directors.

Church Report Points Out Censorship Evil in Constructive Series

Dean Lathrop's Articles Give Council Views on Picture Industry

ATTENTION was called last week by Motion Picture News through the Pictures and People Department to a report of the Social Service Commission of the Federal Council of Churches to the effect that the churches at large were not opposed to motion pictures, nor were they in favor of official censorship. That was the content of a report prepared by Dean Charles N. Lathrop of the Episcopal Church.

Since the publication of the last issue of Motion Picture News there are now available a series of four articles summarizing a study of motion pictures made by the Social Service Commission of the Federal Council of Churches and prepared by Dean Lathrop. Because of their length publication of them in their entirety is impossible, but these reports are available at the office of Motion Picture News for those who care to look them over. The reports are very complete and should be of interest to producers, distributors, exhibitors and by parents and all who attend motion picture theatres.

Dean Lathrop starts his first article by saying:

"Those who are looking for the sensational and extraordinary will be disappointed in this study of motion pictures under the direction of the Social Service Commission of the Federal Council of Churches. It frankly lacks the thrill and excitement of the reform movement. It does not denounce and it finds the ultimate solution of its problem in the social ideals of the whole community."

Summing up the first article, Dean Lathrop says:

"Convention moralists sometimes fail to realize that realistic art is not necessarily immoral because of its frank and intimate treatment of elemental life situations.

"Until the blue law attitude and psychology are wholly substituted by something more intelligent and constructive Philistinism will thrive.

"The screen is not the worst offender. Persons differ widely regarding motion picture standards. Conditions call for a marked improvement in the general character of the films shown throughout the country."

In his second summary Dean Lathrop says:

"The pendulum of public opinion has swung against censorship.

"Censorship bills were defeated in twenty-nine states, adopted in New York and Massachusetts, and a compromise effected in Florida.

"North Carolina passed a rather practical law making the exhibition of motion pictures that are obscene, immoral or detrimental to the morals of the community a misdemeanor.

"Individual judgments vary greatly regarding motion pictures. It is impossible to get even a small group to agree on the probable influence of a picture."

In his third article after giving the various reasons and arguments in favor of censorship, which have generally been advanced Dean Lathrop gives the following reasons as opposed to censorship.

"It is undemocratic. It is un-American. It is impossible for state or federal censorship boards to meet local conditions.

"It would delay releases. The cost to the public would be increased.

"Political perversion of censor privilege would be possible.

"Set rules laid down by law do not allow interpretation according to immediate problems.

"It affords opportunity for graft.

"Application of formal standard results in ridiculous and unjust eliminations and restrictions.

"Separate local and state boards cause duplication and increased expense to public.

"Impossible to make all films suitable for children, as adult entertainment cannot be placed on level of child's mind.

"Motion pictures should be regulated as books and theatres are regulated."

The summing up of the third article says:

"The burden of proof should be placed squarely upon the producer, distributor and exhibitor of carrying on their business in such a way that it will not be detrimental to the public. This can probably best be done by a system of licensing under the usual regulations governing public amusements."

The last of the four articles starts with the statement:

"A number of conclusions are presented in this concluding section of the study of the motion picture problems of the country. The chief of them is that motion pictures should be thought of and talked of not as a troublesome problem but as one of the chief assets of the community for education and betterment."

And in summing up Dean Lathrop writes:

"All social betterment is a matter of educating the oncoming generation. The public school and the religious education departments of the churches can do more to improve recreational standards than all other agencies combined.

"The prevalence of the bad picture is due to the prevalence of bad taste and low morals."

Better Pictures Body Doing Great Work

J. S. LUTIG, president of the Southern California Motion Picture Association, has wired Sydney S. Cohen calling attention to the great work being done by Better Pictures Association of the World. According to Lustig the association for better pictures has the backing of Protestant, Catholic and Jewish churches, as well as the Advertising Club, Rotary Club, City Club and publishers and leaders in all walks of life.

Cohen answered that the wire had been submitted to the National Board of Directors of the M. P. T. O. A. and that an effort would be made to get similar cooperation in every state in the union.

Mae Marsh Will Star In London Company

Sidney Jay, prominent film man of London, England, sails on the Mauretania, Tuesday. Aboard also will be Mae Marsh whom he has signed to play in a big special to be made by the Graham Wilcox Productions at the Famous Players, London Studios. Jess Smith negotiated the contract.

May Figures Surpass April

WHILE official tax figures announced in Washington show a falling off this May over the figures of last year the May figures of this year show an improvement over those of April. The May figures amounted to $5,817,531, as against $7,152,375 for a year ago ,and $5,439,014 for April.

Following are the admission taxes for first five months of the past three years:

January	$6,707,768	$7,120,905	$6,369,200

What Editors Say of Outlook for Future

tion. Many sections reported the usual summer slump. A greater number than might have been expected, however, showed absence of theatre closing; and in several territories actual improvement in business over that recorded in the preceding few months was noted.

With regard to shortage of features, it is my belief that there is always a shortage of first-class features. The present curtailment in production, however, does not necessarily mean that the shortage in the coming season will be any greater than usual. On the other hand, it will probably be less, because the producer today is making a more strenuous effort than ever before to give the exhibitor pictures of the highest box-office type.

The big special is being developed more and more. That is an inevitable outcome of the first-run system under which the industry is operating. There is, however, still a place for the so-called program picture. I believe the present tendency is toward specialization. And I see no reason why there should not be specialization in the program picture as well as in the special and the short subject.

It does not necessarily follow that because production has been curtailed there will be a demand that cannot be suitably filled. The point is not quantity of pictures, but quality. I see no reason to believe that the supply will be so short that any theatre will have to close for the want of a picture to show. What the exhibitor is after is box-office pictures. Give him those—in consistent measure—and he will solve the question of longer runs naturally and without any great difficulty.

Unquestionably, there has been a general turn for the better in pictures within the past year. The whole situation, of course, hinges upon the attitude of the public toward the industry. I believe we are becoming more and more responsive to public demand; more and more mindful of our responsibilities toward the American people.

Because we need the active co-operation of the public more than we need any other single thing, we also need healthy cooperation within the industry itself. Unless all the signs are wrong, we are entering an era of real cooperation with the public and with ourselves.

And that fact, above all others, makes me a thoroughgoing optimist about the industry's future.

By Jack Alicoate
The Film Daily

ACCORDING to the great business minds of the country, a decided improvement, already under way, can be looked for in a general economic way throughout the entire United States this coming fall and winter.

The period of readjustment is practically behind us. All lines of business are showing healthy reaction and with the communities that have been hit with the so-called depression again prosperous it cannot help but reflect in increased prosperity for the live, aggressive exhibitor.

The picture business is not unlike other lines in its fundamentals. It is based, like other great industries, primarily, upon the law of supply and demand. Experience has shown us that the great ninety per cent. of the American public must have clean, wholesome, cheap amusement, and nothing so adequately fills that demand as the motion picture. Increased patronage means increased prosperity for the exhibitor, which in turn is reflected to the distributor from whom he must buy, and is again carried on in turn to the source of supply, or producer.

Production for the past nine months has been at a low ebb. This condition is not without its beneficial results, as it has brought a market of overproduction back to normal, decreased production costs all along the line and weeded out a lot of sharp-shooting producing elements that were no more than leeches to the industry. Production is under way again with all of the prominent producers which should mean an ample amount of product for the coming season. With the vast amount of foreign product to draw from in case of emergency, I cannot see a shortage of product for this fall and winter.

Rigid Inspection Law for N. Y. Houses

From next October on every motion picture theatre in New York state must display a certificate to the effect that the house has been inspected and found to be a place absolutely safe for the audience which it can accommodate.

There have been a great many requests for the new law during the past two or three weeks, indicating that motion picture theatre owners are losing no time to comply with the provisions contained in it. Each theatre is to be inspected, especially with regards to the roof supports.

Rochester Exhibitors Pledge Support

The annual outing of the Rochester Motion Picture Theatre Owners was held at Point Pleasant, Irondequoit Bay, last Monday and was addressed, among others, by President Sydney S. Cohen of the M. P. T. O. A.

Jules Greenstone, president of the Rochester Motion Picture Exhibitors, was in the chair at the meeting incidental to the outing, which was attended by about two hundred.

In his opening address Greenstone pledged one-hundred percent support to the National organization and to Sydney Cohen. He also spoke along the same lines for Howard Smith of the Buffalo association. These messages expressed the sentiments of practically the entire body of theatre owners of Western and Northern New York.

Cohen, in his talk, reviewed the work of the organization and thanked the representatives present for their splendid cooperation.

Among other speakers were: Harry Barham, commissioner of public safety of Rochester and M. J. O'Toole of Scranton, Pa., chairman of the public service committee of the M. P. T. O. A.

Ginsberg Named Sales Manager by Lichtman

The appointment of Henry Ginsberg as General Sales Manager of the Al Litchtman Corporation has been announced. Ginsberg has been assisting Lichtman for several weeks past in lining up the distribution plans of the organization.

Because of his wide acquaintance among exchangemen and exhibitors Ginsberg is eminently qualified for the work he has undertaken. For nearly three years he has occupied the position of Sales Manager for Educational and has spent much of that time in the field. Prior to that connection he was with International. Practically his entire attention for years has been directed toward problems affecting National distribution and he possesses a wealth of ideas born of actual experience which will be invaluable.

Ginsberg accompanied Lichtman as far as Cleveland on the latter's tour of the country, returning to New York to complete his general organization work.

McVickers and Paramount Sign Agreement

McVickers' new million dollar theatre in Chicago has secured a five-year franchise for Paramount pictures. This deal was arranged this week between executives of McVickers and Adolph Zukor, president, and Sidney R. Kent, vice-president of Famous Players. Under the terms of the agreement McVickers are to have the pick of all pictures released by Paramount, it is announced .

IF a copy of Peter Milne's book, Motion Picture Directing (Falk Publishing Company) could be placed within reach of everyone concerned with picture production, from the executive seated behind his glass-top desk to the lowly extra in search for expression and fame—if this book which establishes the facts and theories of the newest art will be read by the producer, the director, the actor, the cameraman and all their assistants and its outline appreciated by them—then that oft-repeated slogan—" Fewer and Better Pictures " might carry some weight among those who have become skeptical concerning the progress of the fifth industry.

There is meat in this comprehensive volume—meat which should be thoroughly digested by all directors. For it cannot be disputed (to quote a familiar bromide) that a director makes or breaks a picture. Mr. Milne does not attempt to teach anyone the art of direction. The layman need not imagine after reading the book that he possesses the skill, imagination and knowledge of the technicalities of production that he could walk on a set and shout " Camera! " He points out convincingly that able direction comes only through the elements of generalship coupled with emotional and technical experience. And he has wisely chosen that handful of directors who have blazed the trail. Thus the less great through profiting by the ideas established by Messrs. Griffith, Ingram, Neilan, Cecil De Mille, Borzage, Edward Dillon, Chaplin, May and Lubitsch, may some day hope to have their ambitions and hopes realized.

There are illuminating chapters devoted to the creation of a picture from the time it leaves the author's hands until it is given thoroughly scenarioized by the continuity writer to the director. The book is highly readable, there being entire chapters detailing incident of production—such as the value of music in inspiring the proper mood in a company of players. The cameraman is given some attention. Also the art director who must see to it that the sets are in harmony with the plot and characterization. Mr. Milne pricks the German bubble and shows that Herr Lubitsch has much to learn from the Americans in giving a production the lasting stamp of individualism. He states emphatically that in the desire for spectacular effect the German often loses contact with the personal story. Mr. Milne firmly believes with Mr. Griffith that a picture must point its human values—also it isn't art. He exposes the tricks of the trade in a semi-humorous fashion and many of our lesser directors who have established themselves through sheer magic will wince if their nerves are the least bit sensitive.

On page 144 there appears an open letter from the Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers addressed to the members of the various organizations of motion picture theatre owners in the country, both local and national. As we have stated previously, it is our belief that the exhibitors of the country should take some action in connection with the music tax.

We believe that the matter should be taken up officially and decided finally with the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. We believe that some equitable understanding should and can be arrived at. There is no doubt that every theatre in the country desires to use the music controlled by this organization, though they can get along without it. We urge a conference. We hope it will result in a complete and satisfactory understanding between the theatre interests and the Society.

EDMUND LICHTENSTEIN, Director of the Cinema de la Monnaie in Brussels and of eight other theatres in the same theatre chain in Belgium, has arrived in New York on his way to Detroit. He will vacation here and return to his duties in August. He is in the market for twenty-five to fifty features for Belgium or the Continent.

Mr. Lichtenstein called at the office of Motion Picture News to tell us that the News has been his guide right along in theatre exploitation. He has complete file of copies for the past year and reads no other American paper.

There are some two hundred theatres in Brussels and when Mr. Lichtenstein went there last fall the total newspaper advertising space used in the leading paper totalled about three hundred lines per week at an expense of about $175.00 in American money. This display advertising in the newspapers has now been raised to 8000 lines a week.

Newspaper, billboard and screen advertising are most largely used. Other kinds of advertising are seriously hampered by city ordinances, as is true of all foreign cities. Mr. Lichtenstein recently gave a "Queen of Sheba" four weeks run. Previous to this no run had exceeded two weeks. His advertising in this instance is of interest. Because of the fact that his own theatre in Brussels did not accept screen advertising he engaged space on his competitors' screens using simply the words, "She is Coming". This was two weeks in advance of the showing of the "Queen of Sheba". The week before he changed the advertising to read— "She will arrive at the Gare du Nord at half past one o'clock". So effective was the advertising that 25,000 people were present and the police reserves had to be called out. An actress dressed for the part emerged from the station at this time and was escorted to the Cinema de la Monniae where the " Queen of Sheba " was announced.

Will Hays met last week with some fifty representatives of nationally organized bodies at the Waldorf for the purpose of discussing the picture industry with them and to get from them suggestions that might be of benefit to all branches of the industry. Just before the conclusion of the meeting a committee of three was appointed to act with Hays in the selection of a larger committee of fifteen whose duties it would be to put into effect and aid in carrying out different ideas advanced at the meeting and that might be advanced in the future.

If this committee actually functions in the sincere manner that those who advocated it were sure it would, then a great step for the advancement of the picture industry has been accomplished. Those fifty representatives gathered at the Waldorf represented a national membership running into the millions, in all probability. Each is a leader in a body that has branches in cities, towns and hamlets all over the United States. Each of these organizations has spent years in building a national machine through which it can function for its own purposes. Through the same channels it can function for the good of the picture game.

These organizations are not interested for the purpose of controlling the pictures nor to censor them. They have pledged themselves for better pictures and to help in any manner they could. If full advantage is taken of their kindly offer nothing but good for the game can result. The producer, the exhibitor, the exchange man and the distributor, all can benefit equally if these millions of people under the banners of the various organizations throughout the United States are made to realize, through the medium of their own organizations, that each is a part of this great industry, and that a suggestion advanced by any one of them for the improvement of pictures may be acted upon throughout the United States.

Paramount Stock Company School Praised

Will Hays Declares Plan Step Forward in High Purposes of the Association

"THE inauguration of the Paramount Stock Company and School is a splendid step forward in the direction of the association's high purposes. I am, of course, most happy about it."

This was the comment of Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, upon Paramount's announcement of its radical and ambitious plan for the betterment of motion pictures, as published in full in the trade press and newspapers. This step taken by Adolph Zukor and his associates in the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is in complete accord with the Hays program and is hailed both within and outside the industry as the first definite and tangible plan put forward by the producers themselves through which the Hays policies may be carried out.

Corroborating their earlier request for rules to govern all the players, nearly all the stars and directors at the Lasky studio have sent messages to Mr. Zukor pledging their enthusiastic support of the rules and the plan for the school. These telegrams, by reason of their source, stood out among all the hundreds of telegrams and letters that have been received by Mr. Zukor since the announcement was made, and give most gratifying evidence, Mr. Zukor says, of a spirit of the heartiest cooperation and an appreciation of the fact that the benefits of the plan far outweigh the restrictions imposed.

Among the first to give formal expression to their approval of the plan were the members of the Players' Board of Control, Conrad Nagel, Lois Wilson, Sylvia Ashton and Theodore Roberts. Their message reads as follows:

"The individual members of the Players' Board of Control desire to congratulate the officers of the Paramount Stock Company and School for the inception of a brilliant idea for the education of motion picture players in all branches of their profession, a plan designed to raise the art of the motion picture to the highest level of the other creative arts and to realize in a larger measure the unbounded scope of the screen. To our fellow members we would commend most heartily a careful study of the rules and regulations and the plan of instruction of the school. The rules are merely those which all clean-living, right-thinking persons observe; the courses have been charted by the masters in their respective fields whose names appear in the faculty roll. The rule applies here as to all mental achievement: that you will receive from the school a benefit exactly proportionate to the amount of work you put into it. Lastly, we pledge to you and to our other co-workers the fullest measure of cooperation and loyalty in every activity for 'better pictures,' which we realize you have instilled as the constant aim of everyone in the Paramount organization. Enthusiastically, Conrad Nagel, Lois Wilson, Sylvia Ashton, Theodore Roberts."

The announcement of the plan of the stock company and school received probably wider publicity than any other piece of news concerning the motion picture industry in recent months. Newspapers from coast to coast featured it under big headlines and hundreds of editorials praised the constructiveness of the plan. Even newspapers in London and other European capitals commented upon it.

Universal Exchange Men Enthuse at Meeting

Managers from All Parts of Country and Canada Declare Business Slump Is Over

THE first national gathering of Universal Film Managers from all Exchanges in the United States and Canada met in convention at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, Saturday and Sunday, June 24th and 25th. The meetings were presided over by E. H. Goldstein, Treasurer of the company, and A. A. Schmidt, General Sales Manager, assisted by George Levine, newly appointed General Manager of Short Product. Those in attendance were:

Buffalo, N. Y., M. A. Chase, Mgr.; Butte, Mont., A. W. Skoog, Mgr.; Charlotte, N. C., E. F. Dardine, Mgr., Chicago, Ill., Herman Stern, Dis. Mgr., I. Leserman, Louis Laemmle, Sales Promotion Mgr., W. L. Hill, Director of Publicity; Cincinnati, O., Cleve Adams, Mgr.; Cleveland, O., Tom Colby, Mgr.; Denver, Colo., E. Gerbase, Mgr.; Des Moines, Iowa, I. Davies, Mgr.; Detroit, Mich., J. Friedman, Mgr.; Indianapolis, Ind., R. W. Abbett, Mgr., J. H. Calvert; Kansas City, Mo., L. W. Alexander, Mgr.; Los Angeles, Calif., C. Theuerkauf, Mgr.; Oklahoma City, Okla., S. Benjamin, Mgr.; Omaha, Neb., H. F. Lefholtz, Mgr.; Portland, Ore., McMeckin, Mgr.; St. Louis, Mo., B. Rosenthal, Mgr.; Salt Lake, Utah, G. Hager, Mgr.; San Francisco, Calif., C. A. Nathan, Mgr.; Seattle, Wash., L. J. Schlaiffer, Mgr.; Spokane, Wash., A. H. McMillan, Mgr.; Toronto, Can., C. Hague, Mgr.; San Francisco, Cal., E. Armstrong, Mgr.; Denver, Colo., H. M. Herbel, Mgr.; Philadelphia, Pa., Jules Levy, Mgr.; Dallas, Tex., N. E. Depinet, Mgr.; New York, N. Y., C. Rosenzweig, Mgr. Special representatives, L. Jacobs, St. Louis, Mo., J. C. McNance, Kansas City, Mo.; F. J. McConnell, Serial Mgr.; Publicity, Kansas City, Mo., Louis Kramer.; Minneapolis, Minn., I. Gettlson, Mgr.; Milwaukee, Wis., Roy Baldwin, Mgr., C. L. Cassanave, Short Prod. Mgr.

At a gathering of the home office officials of the company in New York Monday night, the 19th, after reviewing the strength of the entire product for this coming season, the enthusiasm of everyone ran riot and as a result the Chicago convention was called in order that this enthusiasm might be transmitted to the field forces.

It was the consensus of opinion of all those attending the convention that the slump in business in general, including that of the Universal, was practically over.

Straight from the shoulder talks to the boys so ably given by the general officers present pepped up the staff to the very limit, for during their entire stay and despite the hot weather of Friday and Saturday, there was about the hotel the most enthusiastic bunch of film sales representatives ever gathered in this city.

Treasurer Goldstein returned to New York Sunday. The other general officers remained over until Tuesday with some of the sales representatives who came from distant points for further conference on the new plans and policies for the coming season.

E. E. Shauer Going Abroad

E. E. Shauer, assistant treasurer and director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will sail with Mrs. Shauer on the Laconia on July 6th for a visit of several weeks in Europe. Mr. Shauer will visit the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in Great Britain, France, Denmark and Germany and will discuss with J. C. Graham, general foreign representative, plans for further extension of Paramount distribution in Europe during the coming year. This is his thirty-first visit to Europe and will be in the nature of a joint vacation and business trip.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Over the Border—
A fair picture that did better business than we expected. (Middle West.)

Fairly good entertainment and box office value. (West.)

A little better than average. Played to fair business. (Middle West.)

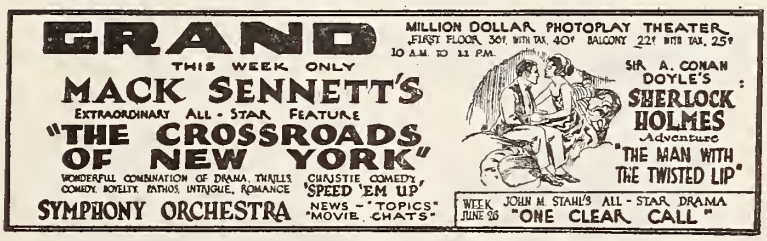
The Bachelor Daddy—
Excellent business. Lockout on Saturday and big crowds on Sunday. Did well on matinees with special showing of picture for orphans on Tuesday afternoon. Everybody liked it. (Middle West.)

Thomas Meighan is popular here and always assures a good attendance. This one did a lively week's business. (Middle West.)

Bought and Paid For—
Satisfying results reported on this attraction. Seemed to help matinee business especially, attracting many women. (East.)

The Sleep Walker—
Constance Binney not much of a box office attraction when she appears in such an average picture as this one. Business off. (East.)

North of the Rio Grande—
Jack Holt continues to come to the front and Bebe Daniels does good work in this rattling melodrama. Good box office attraction. (Middle West.)



Good, exciting Western picture—although patrons would rather see Bebe Daniels in a different sort of play. Business good for first of week. (East).

Don't Tell Everything—
On second showing business seemed to warrant holding it for the whole week but took it off in middle of run. (Middle West.)

The Woman Who Walked Alone—
Good commercial picture. Big business, aided by cool weather. (East.)

"Yellow Men and Gold," attraction at the Moon, Omaha

Is there any more forceful advertising than black and white? Note this one, for "The Crossroads of New York," at the Grand, Pittsburgh

For the Defense—
Fair in quality. Business fair. (East.)

Bobbed Hair—
Picture of mediocre character. Business only fair. (East.)

The Man From Home—
Good picture—pleased our audience, but played to poor business. (East.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Sonny—
Excellent picture in which Barthelmess does fine work. Played to good business. (Middle West.)

The Primitive Lover—
Average Constance Talmadge feature which played to fair business. (Middle West.)

Scrap Iron—
Did quite well on second showing. Birthday party for the kiddies on Saturday morning. (Middle West.)

Domestic Relations—
Fair picture with business about average. (West.)

The Woman He Married—
Picture and business both fair. (West.)

The Barnstormer—
Mediocre picture with business fair. (West.)

Crossroads of New York—
Very popular picture. (Middle West.)

Blind Hearts—
An average attendance although the size of the crowds did not justify the merit of production, which made a big hit with those who saw it. (Middle West.)

Smilin' Through—
As repeat at Karlton. Business better than expected. (East.)

My Boy—
Good picture. Audience liked it very much. Business fair. (East.)

METRO

Missing Husbands—
Good picture, distinctly foreign in its flavor. Biggest exploitation ever pulled in this city helped crowd the house for every performance during the week's run. (Middle West.)

They Like 'Em Rough—
Very unreal—terrible strain on the imagination. Overacted. Even the popularity of Viola Dana couldn't draw any attendance. (Middle West.)

Little Eva Ascends—
Good picture which played to good audiences. (Middle West.)

Conquering Power—
Rodolf Valentino goes over good and he went over exceptionally good in this feature. Picture pleasing. (East.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Ruling Passion—
They turned out well for this one, which proved to be a good box office attraction. (Middle West.)

Way Down East—
Previous showings of this one, along with a wide reputation as a good picture, caused it to go over great on a return engagement. (Middle West.)

Dream Street—
Received favorable comment but was not popularly attended. Business fair. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

Out of the Silent North—
Excellent outdoor picture. Average summer business. (Middle West.)

Fair business on this picture which my patrons considered to be fairly good. (Middle West.)

Once to Every Woman—
Fine picture which brought good business. (West.)

Foolish Wives—
Audience were not overly enthusiastic, although business was extraordinarily good. (East.)

SELZNICK

Reported Missing—
Thrilling and very funny. One of best attractions of weeks. (Middle West.)

Conceit—

GOLDWYN

The Poverty of Riches—
Very acceptable. Ran a free matinee for every mother who came with her child on Friday afternoon. (Middle West.)

Yellow Men and Gold—
A good action picture which, in spite of warm weather, did a very fair business. (East.)

Grand Larceny—
Went over pretty well. (Middle West.)

Watch Your Step—
Fairly good entertainment with fair business. (West.)

Golden Dreams—
This is a feature with strong story and fine acting. Pleased our audience. Business good. (Middle West.)

The Night Rose—
Fair picture of effective appeal. Did very well. (East.)

FOX

Arabian Love—
Did better than anything has for six or seven weeks. Good picture. (Middle West.)

A good business despite hot weather. The production proved popular with most patrons. (Middle West.)

A Virgin Paradise—
Pearl White a favorite at this house and this vehicle just suited patrons. Business fine all week. (East.)

FILM BOOKING OFFICES

The Barricade—
Very good picture. (Middle West.)

The Vermilion Pencil—
Good pictures for followers of Hayakawa. Business good. (East.)

Duke of Chimney Butte—
Nice little Western picture. Patrons sort of liked it and so did I personally. Business fair. (East.)

PATHE

Nanook of the North—
Fine production, scenically and dramatically. One of the few really interesting pictures to be had. Our audiences liked it very well and complimented us on it. Good attendance all week. (Middle West.)

AMERICAN RELEASING

Sisters—
Good picture that was moderately well liked. Played it with a double feature bill so can't tell just how it would stand up alone. (Middle West.)

STATE RIGHTS

Determination—
Very poor picture. Little drawing power.

I Am the Law—

The Worldly Madonna—
Mediocre picture. Fair business. (East.)

Dalton's Doubles Interest Hagerstown Fans

MORE than 140 young women of Hagerstown, Md., thought they resembled Dorothy Dalton in the Resemblance Contest, conducted jointly by the Colonial theatre and the Hagerstown Daily Mail. The contest served to keep Miss Dalton on the front page of the newspaper a week preceding the run of the picture at the Colonial theatre. By the time the print arrived, the town was sold 100 per cent.

Leslie F. Whelan, representing Paramount; William H. Lacy, the Hammerstein Production Co., and a member of the staff of the Daily Mail, took care of the details.

Mounted Cut-outs Dress Lobby for "Island Wives."

E. J. Barnette, manager of the Victory theatre, Waco, Texas, gave "Island Wives" some good exploitation recently.

The twenty-four sheet on this picture shows Corinne Griffith in two poses one the island girl, and the other the wealthy New York society woman. These two poses were cut and mounted on beaver board, then placed on opposite sides of the theatre lobby.

Across the entranee of the lobby was a large sign telling of the picture and the star. Small and large tropieal plants, particularly palms were everywhere in the lobby, giving it the South Sea Island appeal.

One of the best located merchants in Waco allowed Manager Barnette to dress his entire window in tropical settings, also three and six sheets were made into cutouts and placed in the windows. The store displayed their latest in Summer Bathing suits and Tropical garments. An Ad appeared in the newspapers about the display and the pieture in connection with the dry goods store's regular advertising. A teaser newspaper campaign in which "Wanted 1,000 Wives" was used freely prior to the announcement of the picture created considerabe interest, was a successful part of the exploitation.

Newspaper Teasers Make Hash of Calendar

MANAGER FRANK WINTER of the Empress theatre, Moncton, New Brunswick, made hash of the calendar when .he played "Saturday Night."

He took a series of newspaper teasers that literally had the town in a whirl.

One read:

"'Saturday Night:' If Saturday is Wednesday night, and Wednesday night is Saturday night, and Saturday night is Thursday night, and Thursday night is Saturday night, and Saturday night is Friday night and Friday night is Saturday night, and Saturday night is Saturday night, what do you know about Saturday night."

Picture Puzzle Helps Harrison Put Over "World's Champion"

Manager J. P. Harrison of the Hippodrome theatre, Waco, Tex., carried out a very elaborate campaign on "The World's Champion" by distributing 3,800 special heralds. Street cards were placed in the most favorable locations in the town and special posters in all hotel lobbies.

To interest the children in the picture a puzzle was published in the local paper. The object was to get the children to tell the name of the picture. The winners were admitted free. About 420 children attended the children's performance.

For tieups Mr. Harrison secured a window in the best sporting goods house in the city and rigged up a miniature ring for boxing and had two small figures aetually fight.

The lobby display consisted of a gymnasium outfit ant two cut-outs of Wallaee Reid in his fighting togs. Real bathrobes were placed around the Reid cut-outs to make them look more realistic.

Lobby decorations for "Smilin' Through," as arranged by Manager W. E. Drumbar of the Riviera theatre, Knoxville, Tenn.

"Smilin' Through" Candy Makes Bow at Hillsdale, Mich.

"Smilin' Through" candy made its bow when Norma Talmadge played at the Dawn theatre, Hillsdale, Mich. The manufacturer used a specially prepared box with the caption: "You can go 'Smilin' Through' from the top layer to the bottom." Most of the buyers did.

Grauman Stages Baby Peggy Contest

SID GRAUMAN gave Baby Peggy and her starring vehicle, "The Little Rascal," some effective exploitation, when the comedy was on the bill at Grauman's theatre, recently.

A contest was put over in which children resembling Baby Peggy were invited to compete on the theatre stage.

The prize was a valuable wrist watch and at each performance children were judged as to size, 'cuteness and general appearance. At the close of the contest Mr. Grauman gave a luncheon to all the children entered in it.

Lobby decorations on "Ten Nights in a Barroom," by S. N. Brooks, manager of the Royal theatre, Little Rock, Ark.

Lazarus, First National Exploiteer, Wakes Up Southern Tier

Jeff Lazarus, exploitationist attached to the Buffalo First National office, dashed into Elmira recently and woke up that Southern Tier town with some real publicity stunts on "Hail the Woman," which was shown at the Mozart. The best bit of exploitation was the double page spread in the Elmira Star-Gazette, the first in its history by the way, on a fine tie-up with Elmira's successful business women. A good feature of the ad was the announcement at its top that the first five women patronizing any of the businesses listed would be given free passes to the Mozart.

The next town to receive the attention of Mr. Lazarus was Oswego where he co-operated with R. E. Chase of the Capitol in putting on "Smilin' Through," hooking up on the prosperity idea. The theme of the campaign was "Prosperity Brings a Smile, But a Smile Brings Prosperity Quicker." The prosperity idea was put over in co-operation with the Chamber of Commerce, K. of C. and Kiwanis Club. A catch card was sent to members of the women's clubs. Two members of each club were invited to see the picture as the guests of the Capitol. One thousand telephone hangers were used. A singer with a trailer was used one week in advance. Tie-ups with three music stores were put over. A film was run off showing styles of women's clothing in 1861 with a soloist accompanying it, singing old songs like "The Bowery."

Buffalo is still talking about the traffic zone idea put over by Mr. Lazarus in connection with the Shea Hippodrome run of "Smilin' Through." Signs on the zone chains read: "Drive Carefully, Avoid Accidents and Go Smilin' Through 1922. Norma Talmadge, Shea's Hipp."

Tunstall Ballyhoos "School Days" to the Limit

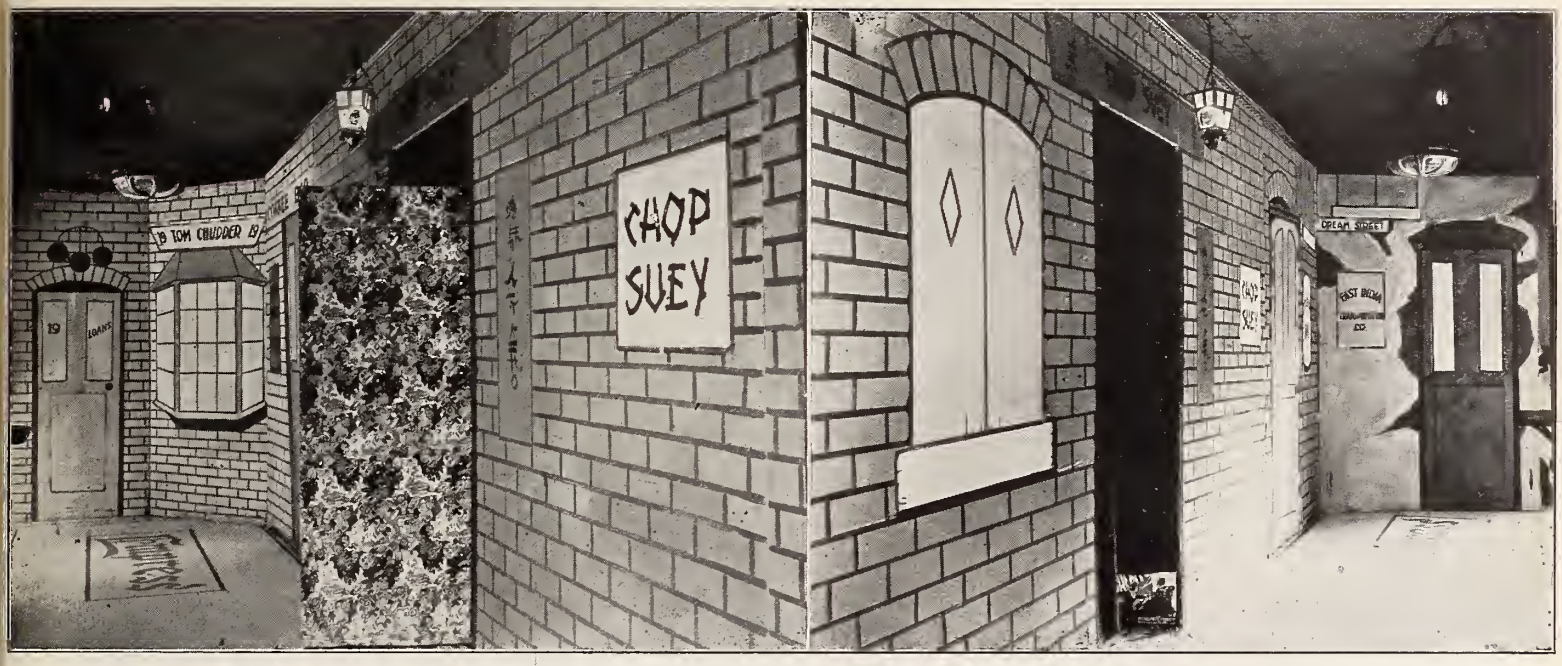
NO angles were overlooked by Manager Tunstall of the Rialto theatre, Chickasha, Okla., in exploiting "School Days," even the small towns for a radius of 15 miles being papered with heralds and dunce-caps. An ambulance and stretcher stunt and the wagon ballyhoo used by Manager Tunstall were knock-outs. In the former the ambulance and siren tooting drew big crowds and when the "victim" was brought out of the theatre cards were tacked on the sides of the stretcher, reading: "This man bursted his sides laughing at Wesley Barry in "School Days," and a minute's stop on the sidewalk allowed all to read these. Similar banners were hung on the car which was then driven all over town.

Of barely secondary interest was the wagon and team ballyhoo, with a big blackboard, six school desks, and six kids in dunce-caps, and a teacher in a frock coat. The lesson on the board was about "School Days" and each child got up in turn and read something.

Dresses Orchestra in Rube Attire for "Fresh from Farm"

When the Allen theatre in Montreal, Quebec, played "Fresh From the Farm," the management put on a special musical score with the orchestra dressed up in farmer costumes. The comedy is particularly adaptable to presentation savoring of the "rustic" atmosphere, and this stunt added considerable interest to the showing.

'Frisco Theatre Puts Up Job on Publicist



Milton F. Samis, popular young San Francisco man and publicity director of the California and Portola theatres since the opening of the Granada when E. Nick Ayer left the publicity field to become house manager of the new house, was married to Miss Edna Neikirk, at the Stanford University Memorial Chapel in Palo Alto on May 6.

Young Samis and his bride left shortly afterwards for a wedding trip to Yosemite, where their romance began, but before leaving were caught in the meshes of a fraternity "frame up." The Grenada theatre had passed a temporary ruling permitting the use of marriage licenses issued in May, 1922, as tickets of admission to the theatre during the week of "Is Matrimony a Failure?" Samis and his bride journeyed up the Grenada way to make a latent investigation into the question. Louis W. McDermott, a fellow member of Theta Delta Chi, the national fraternity, was recently made housemanager of the Granada. He instructed the ticket-taker to refuse admission to Samis' pass and insist upon the not-yet-recorded marriage license.

Samis flushed and his bride blushed when a crowd assembled behind them. Finally, heckled but unretreating, he pulled out the license and entered to find a smiling row of Theta Delts awaiting him inside. The enterprising Granada publicity department took advantage of the story and had a photographer on the spot, with the result of a three-column cut and story in the paper next day.

Illustrating by cut the exploitation on "His Nibs," put over by Ralph Talbot, manager of Majestic theatre, Tulsa, Okla.

Two views of the "Dream Street" lobby display, which the Empress the atre, Lansing, Mich., constructed for a recent showing of this picture

Advance Show of "Smilin' Through" Part of Ann Arbor Campaign

Manager Gerald Hoag pulled over a comprehensive exploitation campaign for his Majestic Theatre, Ann Arbor, Mich., on "Smilin' Through," the distinctive feature of which was the co-operation of faculty and students of the University of Michigan. Members of the faculty and leaders among the student body were invited to an advance showing that also included members of the Rotary Club and of the local journalistic field. Opinions given at this showing were used in the advertising later and also quoted in the student publication at the university:

Healthy newspaper and retail merchants cooperation put "Smilin' Through" cards in 200 retail windows and brought it to the notice of every one who came to Ann Arbor. The fact was evidenced at the box office.

"The Oath" Sold by Teaser Newspaper Ads

CLASPED hands with the two words, THE OATH, without quotation marks, were used for teaser newspaper advertisements on this attraction when it played the New Royal theatre, Findlay, O. It proved an effective teaser for arousing interest and paved the way for the display advertising on the picture.

Tiny Auto Ballyhoos "Across the Continent"

THE STEARNS-KNIGHT CO. of Detroit has a tiny automobile scarcely larger than a toy, which they use for street exploitation.

Johnny Howard, Paramount Exploiteer of Detroit, got the contraption to exploit "Across the Continent" for the Adams theatre, well realizing that such an automobile invariably draws a crowd.

It was properly bannered to give both the Stearns people and the theatre equal advertisement.

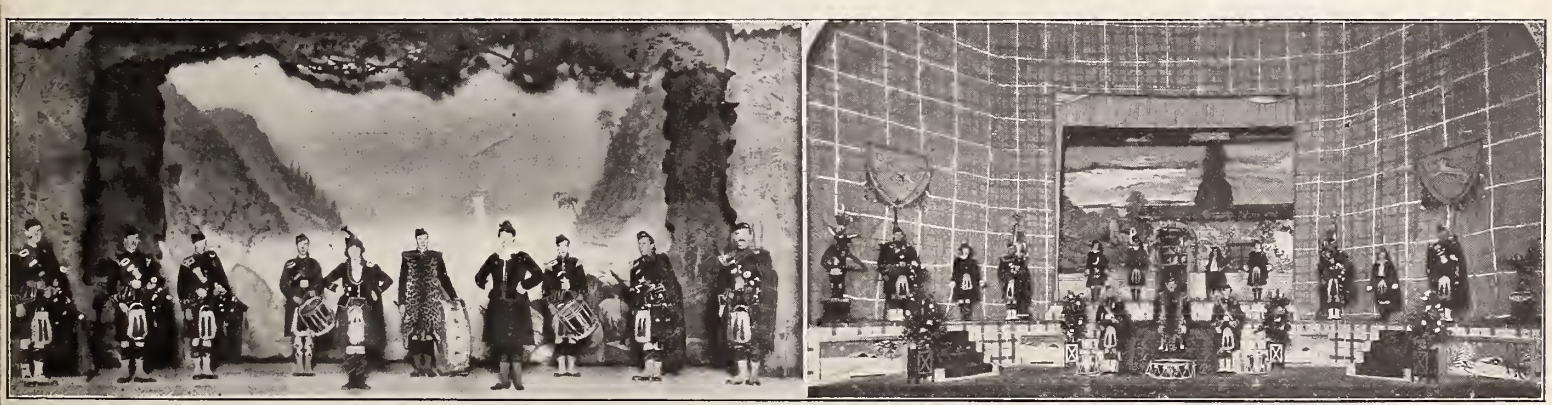
Old Bell Is Feature of "School Days" Campaign

The "lief motif" of "School Days," namely, the old time school room slate, was used to good advantage by Manager J. P. Harrison, Hippodrome Theatre, Waco, Texas. An attractive lobby also helped to sell the picture to the public.

Two cut-outs of Wesley Barry, one facing the street and the other facing a large slate, were placed in the lobby. On top of the slate Manager Harrison placed an old-fashioned school bell, and it was made to ring at infrequent intervals. The ringing of the bell in the theatre lobby attracted the crowds, and the attractive front helped to pull the patrons into the theatre.

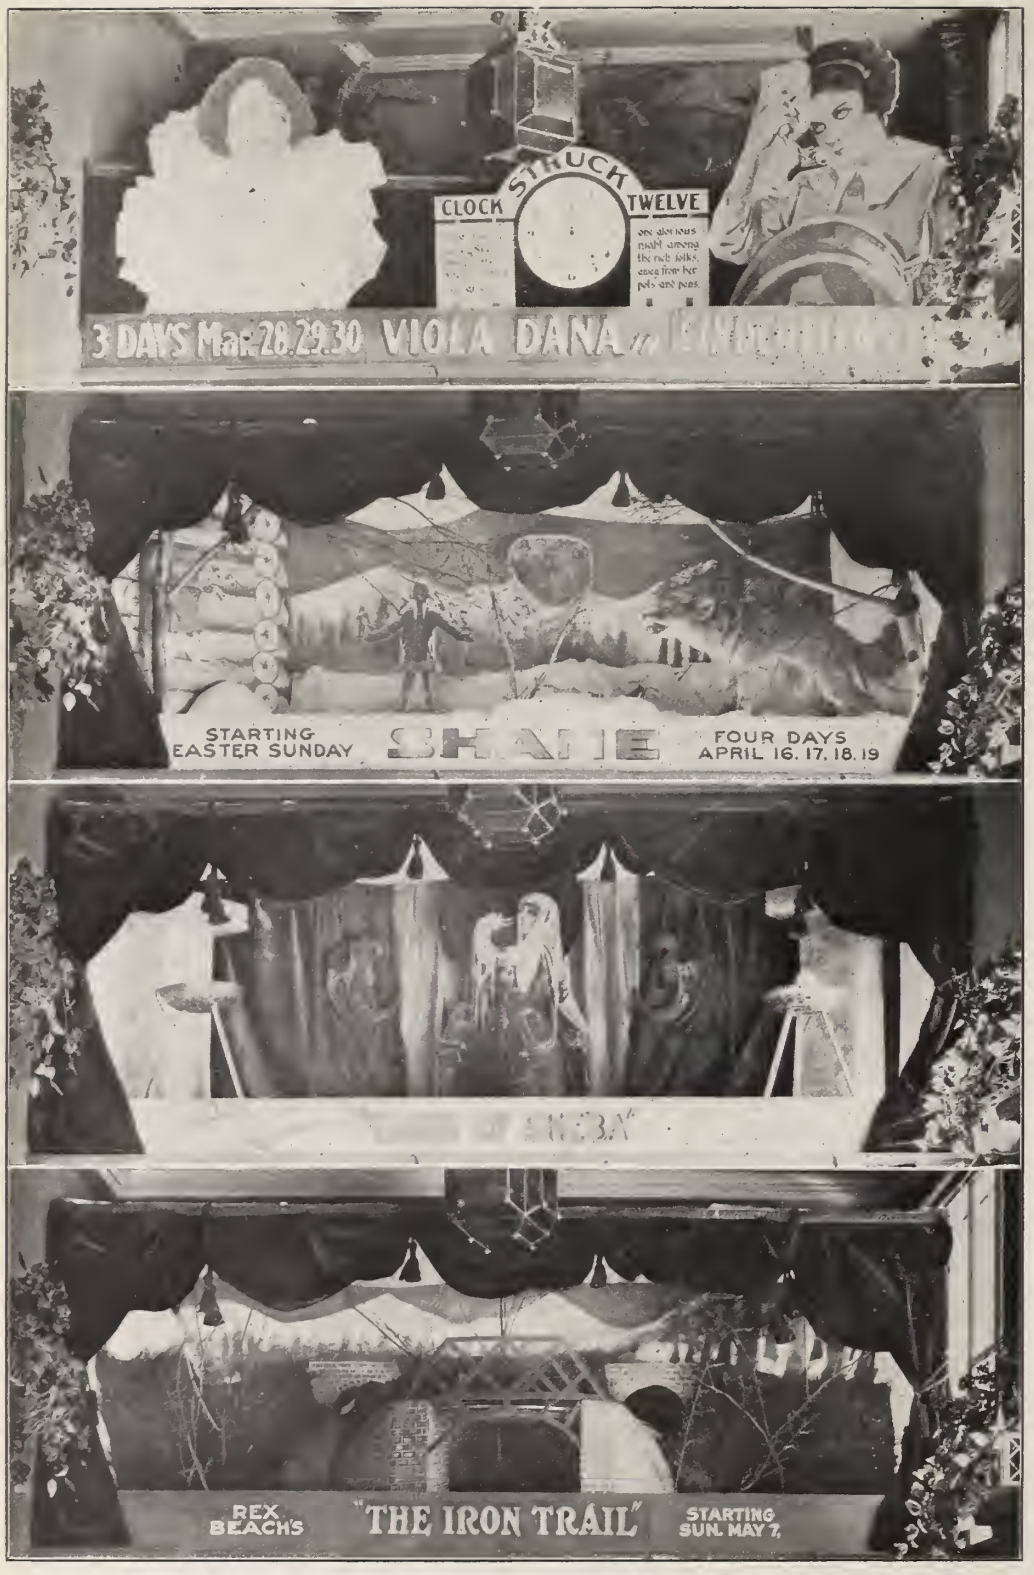
Catchy Titles Give Holloway Fine Teaser Ad. Idea

A couple of catchy titles like "What Do Men Want" and "No Woman Knows," may be used to garner a lot of publicity at small expense, as has been proven by Manager I. C. Holloway of the Grand theatre, Columbus, Ga.



Mr. Holloway had these two pictures booked in succession as he ran a teaser campaign in the newspapers and on his screen featuring both titles. This got a laugh out of his patrons and got unusual attention for his straight advertising for both these pictures.

For "What Do Men Want?" he used 100 teaser cards on the street cars and in show windows. In the lobby he had a large illuminated question mark.



When he got them in for the first picture he sold them the second largely by a series of slides. The result was that "No Woman Knows" opened to the largest Sunday business the Grand has done in months.

Book Stores Help Burns Sell "Penrod"

EVERY book store in Orlando, Fla., specialized a window display on "Penrod" the day this attraction played there and Manager Burns who arranged the tie ups was credited with a 1,000 per cent average on his showing.

Ice Cream Cones Gratis at "Penrod" Matinee

MANAGER SHIRLEY of the Strand theatre, Schenectady, N. Y., topped an excellent freckles contest and a Penrod suit contest with the use of ice cream cones for his showing of "Penrod."

A deal was arranged whereby a local ice cream company, in return for some free advertising, furnished enough cream for a cone for each child. Outside the theatre was a white clothed table over which a lady dressed in white presided. Each child entering for the matinee was given a cone.

New Roth-Partington 'Frisco Theatre Exploits Comedy

Several effective tie-ups were made by the exploitation department of the new Roth and Partington theatre in San Francisco, the Granada in connection with the exploitation of "Fair Enough."

The campaign included tie-ups with Market Week, modeling in San Francisco hats in connection with one of the city's largest department stores, co-operation on Pencil Day for Homeless Children and personal appearance by Dorothy Devore. Miss Devore was interviewed by the newspapers and assisted in the publicity stunts put over.

Mapleton Youngsters Take Exploitation Course

"MOLLY O" was being played at the Opera House, Mapleton, Ia. The city has still to acquire a regular motion picture theatre so the attraction was staged under the auspices of the consolidated schools. The youngsters had read in the trade papers of the power of exploitation and started out on their own account to make the show a financial success that would warrant bringing other pictures to Mapleton and perhaps induce a theatrical man to put capital into building a theatre there.

The stunt was a simple ballyhoo and still different from any of the previous exploitations of "Molly O." They brought out the old hook and ladder to play up the fire scene in the production, bordered it with banners and clanging bells, manned it with a crew of juvenile firemen and had it traverse the main streets of the town. The ingenuity and initiative paid at the box office and "Molly O" was reported a success. The kids say that when they have a theatre they expect to put on some real exploitation.

Schenectady's City Fathers Co-operate on "Smilin' Through" Campaign

Thirty huskies of the Schenectady, N. Y., traffic squad devoted their early morning hours of one week day to whitewashing prominent streets intersections with the sign:

"Stop. Let's go 'Smilin' Through' Schenectady."

The stunt, sponsored by the local business boosters, was for the benefit of the city in general and for the Strand Theatre specifically. Thirty different signs can cover every block leading to the business section in a city the size of Schenectady and, with the sign painted to be read by oncoming traffic it is certain that it received the attention of every motorist who came in.

In addition the exploitation campaign included a window tie up with a millinery shop that made attractive use of a cutout of Norma Talmadge, giving over the entire window simply to a display of stills and posters from the picture.

Miniature House Used in "Rent Free" Lobby Display

When "Rent Free" played the Strand theatre, Mashalltown, Iowa, Joe Jacobson, manager, constructed a little house and placed it in the very center of the lobby. It proved a novel and profitable bit of exploitation and was reflected in record breaking business at the box office.

This lobby display for "School Days" was designed and built by Manager Brownlee of the Palace theatre, Muskogee, Okla.

Good Lobby Display Used for "School Days"

The followers of the school room idea for a lobby display in conjunction with the showing of "School Days," has apparently proven worth while for many theatre managers. Manager Ollie Brownlee, of the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, Okla., created school room atmosphere by completely covering his lobby with small slates and school paraphernalia.

Directly in the center of the lobby he placed an old-fashioned slate made from beaver board, illuminating it around the border with frosted lights. On the slate were drawn in kid writing some crudely drawn pictures and symbols. The cost of the lobby display was practically nothing, and it helped to increase the business of the theatre during the run of the picture.

Identification Contest Used in West

THE MURRAY THEATRE, Murray City, Utah, has revived the Star Identifictaion Contest which is about 100 per cent effective in a little town about Murray's size.

Rick Ricketson, Paramount Exploiteer from the Salt Lake City Exchange, pulled the stunt for "Beyond the Rocks." Every day for two weeks, pictures of two Paramount stars appeared in the Murray Eagle. Persons correctly identifying them received autographed photographs and two tickets to see "Beyond the Rocks."

Pretentious "Sheba" Lobby Arranged by Bleich Theatre

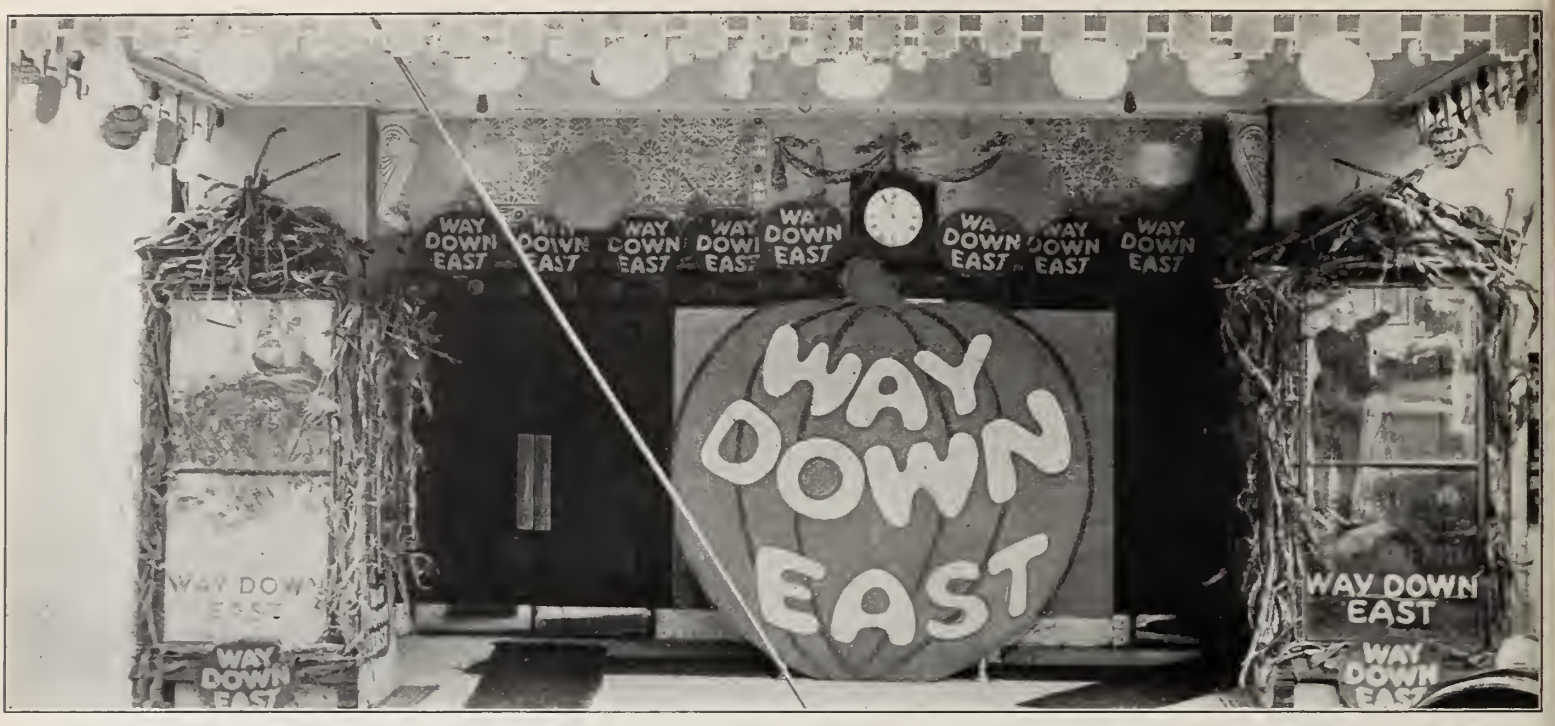
Pretentiousness was lent to the lobby of the Bleich theatre, Owensboro, Ky., during a recent engagement of "Queen of Sheba," by the superimposition of cleverly designed compo board colonnades.

The colonnades permitted four entrance and exit arches and were painted to resemble white stone. Above the arches were painted tapestries of the "Sheba" period. Atop these was a foot-high banner reading "Queen of Sheba." Two smaller signs spoke of the run.

One-sheets and stills were used to decorate the empty spots in the front.

New Drug Store Furnishes "Queen of Sheba" Exploitation Idea

When "Queen of Sheba" played at the De Luxe theatre, in Utica, N. Y., Sim Allen, manager of the Robbins house, told the Fox representative a new drug store was opening at the busiest corner of the town. This corner, incidentally, is the transfer point for all street cars. The Fox man, with Allen, went to see the druggists. They worked out a deal that brought both sides business. Here it is:



The store gave a box of chocolates to each of the first 300 people making purchases. A pass to see "Queen of Sheba" was placed in each box. In return the store windows carried cards, 30x40 inches, showing production stills and telling the passers-by in Utica that "Queen of Sheba" never tasted better candy than these chocolates.

The day before the opening of the show and the first day the store was open the druggists ran full-page ads telling of the event. The proprietors felt that there was something still due the theatre for giving the passes, so they devoted a two-inch strip across the page each day to this announcement:

"'Queen of Sheba' is coming to Utica. See her at the De Luxe theatre. Get your tickets for the show at Sullivan & Slosson."

The bath tub stunt on "Saturday Night" was pulled recently at the Liberty theatre, Yakima, Wash., by Manager W. A. Gillespie

Ollie Brownlee, manager of the Palace theatre, Muskogee, Okla, constructed this lobby front on "Way Down East."

Miniature Room Serves Nicely as "Wall Flower" Exploitation

As exploitation for "The Wall Flower," Manager Charles E. Sassen of the Queen theatre, Galveston, Texas, built an atmospheric lobby that increased business considerably.

A small showcase was borrowed from a local merchant. Wall paper of a striped design was arranged on the inside of the case so as to make a miniature room. In the center of the case was a miniature rug and several tiny chairs. In one of the chairs was a doll, dressed as is Colleen Moore in the picture.

In addition to the window display several attractive window tie-ups were secured.

Painting Side Walks Best of Exploitation, Says Ogg

FOR a small town, Manager E. C. Ogg of the Imperial theatre, South Pittsburg, Tenn., believes there is nothing more effective in advertising a picture than painting the sidewalks, so three days before his playing dates on "The Night Horseman" he heralded the attraction in this manner. Of course, he did not neglect his slide advertising, for fifteen days in advance of showing it was announced on the screen. And the usual newspaper advertising was also used, while one, three and six-sheets were displayed in the windows of business houses.

"Man's Home" Gets Assistance From Montgomery Bankers

A novelty sign placed on a fence built around a bank building under construction at Montgomery, Ala., was one of the exploitation mediums which Manager H. C. Farley of the Empire theatre used in connection with the run of "A Man's Home."

The sign read "This building will not be a man's home but the people who run the bank can help a man to have a home. A Man's Home, Empire Theatre." In addition to this a large banner was displayed at the Auditorium where a builders' show was held. The banner called attention to the fact that it is a big advantage to a man to own his home.

Toy Balloons Rival National Contest at Empress Theatre, Fremont

Taking advantage of the timely interest in the national balloon flying contest from Milwaukee, Manager R. B. Thomas of the Empress Theatre, Fremont, Neb., aided by a First National exploitation man, staged a balloon contest all his own that rivalled the national championship eliminations.

The Empress was playing "Hail the Woman" at the time; and on the same day that the papers announced the start from Milwaukee of 15 entrants in seven column heads, Manager Thomas announced the start of his own 15 entrants on Main Street. Each balloon was given the name of a famous First National star and a color to signalize it.

And—here's the big thing: each balloon was supplied with a pass to the Empress. Where the spectators at Milwaukee applauded the length of time each balloon stayed up, the spectators at Fremont greeted each heavenward flurry with a profound objection. From the standpoint of the Empress this only increased interest in the race which was the most successful exploitation stunt ever seen in Fremont.

Ratings on Features Explained

Exhibitor Reports in Percentages is the result of giving figure ratings to word box office and entertainment value reports from exhibitors, and by arithmetic reducing the total number of reports to percentages.

The key ratings accepted for use are:

Poor	Fair	Average	Good	Big
20%	40%	50%	70%	100%

To arrive at the rating of a picture, the number of reports at each individual rating are multiplied by the key rating percentage, the whole is totaled and the sum obtained divided by the total number of reports received.

The rating is applied separately to the box office and entertainment value related by each report.

No picture will be included in the list which does not receive at least ten reports.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE

D. O., known to exhibitors of the territory as "Dandy Old" Reese, will hereafter cover Wisconsin territory for Vitagraph, working out of the Chicago office. Mr. Reese, for some time past, has been connected with the Celebrated Film Corporation.

Dan Roche, Paramount's publicity director in this territory, states that his company will run a nine hundred line ad in the home town paper for every theatre, regardless of size of the city or town in which it is located, which signs up to show his company's pictures for seven days, starting September 3rd, which is Paramount Week. In keeping with the new policy of greatly increasing advertising space, Paramount will start a big billboard campaign in Chicago, July 1st, utilizing fifty painted and lighted boards fifty feet long and of standard height. Mr. Roche has picked out locations for these boards near theatres using Paramount service and states that the advertising and illustrations on the boards will be changed monthly.

Miss Rosscan has taken over the lease of the Princess Theatre, at Monticello, Illinois, formerly operated by J. V. Kratz. It is understood that she will continue selling film and have a manager operate the theatre for her.

John D. Clark, special representative of Paramount, was a Chicago visitor this week.

An important sales conference of Metro officials was held in Chicago this week with Vice-President and General Manager W. E. Atkinson in the chair. Among those who attended were Sales Manager E. M. Saunders, of New York; District Manager Shirley, and Manager L. A. Rozelle, of Chicago; Manager A. H. Fisher, of Minneapolis; Manager C. R. Osborne, of Omaha; S. L. Haldeman, of Kansas City and Charles Werner, of St. Louis. Mr. Atkinson, in a talk at the meeting, declared that he looks for the coming fall to inaugurate Metro's best season and in confirmation of this belief, pointed to the splendid array of pictures his company will have and to the fact that business in general is showing a marked revival, which will soon react on the picture business and stimulate all branches of the industry. A pleasing, social event of the meeting was a dinner at the South Shore Country Club on Tuesday evening, which was tendered the visiting officials by Mr. Rozelle.

G. K. Spoor, president of Essanay Film Company, is planning what will probably be the greatest apartment project in Chicago. Architects already have designed the first big unit, a fourteen story structure to contain eighty-four apartments and to cost approximately $950,000, which will stand at the northwest corner of Argyle Street and the Lake Shore. Four duplicates of this first unit will be erected according to present plans one year apart and when all are completed more than five million dollars will have been spent on the project. Mr. Spoor owns one thousand feet of the present Lake Shore extending south from the site of the first unit and a strip two blocks long, extending across Margate Terrace.

Manager Rozelle of Metro, reports that the big feature production, "The Prisoner of Zenda," has been booked into the Roosevelt for an indefinite run, starting in August.

W. B. Franks, general sales manager of Pathe, is in Chicago arranging for first run of "Grandma's Boy," Harold Lloyd's five reel feature comedy, which, it is said, surpasses "A Sailor Made Man," which proved a genuine success.

Bill Aschman, formerly manager of Pathe's Chicago exchange, who resigned to promote the Dempsey-Carpentier pictures in Wisconsin and Illinois, in conjunction with Ben Beadell, has again entered the Pathe service as manager of the Milwaukee exchange, where he was stationed previous to coming to Chicago.

S. H. Shirley, district manager of Metro, is now casting for "muscies" in the big fish's native haunt, the northern Wisconsin lakes.

J. G. Gillick, Pathe's Illinois and Indiana branch manager, made a trip to the Tri Cities this week to arrange for the premier showing of "Nanook of the North."

Several changes in Ascher Brothers organization have occurred recently. Harry Ascher has assumed personal management of the West Englewood Theatre, at 63rd and Marshfield Avenue, the largest of the Ascher houses, and Dave Rice has been transferred to the Ravenswood, a northside house. Roy C. McMullen, who was manager of the Roosevelt Theatre, previous to its transfer to Balaban & Katz, has returned from his west coast vacation trip, and resumed his new duties as resident manager of Ascher's Palace Theatre, Peoria. L. J. Ludwig, an expert accountant, formerly connected with Arthur Anderson & Company, has been installed as controller of the Ascher corporation, and Richard Robertson, last week, was appointed head of the advertising and exploitation department.

The Dearborn Theatre Company has taken a lease on the house under construction at the corner of Elston and Keystone.

I. Maynard Schwartz, manager of Educational's Chicago exchange, and his brother, Jack, of First National, made good time to New York on their motor trip, and expect to head back for Chicago early next week. William Schwartz, I. Maynard's other brother, who covers central Illinois territory for Educational, is sitting in as manager during the latter's vacation.

Si Griever will leave for New York on July 2nd, where he will spend some time looking for high grade features and short subjects to add to his list of Fall releases. Mr. Griever believes that big pictures must be provided for exhibitors, and is determined to supply them what they need. Two recent additions to his sales force are: W. VanGelder, recently with Educational, who will cover Northern Indiana; and Stuart De Lang, veteran Indianapolis salesman, who will work out of that city for the Griever organization.

The formal opening of the Roosevelt theatre as a Balaban & Katz house, was scheduled for Saturday, July 1st, following a three day close-down, during which a large force of decorators, who worked twenty-four hours a day, completely renovated and rebeautified the theatre. "Orphans of the Storm" was chosen as the premier attraction, which will be shown at the new scale of admission prices, made effective by the new management, 39 cents in the morning, 50 cents afternoons and evenings during the week, and 60 cents on Saturdays and Sundays. Under Balaban & Katz's policy, the Roosevelt will be distinctly a picture house, elaborate presentations and symphony orchestras, such as will continue to be featured at the Chicago, being omitted from the program. According to a statement, given out at Balaban & Katz's headquarters, while it is their belief, based on successful experience of the Chicago, Tivoli, Riviera and Central Park that eighty per cent. of motion picture public want the big programs, as presented at those houses, there is an element, especially in the loop, which desire straight picture programs with fine musical setting, and this is the class of theatregoers that the Roosevelt hereafter will seek. Louis L. Lipstein will have charge of the music at the Roosevelt, as well as the Central Park theatre, and A. J. Balaban will personally manage the house.

Henry Ellman, widely known film man, who for the past six years has been associated with Reelcraft, has purchased an interest in the Favorite Players Film Corporation, and will take over the general management on July 3rd. The company now maintains offices in Indianapolis and Milwaukee, as well as Chicago, and these will be continued under Mr. Ellman's supervision. The present list of releases will be increased by a number of excellent feature films and short subjects, according to Mr. Ellman. Ike Von Ronkel, the retiring manager, plans a three month's vacation, after which he will announce a new connection in the film business.

W. D. Burford has returned from New York, where for the past two weeks he has been participating in the conferences between the officials of Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and Will Hays.

Vaughan C. Marshall, a prominent Australian exhibitor, and former owner of the Victory theatre at Melbourne, Australia's largest cinema palace, visited Chicago this week enroute from New York to San Francisco, from where he will sail for his home. Messrs. Stern, Lesserman and Hill, of Universal, entertained him during his short stay and enabled him to see some of Chicago's leading theatres, including the Chicago and Roosevelt, which won his enthusiastic praise. Mr. Marshall has disposed of his Australian theatre interests and may return to the United States later. Australia, with the rest of the world, felt some depression after the war, but the show business there is rapidly returning to normal, he states, and people are flocking to see American pictures, preferring them to the product of British studios or any other. German pictures are not tolerated in Antipodes since the war.

Ben Lasker has purchased the Easterly theatre from Mr. and Mrs. Emily Dirkes and will take charge on July 1st.

Maurice Salkin's wide circle of friends in the industry will be glad to know that he is recovering nicely after the severe operation he underwent at the Michael Reese Hospital last week.

In the Independent Field

Conducted by CHESTER J. SMITH

George Wiley Enters Independent Field

GEORGE H. WILEY announces that he has entered the State right and independent market, under the corporate name of George H. Wiley, Inc., with offices in the Candler Building. Wiley is well known in the field he has chosen.

The new firm has already lined up a number of productions to be released within the next year. Wiley announces that he has contracted for a series of eight 5-reel pictures, directed by Milburn Morante, and to be known as Milburn Morante Productions. These are to be released one every six weeks, starting September 15.

Production has already begun on the first of the series, "The Timber Wolf," the entire company having gone to Lake Tahoe, Cal., to shoot exteriors. The featured players in "The Timber Wolf" are Clara Horton and Tom Gallery, who are surrounded by an excellent cast.

The new concern is now releasing a series of six Chester two-reel comedies, four of which feature Snooky the Humanzee.

Dignity in dancing is one of the subjects in the newest issue of Urban Movie Chats. How to ask a lady to dance, how to embrace one's partner, and most important, how to take leave of her at the conclusion of the dance, are some of the points illustrated.

The wrong methods are illustrated as well as the correct methods. After seeing Miss Marguerite Walz show how not to do certain things, it is barely possible that the old stately minuet will be preferred to the modern "Lover's Cuddle." Some of the bad manners of the ballroom today are strikingly illustrated; especially that dance which permits the man to keep one hand in his pocket while dancing.

Wainwright Returns to London Office

J. G. Wainwright of J. G. & R. B. Wainwright, Ltd., of London, who arrived here two weeks ago and has been making his office at the Export & Import Film Company, sailed Saturday for home aboard the Olympic. He made no statement as to his visit here.

New Wilson Film in East

Private Screening of "One-Eighth Apache" Enthuses Arrow Chiefs

BEFORE Ben Wilson left the coast to attend the premier presentation of "The Innocent Cheat" at the Broadway theatre, he shipped his latest production, "One-Eighth Apache," and arrived in time for it to be screened by the Arrow officials before returning to the coast on Thursday.

"One-Eighth Apache" is from the pen of Peter B. Kyne, and appeared in the Red Book Magazine prior to being transferred to the screen by Wilson.

It co-stars Roy Stewart and Kathleen Kirkham, the team who made such a favorable impression in "The Innocent Cheat" and their work in this production gives them new laurels.

This is the third of the Peter B. Kyne productions to be produced by Wilson, the first two being "A Motion to Adjourn," made from the Saturday Evening Post story and co-starring Roy Stewart and Marjorie Daw; the second, "Back to Yellow Jacket," was published in the Cosmopolitan Magazine. This co-stars Stewart and Miss Kirkham.

In all three of the productions Wilson has given these two players excellent supporting casts and in "One-Eighth Apache" he feels that he has produced the strongest of the series to date. It is a big story with strong human interest, in which the author and the director have played strongly upon the human emotions.

"One-Eighth Apache" is the romance of a young man, the son of a cattle king of the old West, a man who has amassed a fortune and has retired from active participation in the running of his ranch and simply keeps it now as a hobby. The story is laid among the beautiful country estates of Long Island and on the ranges.

Special advertising and publicity aids are being prepared on this production. An especially fine line of paper is being prepared and many novelties will be supplied to assist the exhibitor in putting this picture over.

Schlank Announces Picture

Anchor Film President Tells of Productions for Summer and Fall

MORRIS R. Schlank, president of Anchor Film Distributors, Inc., of Los Angeles has made an announcement of his company's productions for late summer and early fall release in which he tells of several new subjects for the independent market.

"The independent exchange man will not want for good subjects so far as we are concerned," Schlank's statement reads. We are bringing out what I believe are four exceptional feature films and we are proud of every one.

"The new role of Peggy O'Day in her coming release now ready for the market which has been titled "The Storm Girl" gives her the greatest part of her screen career in an exceptional dramatic role which carries her to the heights of theatrical success. In the making of this subject the star of the two race track pictures "Thundering Hoofs" and "They're Off" does the best work of her screen career. Every one of my organization feels confident that this production will prove very successful in all territories.

"Two western pictures are now ready. They are titled 'Another Man's Boots' and 'The Stranger of the Hills.' The first named is an Ivor McFadden production with a big cast of well known players. The second is a Ferra feature production featuring Charles Ferra, Ethel Ritchie and Edward Coxen. With such players as these working under the direction of Francis Ford the result was bound to be a good picture.

"In addition to the above named films we will also offer in about 50% of the territory the two race track subjects 'They're Off' and 'Thundering Hoofs.' These are New Era Productions and reports from almost half of the country indicate to me that they are making good in all territories where they have been sold."

Schlank but recently returned from New York where he had no difficulty in selling territory on a number of pictures the Anchor Film Distributors are handling. He is now giving his entire attention to the sale of these pictures in all territories.

Equity Plans Campaign for Feature

PLANS are already under way for a publicity and advertising campaign on Equity's big fall release, "What's Wrong With the Women?" Daniel Carson Goodman's production, which was recently completed at the Biograph studios in New York. Under its present plans Equity Pictures will launch this production on the independent market with one of the biggest campaigns in the industry.

"What's Wrong With the Women?" is announced as a big special production built upon a theme of tremendous drawing power, and produced on a lavish scale.

The cast, capable and popular, includes Wilton Lackaye, Montague Love, Barbara Castleton, Tod La Rocque, Hedda Hopper, Constance Bennett, Paul McAllister, Huntley Gordon and Julia Swayne Gordon.

Equity expects to be able to announce its other releases in a short time and in the meantime will concentrate on the preparation of the exploitation of "What's Wrong With the Women?"

Federated Signs Wilson for Comedies

A important announcement was made by the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., immediately after the arrival of Ben Wilson from Los Angeles.

Telegraphic negotiations have been carried on for some time with Wilson by the Federated and Wilson made a special trip from Los Angeles to New York to sign a contract with Federated to produce two series of two reel comedies, twelve in each series.

One of these series will be known as the "Federated Comedies" and the other brand name has not as yet been decided on. Neither Federated nor Mr. Wilson desire at this time to announce the stars who will appear in either, as Wilson at the present time is negotiating with several prominent comedians to be featured in these pictures.

These comedies will be released by the Federated the latter part of August or the first of September.

Together with the Joe Rock two-reel comedies previously announced, this makes three sets of comedies which the Federated has now contracted for and they are at present negotiating for another series.

Titheradge Picture Is Booked in N. Y.

WHEN Madge Titheradge in person delighted New York theatregoers for a hundred nights in "The Butterfly on the Wheel" on the speaking stage, she did not expect to appear in a dozen different New York theatres at the same time. That, however, is what she will do in July, according to officials of Second National Pictures Corporation, which is distributing "Her Story," a romantic photodrama in which the emotional actress is featured.

Miss Titheradge at first was loath to turn from the speaking stage to the screen, but finally was prevailed upon to enact the leading feminine role in the picturization of "David and Jonathan," from the popular novel by E. Temple Thurston, a current release my Second National. Dion Titheradge, brother of the popular star, is the author of "Her Story," written especially for the screen. It is the third release by Second National, the second being "The Night Riders," a visualization of the Northwestern romance by Ridgewell Cullum.

Old South Sea Trader Revamped for Screen

Considered the most ambitious bit of marine construction as yet attempted in motion pictures is that which revamped the old South Sea trader, "William G. Irwin," for the photoplay purposes of "To Have and To Hold," the George Fitzmaurice Paramount picture featuring Betty Compson Bert Lytell and Theodore Kosloff.

The "William G. Irwin," 330 tons, 133 feet long and a three masted schooner, made a San Francisco-Honolulu record of eight days in 1881, when she was launched. When sails supplanted steam she lapsed into idleness until the cinema called.

She was first made over as a British man-o'-war, vintage of 1620, and later as a pirate ship. This required a great deal of carpenter work to produce the high prow and lofty stern of the seventeenth century, all adorned with a wealth of carved and gilt work. Lasky studio carpenters worked over a month to produce this result.

Eddie Lyons Preparing for Big Year

Eddie Lyons, who has won fame not only as one of the foremost comedians upon the screen, but as a producer of rare attainments, is looking forward to and making the necessary preparations for a flourishing season.

He will appear in a series of special two-reel comedies for Arrow release and he will personally supervise a series of Mirthquake Comedies starring the diminutive funster, Bobby Dunn, to be marketed by the same organization.

The special comedies will be modeled along the lines of Lyons' recent success.

Johnny Hines in Six-Reelers

Burr Announces That Torchy Comedian Will Be Featured in Longer Pictures

BEFORE beginning work on his next Torchy comedy, Johnny Hines will be featured in two six-reel productions, is the statement issued this week at the Mastodon Films office by Producer C. C. Burr.

The first six-reel comedy drama upon which the famous Torchy star will attempt to emulate his brilliant success in "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," will have as its working title "Go Get 'Em Gallagher." Advance reports on the scenario, which has been especially prepared for Hines, indicate that it will be brimful of action.

In view of the many exhibitor requests for additional Johnny Hines features, C. C. Burr is particularly anxious to begin production on "Go Get 'Em Gallagher," which will probably take about three months to complete. Accordingly the studio staff is already busily at work constructing the first of the many interior sets, which should be ready for production early next week.

While no mention as yet has been made of Hines' supporting cast, it is understood that Burr has definitely closed negotiations with a formidable list of players, which more than measure up with Hines' supporting cast in "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," which included such sterling players as Edmund Breese, George Fawcett, J. Barney Sherry and Betty Carpenter.

Producer Burr firmly believes that the time is propitious for the appearance of Johnny Hines in stellar feature roles, and with that end in view, he has made extensive plans for a large program of production which should keep Hines very active for the ensuing year.

MadgeKennedy'sNew Film

Will Start "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" When "Dear Me" is Completed

ALTHOUGH the Madge Kennedy production, "Dear Me," the first of the new series of this star, has not as yet been completed, the Kenma Corporation has made all arrangements for the filming of the second production, "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall." The scenario has been written, the working continuity completed to the satisfaction of the star, the director and the production manager, and the Kenna Corporation will probably cast the chief roles for this production at the Tilford studios within the next ten days.

"Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" is a direct contrast to the Madge Kennedy production which is now being made under the direction of Henry Kolker. The picture now being filmed, "Dear Me," is ultra-modern in theme and setting, although there is just a suggestion of costume-stuff in the pageantry and water-fete scenes which run through a part of the picture. When completed, it will not be as light and frivolous as the stage play of the same name, as Rufus Steele, in writing the scenario, has accentuated the dramatic passages. The title will be changed for the screen.

The Kenma Corporation has engaged a nationally known sculptor and artist, in connection with the production of "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall." This man, whose name will be announced as soon as a current contract expires in the very near future, will be in charge of the exceptional settings required for such a story, and will also design the costumes.

The Kenma Corporation is leaving nothing undone to make "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" one of the biggest and most successful costume plays of years.

Sanford Closes Many Deals

Entire Output of Producing Company is Disposed of in Many Territories

F. M. SANFORD, president of the Sanford Productions arrived last week direct from the coast and left New York almost immediately for a trip back to the coast. While in New York Sanford closed important territorial deals for the entire Sanford product.

Eleven southern states were sold on the entire output—the two-reel Tweedy Comedies and Pete Morrison semi-Westerns of feature length—to the Southern States Film Company, with exchanges in Dallas, Atlanta and Oklahoma City.

The same product was sold for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey to the Myriad Pictures Corporation.

Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey were sold on the Tweedy Comedies to Ben Amsterdam of the Masterpiece Film Attractions of Philadelphia. The Pete Morrison semi-Western features for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey were sold to the Twentieth Century Film Company of Philadelphia.

Western territory, including California, Nevada, Arizona and the Hawaiian Islands, was sold to The Peerless Film Service of San Francisco and Los Angeles on the Tweedy Comedies and the Pete Morrison features.

Negotiations are being conducted for mid-western states but have not yet been closed.

New Song Will Exploit "Main Street"

AS an added and an advance exploitation stunt for the Warner Brothers production, "Main Street," being produced by Sam and Jack Warner at the organization's coast studios, Eddie Bonns, director of advertising and publicity, and Louis Marangella, his assistant, have composed a popular fox-trot number based on the title of the picture.

The title of the song is, "There's a Main Street In Every Town, But There's Only One Broadway," and it serves to drive home the theme of the story. Negotiations are said to be now under way for the mechanical and publishing rights. The plan is to make the song a popular number by the time the picture is released.

Ben Wilson Predicts Prosperous Times

Ben Wilson, one of the leading directorial lights of the present day, who just left for the West Coast after having come East to confer with officials of the Arrow Film Corporation for whom he is producing, issued a statement immediately prior to his departure, in which he expressed himself as being eminently satisfied with conditions as he finds them at the present moment and enthusiastically optimistic about the approaching fall season.

"I feel," said Mr. Wilson, "that the past months have done a very great deal toward putting this industry of ours back on its proper footing. There were a large number of individuals within the ranks who worked on the theory that the prosperity which once we knew simply had to endure forever. And this belief made them slack, lax and unambitious. Accordingly there came a revulsion of public sentiment against the type of picture which these dim-visioned individuals saw fit to produce. And so strong was the resentment incurred that even the better pictures were affected thereby.

"But now things are rapidly approaching normal. The weakling producer, in the greatest number of cases, has ceased to function, and the majority of men in the production field are motivated by a sincere desire to create worthwhile pictures and I give it as my firm belief that that in the last analysis is all that is required to bring the people flocking into the theatre again."

Pacific to Have Culver City Studio

An option on fifty acres of land in the heart of Culver City, adjacent to the Hal Roach studios, has been signed by John J. Hayes, president of the Pacific Film Co., Inc., who plans to use the property for studio purposes, he says.

Pacific, according to announcements, will begin production on a series of features and short subjects before fall.

Rialto in Field for Negative Rights

RIALTO PRODUCTIONS, INC., 130 West 46th St., New York City, announce that they are in the market for the purchase of negative rights for film productions for the United States and Canada. The President of this company, Lou Rogers, has consummated several deals up to now; the first of which was "Queen O' The Turf," which is being released through the R-C Pictures Corporation.

Arrangements have been made with Al Lichtman Corp. for the distribution of their second purchase "The Man and the Moment" by Eleanor Glynn. The present proposition handled by the Rialto Productions, Inc., is "Retribution," the story of Lucretia Borgia, which is now running its third week at the Park Theatre, 59th Street and Columbus Circle, New York City. Arrangements for distribution of this picture will shortly be announced.

Lou Rogers, President of the Rialto Productions, Inc., has had a great number of years of experience in the motion picture industry. He was connected with William Fox for seven years. At the time of his resignation, he was General Sales Manager and Canadian General Manager of the Fox Film Corporation.

His next connection was with Lewis J. Selznick, when he purchased a franchise for Selznick pictures for New York State.

Warners Promise Wild Animal Sensation

What is declared to be a novelty sensation in wild animal feature productions, "A Dangerous Adventure," featuring Grace Darmond, is announced as the first of seven fall releases by the Warner Brothers.

The feature is declared to reveal thousands of uncivilized natives and wild beasts of every breed and description in their native haunts. In order to inject a requisite amount of romance, pathos and realism, S. L. Warner, director of the production, virtually converted the entire Warner west coast studios into an African forest and secured over 1,500 wild animals to furnish the action.

Prominent members of the cast supporting Grace Darmond include Philo McCullough, Jack Richardson, Robert Agnew and Derelys Purdue. The story and continuity was written by Frances Guihan.

"The Jungle Goddess" Rights Are Sold

Export & Import Film Company announces the sale of Selig's serial, "The Jungle Goddess," for Italy and Syria. There are only a few remaining unsold foreign territories.

Warner Picture Doing Well

"Your Best Friend" Is Proving Good Attraction During Summer Months

DESPITE the fact that the summer season brings in its wake depressive business conditions, many of the biggest theatres and circuits throughout the country have booked and are showing the latest Warner Brothers attraction, "Your Best Friend," a Harry Rapf production featuring Vera Gordon, according to reports received from state right buyers at the Warner offices.

The production has been booked for the entire Jensen and Von Herberg circuit in Seattle, Portland and the northwest section. The Saenger Amusement Enterprises have booked it for their entire chain of theatres in Louisiana and Mississippi. A big proportion of the contracts are being received from Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, and Warners report that over 200 theatres have booked the production in Texas.

A pre-release showing of "Your Best Friend" was given recently at the Randolph Theatre, Chicago, and it is said that a big reception was accorded the picture. Vera Gordon, who is making personal appearances in conjunction with the showing of the feature, is scheduled to appear at the Strand, Cincinnati, and the Colonial, Columbus. Other representative theatres that have booked the production are the Plaza, San Diego, Cal., the Palace, Long Beach, Cal., the Mary Anderson, Louisville, Ky., the Kinema, Cal., and scores of other theatres.

"Your Best Friend" was written and directed by Will Nigh.

Clark-Cornelius Releases

"The Snitching Hour" First of Three New Productions Announced by Firm

THREE new productions have been added to the Clark-Cornelius list of releases. These features will be put out on the state right market on the franchise plan inaugurated by S. J. Rollo, general manager of this corporation.

The first production of these three is "The Snitching Hour" starring Arthur Housman and is a comedy drama in five reels. This picture is the first of a series with this star. In addition to Housman the cast includes Nida Naldi and other prominent names. It was directed by Alan Crosland.

The other two pictures are of the western type and bear the titles of "The Thoroughbred" and "The Crimson Clue." In both of these productions there are prominent players including Miss Sedgwick and Jack Richardson.

In addition to these the series of "Tales of the Tenements" two reel detective stories written by Major Ross D. Whytock, one of America's foremost writers of detective stories is being released. The series will consist of twenty-six, and one will be released every two weeks.

C.B.C. Re-Editing Picture

"More To Be Pitied Than Scorned" Undergoes Double Editing Before Showing

WORK on the final re-editing and titling of "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned," the first of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's series of big feature offerings, is going forward rapidly at the company's New York offices, it is announced this week.

The picture was completely finished before being brought East from the West Coast production center, but, under the system of "double editing" which C. B. C. is employing on this feature, the picture must be screened and approved by another editing committee here.

Despite the many inquiries that have come in from all parts of the country on "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned," and requests for showings on it, C. B. C. announces that there will be no screenings for anyone until the picture is absolutely complete in every detail, and to date no one has seen it except the company officials, Edward Le Saint, the director, and the editing committee.

"Reelcraft" Changed to "Caswell" Studios

The former name of "Reelcraft" as applied to the Caswell Studios in Hollywood is no longer in force, according to Gus Schumacher, general manager of the O'Conor Productions, and owner of the studios.

Hereafter, states a communication from Schumacher, this plant, now being used in the production of the Billy Franey two-reel comedies, will be known as the Caswell studios.

Baby Peggy in the first of the fairy tale series for Universal, "Little Red Riding Hood"

Latest "Torchy" Picture Is Completed

"TORCHY'S FEUD," the latest in the Torchy series in two reels which is said to contain enough genuine humor and excitement for a feature production, has been completed by Johnny Hines at Burr's Glendale studio.

With its action and plot centered about a Kentucky mountain feud enhanced by the further complications of a government raid on the moonshine still contested for between the two rival Kentucky clans; "Torchy's Feud" is reported at the Masterdon offices to be the best two-reeler Hines has made in his interpretations of the Sewell Ford stories.

Coincident with a wealth of action, it is stated, "Torchy's Feud" is equally attractive from a scenic standpoint, since C. C. Burr has spared no expense in the construction of every possible effect that would transpose the typical Kentucky mountain locale into the story.

East Coast Productions Sells Foreign Rights

Franklyn E. Backer of East Coast Productions has closed with Max Glucksman for handling the rights of the new Backer series, starring J. B. Warner, in the Argentine, Uruguay and Paraguay.

Backer is confident of great results this fall for the balance of his series of six Westerns.

The casts in the J. B. Warner series are attracting favorable attention. Elinor Fair playing opposite Warner in "Big Stakes," was for some time leading woman for Earle Williams, and the other members of the cast also have large individual followings.

The second picture of the Backer series, "Crimson Gold," has already been received in New York, and will soon be screened for the trade. Edythe Sterling is Warner's leading woman in this picture.

EXPORT & IMPORT FILM COMPANY have received a print of the exclusive motion pictures of the presentation of gifts to Princess Mary attendant to the wedding ceremony in London.

Pathe of London arranged for the exclusive rights thereon. The film is of one-reel length and shows many of the world's leading figures and their magnificent gifts to the royal bride. It is said to present remarkable views of the gorgeous display attending the royal wedding, the scenes of which are exclusive.

Millions of dollars in historical gems are shown as are the tributes of rulers from all parts of the world. Export & Import have not yet decided upon American release.

William Clark, an exhibitor of Moose Jaw, Sask., failed in his court action to seek the annulment of the new municipal amusement tax of 10 per cent on theatre admission tickets which has been imposed by the City of Moose Jaw, following the enactment of a law by the Provincial Legislature of Saskatchewan permitting municipalities within the Province to duplicate the amusement tax of 10 per cent collected by the Province. Clark took out an injunction to restrain the city from collecting the tax but Judge Ousley of Moose Jaw has decided against Clark and the city is now proceeding with the collection of the tax. This means that patrons at all theatres in Moose Jaw are now required to pay a combined tax of 20 per cent on the value of admission tickets or exhibitors must pay the tax for patrons.

Moose Jaw was the first city in Saskatchewan to take advantage of the new legislation and, following the decision of the court that the civic tax is not ultra vires, other cities of the Province will be quick to secure more revenue through this channel.

Peter D. Egan, manager of the College theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, has received the appointment of manager of the Lyceum theatre, Winnipeg, from A. R. McNichol, owner of the two theatres. Egan succeeded A. R. McClure at the Lyceum, McClure having returned to St. Paul, Minn., recently. About four years ago, Egan became assistant manager of the Province theatre and a short time later was given the management of the Gaiety theatre. He took charge of the College theatre when the latter house was built about one year ago and made a fine success of it during its first year.

Succeeding Mr. Egan at the College theatre is George L. Larsen, formerly manager of the Bijou and Rex theatres, Winnipeg, and also associated with Helmer Jernberg at the Province theatre. Before leaving the College, Mr. Egan was presented with a fine watch by the College employes, Walter Dolman, the organist, making the presentation, assisted by Mr. Morrow, chief projectionist, and Mr. Larsen.

W. M. Wire, a veteran theatre manager of Winnipeg, Manitoba, has become manager of the Rialto theatre, one of the newer theatres in Winnipeg. The lease of the Rialto theatre is being transferred to a new company, Black & Armstrong, it is stated. O. J. Hallgrimson, former manager of the Rialto, is leaving for Los Angeles, it is announced.

Shea's Hippodrome, Toronto, is to have a new pipe organ which, along with several alterations, will cost in the neighborhood of $40,000. When the Hippodrome was opened in 1913, the house was equipped with an orchestral organ which had been imported from Germany. This instrument proved to be too mechanical and was finally abandoned.

A court decision of wide importance to moving picture theatre exhibitors has been made at Winnipeg, Manitoba, in a damage action against J. Millard, former owner of the Park theatre, Osborne street, Winnipeg, by Mrs. Hazel Sparrow, a patron, who sought $5,000 damages as the result of breaking an ankle. The plaintiff alleged negligence on the part of the theatre proprietor in failing to provide proper lighting. She was moving from one box to another in the theatre during a performance when she fell, breaking an ankle bone. The action was quashed by Mr. Justice Fullerton.

Charles Stephenson, of Toronto, president of Stephenson's Attractions, Limited, Toronto, a moving picture exchange, caused some merriment and excitement in Victoria, B. C., a few days ago when he paid a freak bet which he had made with Manager Robertson, of the Dominion and Capitol theatres, Victoria, as the result of the outcome of the English Derby. Stephenson carried out his part of the wager by pushing a cocoanut with his nose along two blocks of the main thoroughfare of Victoria. A large crowd watched the stunt.

J. M. McClure, manager of the Lyceum theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, for the past five or six months, has pulled up stakes and has returned to St. Paul, Minn., where he has become manager of the State theatre, one of the new theatres of Rubins and Finklestein. McClure originally went to Winnipeg some time ago to become manager of the Allen theatre there, but eventually transferred to the Lyceum.

The Jubilee theatre, Alliance, Alberta, was totally destroyed by fire a few days ago in a conflagration which swept a business block of the Western Canadian centre.

The provincial authorities of Alberta made a move some time ago to raise the censorship fee for moving pictures from $1 to $3 per reel, thus standardizing the charge with that of Ontario. There are only a few moving picture theatres in Alberta, however, compared with Ontario, and the result was a general protest on the part of all exchanges in Canada and others affected. The Alberta Government thereupon decided to reduce the new fee to $2 per reel.

A reduction in the censorship fee for the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors has also been made at Toronto, the Ontario fee of $3 per reel having recently been cut to $2 per reel. The Ontario Board also makes a charge of $1 per reel for "inspection" of the film.

L. E. Ouimet, of Montreal, former president and general manager of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Pathe exchange in Canada, which was absorbed by Regal Films, Limited, Toronto, is in Los Angeles where he is completing arrangements for the production of pictures for his new company, Laval Photoplays, Limited, Montreal, the head office of which is in the Albee Building, Montreal.

NORTHERN NEW YORK

Benjamin Apple has just been named as manager of the Griswold theatre in Troy, leased by the Ilium Amusement Company, from the F. F. Proctor interests. The Griswold will be closed during the entire month of July during which time alterations will be made preparatory to its opening as a first run house. The Ilium Amusement Company, which also runs the American and King theatres in Troy, is composed of Mr. Apple of Troy, Isaac Weinstein of Cohoes and Sidney Otner of New York. The engagement of Mr. Apple to handle the Griswold follows the recent sale by Mr. Proctor of the Leland theatre in Albany, which leaves but one motion picture theatre in Mr. Proctor's circuit.

Following a series of vicissitudes, the Gralyn theatre in Gouverneur, N. Y., has now passed into the possession of W. R. Perrin, a druggist in that village. The house was sold at public auction last week, and was bid in for $25,000. It is the general understanding that the theatre will be continued as a motion picture theatre. The house was opened in January, 1920, and was promoted by J. C. Carpenter.

SAN FRNCISCO

The value of the motion picture industry and what it means to California was recently discussed at a "Movie Day Luncheon" held at the Palace Hotel by the California Development Association. ifornia boosters who, each week, bring before their members the wonders of industrial California. At this luncheon, which was attended by about 400 prominent San Franciscoans and those living in the neighborhood, it was pointed out that this industry had grown to be one of the largest in the world and it is getting more popular each year.

Fire in the basement of the Maio Motion picture theatre, supposed to have been caused by spontaneous combustion, caused but slight property damage to the movie house. C. F. Maio, proprietor, stated the basement contained only rubbish. As the fire was in the morning, the house had not yet opened for business.

NORTH CAROLINA

J. L. Goodenough, who is proprietor and manager of the Bramwood theatre, Greenville, S. C., says business is picking up now that the mill work and cotton industry around his thriving little city is getting better. He looks for the fall to be about one hundred per cent. better than it is at the present time.

J. Bryan Craver, the champion First National salesman who sold the franchises two years ago in record time, is now knocking 'em cold in the Carolinas with Eddie Polo's serial, "Cap'n Kidd" and fifty-six westerns that his company control for the territory.

John W. Mangham is another one that's knocking 'em for a row in the Carolinas with Enterprise Distributing's series and especially with their big special, "I Am the Law."

Hank Hearn is hitting for the Carolinas this week with his special, "Out of the Dust," after having closed with Southern Enterprises for their entire circuit.

The theatre being built at Warsaw, N. C., by John Quinn is nearing completion. It is to be called the "Isis" and will be operated by F. J. Thomas. It is said to be a very pretty small town theatre.

M. H. French, of the Rockingham Theatre Company, Rockingham, N. C., has leased the opera house, preparatory to re-opening the first week in August.

Several changes have been made recently in the North Carolina theatres of the Southern Enterprises Co. Ab Cooper, who has been manager of the Majestic, Asheville, goes to the Strand in Salisbury. O. A. Savin goes from the Princess, Asheville, to the Majestic, Asheville, and J. C. Duncan goes to the Princess.

Lou Bissinger, manager of the Washington theatre at Dallas, Tex., is spending two weeks in Wilmington, N. C., his former home, visiting his mother.

Arrangements have been made for the screening of "I Am the Law," Edwin Carewe production of James Oliver Curwood's story, with a sure-enough all-star cast, during the North Carolina convention this week. The screening will take place at the Imperial theatre, writes District Manager C. R. Bamford, of the Southern Enterprises.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

The worst business in the memory of the oldest exhibitor, is what is being said of conditions in Springfield at this time. From accounts received from other places, this city is in tune with the rest of the country. Springfield's streets can be partly blamed for the way things are going here. All the streets are dug up and dirt is piled six feet high on the sidewalks. It is almost impossible to get into a theatre. No battlefield in France had anything on our streets at this time.

H. T. Loper of the Kimbark theatre, Chicago, visited his son Harry Loper, of the Lyric here last week. The Lopers have been in business since 1907.

"The Green Temptation" proved a fine attraction at the Princess for the week starting June 17. Thomas Meighan followed in "The Bachelor Daddy."

Pathe News No. 40 had several hundred feet of film showing Springfield Boy Scouts in a monster parade, recently held here. With "Is Matrimony a Failure?" and a Mermaid comedy, "Spooks," the Gaiety drew out a little larger attendance than has been the custom of late.

Daily receipts at the theatres are as low as 25 per cent of what they were at this time last year, and everyone knows they were not good then.

"The Gray Dawn" was the attraction at the Strand commencing June 18. It proved a fine drama and pleased. Attendance was very light, according to Gus Kerasotes, manager.

W. W. Watts and Mrs. Watts attended the Lions convention in Hot Springs, Ark., June 19-23. Mr. Watts is the owner of the Gaiety, Princess and Vaudette theatres. Also is the oldest exhibitor in the city, having started in the picture business here in 1906.

The Empress, outlying theatre, is holding up well despite heat, strikes and general depression. Good shows is the reason. George Koehn, manager, lays awake nights figuring on sure-fire attractions.

SEATTLE

Frank Steffy, manager of the Coliseum theatre, recently left the city for a short visit to the First National studios in California, as a guest of that concern. Mr. Steffy is one of the several first-run exhibitors to make the trip, as a result of exceptional exploitation and advertising during the recent First National week early this year.

During Mr. Steffy's absence, Leroy V. Johnson, manager of the Liberty theatre, Seattle, acted as manager of the Coliseum theatre also. Both houses are under the direction of Jensen-Von Herberg, owners of a chain of theatres on the Pacific coast.

One of the first acts of Frank Edwards and George Herpick, directors of the Winter Garden theatre, when they took over that house recently, was to reduce admission prices to ten cents at any time. Mr. Edwards' policy is to make the theatre attractive to all members of Seattle families, both in admission price and class of attractions offered.

Jack Chambers, formerly connected with the Strand theatre, recently left that house and is now affiliated with John Danz, veteran Seattle motion picture man, and owner of a string of several smaller photoplay houses in the city.

Mr. Chambers handled most of the details of staging and lighting of prologues, execution and use of lobby displays and fronts, and also served as head doorman. Working with H. B. Wright, manager of the Strand, he put over some of the best prologues, lobbies and exploitation stunts seen in the city.

Vic Gauntlet, a former Seattle and Northwest newspaper man, and more recently connected with the advertising and publicity department of the Seattle Fox Film exchange branch, is now acting as publicity and exploitation manager for John Hamrick, owner of the Blue Mouse theatres in Seattle, Tacoma and Portland, Oregon.

Live News From Producers

Conducted by EDMOND F. SUPPLE

Three Goldwyn Subjects to Be Started Soon

PRELIMINARY work on three new subjects for release by Goldwyn has already been started. An entire company engaged for the making of "Captain Blackbird," Carey Wilson's scenario of South Sea adventure, is preparing to leave San Francisco on July 7th for the island of Tahiti where practically all the photography will be done. Antonio Moreno, George Seigmann and William V. Mong appear in principal roles.

Preliminaries for the Marshall Neilan's first subject for Goldwyn release are reported under way. The Neilan picture will be a screen version of one of last year's biggest stage productions. Casting is about to be started.

A strong cast is announced for Rupert Hughes's production, "Gimme." Helene Chadwick and Gaston Glass head the list of players, which also includes David Imboden, Florence Roberts and Frederick Vogeding.

Johnny Fox Comedy Is Titled "Freshie"

From "The Pest" as the working title to "Oh Brother!" and then to "Freshie" have been the changes to the final title of Norman Taurog's first Century Comedy with Johnny Fox, Century's boy star, in the title role.

Taurog's experience as director to Larry Semon brought these many changes as he has always believed in the one word title for comedies whenever possible and for this reason he changed it to suit his ideas of exploitation.

Ena Gregory and Blanche Payson, two featured Century players, are also in the cast of "Freshie."

Neilan Policy a Boost for Los Angeles

Marshall Neilan's new production policy, which practically eliminates the building of artificial "sets" and which was instituted with the production of "Fools First," now playat the Kinema Theatre in Los Angeles, will incidentally prove a national "boost" for that city.

Instead of building interiors of hotel lobbies, schools, banks and other scenes required by the action of the plot, Mr. Neilan in the production of this and future pictures made in Los Angeles, uses original interiors which are available in Los Angeles.

Campaign for R-C Special

Elaborate Plans to Advertise "In the Name of the Law" at Premiere

THAT the opening of "In the Name of the Law," an R.-C. picture, at its pre-season run at the George M. Cohan theatre on July 9, will be marked by one of the biggest exploitation campaigns ever seen in New York is the prophecy of the R.-C. officials. "In the Name of the Law" is a police drama with an all-star cast, including Johnnie Walker, Ella Hall, Ralph Lewis, Claire McDowall and Little Bennie Alexander.

"The biggest picture isn't big without the exploitation; the best exploitation is nothing without the picture behind it," stated Nat Rothstein, director of publicity and advertising of R.-C. pictures, who is enthusiastic over the exploitation of "In the Name of the Law." "If you can find a combination of both you have solved the problem of the show business—you need not worry about the public souring or its tastes turning. R.-C. pictures does not look upon exploitation as a panacea for all ills of the motion picture industry, but R.-C. is one organization which does appreciate the value of exploitation in connection with high-class pictures.

"We will have huge stands in New York City in the most sought-after advertising spots in the entire world to advertise "In the Name of the Law." We will have banners and placards in places that have not carried a line of advertising material since the Red Cross drives during the war. We will have street stunts for Broadway; window displays throughout the city. Those who motor, trolley or walk will find the words, 'In the Name of the Law' before their eyes continually.

"This campaign is being carried on not for our benefit, but for the benefit of the exhibitor. We want to show him what he can do with this picture when he runs it in the fall. Every stunt, every idea, every tie-up that we use here in New York can be duplicated by every exhibitor who runs this picture. Each of our forty-one exploitation ideas can be carried out again and again. They can be used by the city of 500,000 or the city of 100,000, or the town of 20,000. We're prepared to show the industry what exploitation can do for an entertaining picture, in any class of theatre, in any size city."

"Cops" Scores on B'way

New York Press Reviewers Praise Buster Keaton-First Nat'l Film

"COPS," the new Buster Keaton comedy, a First National Attraction, carried away high honors when it opened at the Rivoli theatre this week. The motion picture critic of the New York Times compared it to the feature picture and intimated that "Cops" "took the honors of the programme." He then wrote:

"How the ever-earnest and always-worried Buster is commanded by his girl to be a business man, how he finds a young fortune, how it brings him, all unknown to their respective owners, a load of old furniture and a broken-down horse and wagon, how he and the horse are rejuvenated, and how he losses everything in one stirring smash-up—you must see the comedy to learn of these things and laugh. And after the smash-up come the cops. Ever since the early Keystone Age Comedies have wound up with a police chase, but how many comic heroes have mixed themselves up with a police parade and then had the entire force after them? There's novelty in multiplication, as you will see at the Rivoli."

"Don't fail to wait for 'Cops,' the Buster Keaton comedy," wrote the critic of the Evening Mail.

"In this comedy Keaton has again adopted the policy of super-exaggeration of ancient ideas. He has picked on the "finest" this time, and instead of the usual coterie of Keystone policemen he appears to have drafted all the police on the Pacific Coast. There seems to be several thousands of them in various sections of the picture. It is a mighty funny film."

This is what the Evening Sun's critic had to say:

"Buster Keaton's newest comedy, 'Cops,' is a second excellent film number on the programme prepared by Hugo Riesenfeld. The picture is being shown exclusively at the Rivoli. In 'Cops' the comedian seems to have engaged the entire police departments of several cities, and the short title hardly does justice to the long line of officers who seek the capture of the sad-faced actor."

Fox to Release "The Fast Mail"

"THE FAST MAIL," an adaptation of Lincoln J. Carter's famous stage play, is announced by Fox Film Corporation as another of its big list of super special productions for release during the season 1922-23..

"The Fast Mail," which Bernard Durning has directed for the screen, is still bigger than the original production for with the wider scope of the camera, it was possible for the Fox producing unit to visualize what was only suggested in the play. The great train scenes and the tremendous spectacular fire effects are stirring.

William Fox has chosen six of the screen's best known characters for the cast personnel. This includes Charles Jones, Eileen Percy, Jim Mason, William Steele, Adolphe Menjou and Henry Dunkinson.

"The Song of the Lark" Made Into Film

The two-reel feature called "The Song of the Lark," whose poetically human theme is derived from the celebrated Jules Breton painting bearing that title, has been accepted by Pathe for distribution, release date shortly to be announced. The picture is written and produced under the supervision of Arthur Maude, creator of "The Beggar Maid," "The Bashful Suitor" and other screen novelties inspired by art works which have deeply impressed the people of all countries.

"Foolish Lives" Newest Century Release

"Foolish Lives" is the title of Lee Moran's latest Century release which formerly was known as "Married Folks." It was directed by Arvid Gillstrom with a cast consisting of Ena Gregory, Blanche Payson and the heavyweight Fred Spencer.

Lew Fields in Starland Revue No. 6

In Starland Revue No. 6, released by the F. B. O., Lew Fields does a little act that will bring back pleasant memories to thousands of those who enjoyed his comedies in the past. This issue also shows in action Irving Berlin, Walker Whiteside, Joe Santley, Ivy Sawyer, and the Roth Kids.

Playgoers Announces July Releases

Playgoers Pictures, selling through the Pathe offices, announces two big releases for July. First on the schedule is "The Woman Who Came Back," a drama adapted from the novel by Stephen McKenna, which enjoyed great popularity, going through twenty-one editions. Denison Clift, well known as a novelist, short story writer and playwright, prepared it for the screen and directed the production.

The second July offering of Playgoers is scheduled for release on the 23rd.

Mollie King and Creighton Hale, both favorites of screen fans, are the principals, while Rose Tapley and Jerome Lawler are among the players in the supporting cast.

"The Crossroads of New York" at Miller's

Mack Sennett's "The Crossroads of New York" is having an indefinite run at Miller's Theatre, Los Angeles.

This picture has one of the biggest and best casts ever assembled in any one production, and numbers amongst its principals, such well-known artists as George O'Hara, Billy Bevan, Noah Beery, Robert Cain, Eddie Gribbon, Herbert Standing, Charlie Murray, Ben Deely, Jimmie Finlayson and Kalla Pasha, with the feminine contingent carrying such beauties as Kathryn McGuire, Dot Farley, Ethel Grey Terry and Mildred June with Dick Jones as director.

All these well-known performers were the invited guests of the Miller Brothers at the opening performance.

Blackton Film for Allied

"The Glorious Adventure" Acquired by Subsidiary of United Artists

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Hiram Abrams that "The Glorious Adventure," the J. Stuart Blackton color production featuring Lady Diana Manners, prominent in the English nobility, will be released this fall through Allied Producers and Distributors' Corporation, the recently formed subsidiary of United Artists' Corporation. As previously announced the productions of Allied Producers and Distributors' Corporation will be handled the same way as the releases of United Artists' Corporation.

"The Glorious Adventure," the first motion picture drama to be produced entirely in color, had a pre-release showing of one week at the Capitol theatre, New York City, and won high praise from both the New York newspapers and the trade press. Leading critics predict that the story itself, and the natural color scheme in the excellent photography, plus the splendid cast, headed by Lady Diana Manners, called the most beautiful woman in England, constitute such a marked departure in motion pictures, that the public will be certain to flock to it, and that high-class houses will add much to their prestige by capitalizing the all-color photography as the conspicuous high-light of the production.

The scenes during the great London fire are shown with splendid realism through the new color-photography effects, and there are instances of exquisite romance and high adventure all through the production. These are added to by bits of quaint humor that affords relief to the tensity and suspense.

The story and direction of "The Glorious Adventure" are both by J. Stuart Blackton, the producer. The scenario was prepared by Felix Orman, and the photography is by William T. Crespinel. The American version is in part retitled by Katherine Hilliker and Capt. H. H. Caldwell. The picture is in seven reels.

Foreign Demand For Lloyd

"Grandma's Boy" Creates Great Demand From Exhibitors All Over World

MOTION picture lovers in a dozen or more other countries of the world are likely to enjoy "Grandma's Boy," Harold Lloyd's new Associated Exhibitors feature, before the picture is released generally throughout the United States. Already the feature has been placed for immediate release in England and throughout the British Isles; in the countries of continental Europe, and on the other side of the globe, in Australia and New Zealand.

This information was obtained this week from M. L. Cohn, treasurer of the Inter-Globe Export Corporation, which holds the foreign rights to all Associated Exhibitors attractions. The promptness with which contracts for distribution abroad have been entered into was due to what is declared to be an unprecedented world-wide demand for Harold Lloyd's first five-part comedy, and the fear of possible pirating of the film. The adoption of extraordinary precautions to prevent filching was considered necessary from a business standpoint, according to Mr. Cohn.

In England "Grandma's Boy" will be handled by the W. & F. Film Corporation of Great Britain.

The Australian rights to the picture have been purchased by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and on the European continent the feature will be handled by concerns of equally high standing.

Marion Davies in Cosmopolitan's production for Paramount release, "The Young Diana"

Florence Vidor Makes Feature Success

Florence Vidor herself, with her beauty, her feminine charm, and, most of all, her naturalness is the principal contributing factor to the wide success and popularity of the Associated Exhibitors feature, "The Real Adventure," in the opinion of a vast majority of the newspaper reviewers.

This photoplay, which is only Miss Vidor's second as a star, has "got across" in great shape according to reports. Less than a month has elapsed since its release, but it has appeared in leading first run houses in every part of the country.

The fact that the problem is true to life and the unfolding of the story is everywhere logical is "refreshing" in the opinion of the Detroit News' reviewer, expressed after the opening, June 18th, of a week's run at John H. Kunsky's Adams Theatre.

Max Linder Comedy for Allied Corporation

Max Linder's screen comedy, "The Three Must Get Theirs," has been acquired for release by the Allied Corporation, the subsidiary organization of the United Artists' Corporation. The picture is described to be a burlesque on Douglas Fairbanks' version of "The Three Musketeers."

The FAST MAIL

Based on LINCOLN J. CARTER'S famous stage play of the same name
Directed by BERNARD J. DURNING

THE greatest thriller the screen has ever known. This is a heavy claim, but this screen version of Lincoln J. Carter's famous old stage melodrama has been pronounced by eminent showmen as "perfect—nothing lacking, nothing overdone".

The Fast Mail is a melodrama, unblushing and unashamed. It is action, action, action from the moment the sensational Dixieland Steeplechase begins until the last scene flickers from the screen.

Race horse spills, steamboat explosion, desperate races by car, in train and on horse, life and death struggles in the water, fights, fire rescues by the human chain, leaps into the fire net, desperate chances and deeds of daring —but never the cheap, tawdry action of the serial – "nothing overdrawn".

A high class American melodrama for every first class motion picture theatre.

Destined to linger forever in the minds and hearts of those who see it.

"Man Unconquerable" Is July 2 Release

Paramount announces as its release for July 2, Jack Holt in "The Man Unconquerable," an adaptation by Julien Josephson of an original screen story by Hamilton Smith.

Atmospherically, Paramount says, this picture is almost as good as a trip down into the South Seas, for it has the settings and locations of that part of the world reproduced with an adherence to detail that is said to be wholly delightful.

Jack Holt has the role of a young man who believed that peace and kind words could accomplish anything and who was not inclined to change his views even when he found his pearling grounds being despoiled by ruffians. But the scorn of a girl whips him into action and her smile at his success is the reward that comes to him.

Weather Retards Work of Vignola Company

Phil Carl, assistant to Robert G. Vignola, director of "When Knighthood was in Flower," Marion Davies new starring vehicle, has just returned from location from Rifton Falls, N. Y., 8 miles from Kingston, where the company has been experiencing difficulties.

Carl reports that the heavy rainfall caused the river to rise so much that whole sections of the bridge upon which scenes were being taken were swept away. An electrical transmitter for the production of lightning effects devised by Jack Kelly, Cosmopolitan's chief electrician, was reported to be proving a great success in the filming of storm scenes at night.

Train Wreck Victims Shown Comedies

A score of persons, injured in a train wreck on the Texas & Pacific Railroad, were treated to showings of "Torchy a la Carte" and "Battling Torchy" at the St. Paul Sanitarium in Dallas last week when Lester Scott, sales manager of Mastodon Films, who was also numbered among those slightly injured decided to treat the injured ones to an hour of real comedy. A projection machine of the portable kind was rushed into service when Scott informed the hospital authorities that prints of two Johnny Hines comedies could be obtained at the station where they had been checked.

New Paramount Picture Starts July 3

George Melford figures on starting his new production for Paramount, "Ebb Tide," about the third of July. This is a screen version of Robert Louis Stevenson's famous novel, in which Lila Lee, James Kirkwood, Raymond Hatton, George Fawcett, Noah Beery, Jacqueline Logan and others will appear. The scenario is by Lorna Moon.

Meanwhile Melford is completing the editing of "Burning Sands," from the novel by Edward Weigall, in which Wanda Hawley and Milton Sills are the featured players.

Charles Ray in "Smudge," in which he is supported by Ora Carew. First National release

Ship Fire Scene Has Thrill

Irving Willat Production Promises Action for Dorothy Dalton and Holt

A THRILLING fire episode which takes the audience and lets it look right into the bowels of a large ocean liner, is one of the big moments in "On the High Seas," Irvin Willat's production for Paramount, with Dorothy Dalton and Jack Holt in the featured roles, now under production. This, it is said, is only one of the series of gripping sequences in this new story by Edward Sheldon which takes the hero and heroine through a maelstrom of sea terrors.

A section of the ship's hold was constructed on the exterior lot at the Paramount studio for the fire scenes. The construction was such as to photograph exactly like steel plate, studded with rivets. Steam pipes, gauges and other atmosphere were in evidence. Through a mammoth steel door could be seen the section of the hold, packed with the cargo of boxes and packing cases.

Two fire hose, of the size used on modern liners, were handled by the crew in an attempt to extinguish the flames which had converted the hold into a roaring furnace. These flame effects were obtained by the use of lycopodium, a highly inflammable preparation used in making scenes of this kind. Other property men lighted smoke pots and kept the entire atmosphere of the setting filled with smoke, from their positions on the sidelines.

E. Magnus Ingleton adapted the story to the screen and thus far only three players—Miss Dalton and Mr. Holt, supported by Mitchell Lewis, who plays the heavy role—have taken part, as the story chiefly concerns the adventures of these three characters. One or two other principals are yet to be cast.

Premiere of "Wall Flower"

Rupert Hughes' Picture for Goldwyn Well-Received at the Capitol

"THE WALL FLOWER," the first of Rupert Hughes' personally directed photoplays for Goldwyn, received its metropolitan premiere this week at the Capitol theatre, New York, and proved to be one of his most appealing and diverting screen stories.

"Mr. Hughes has made motion pictures that mean something," said the critic of the New York Times. "His story is told mainly in the language of motion pictures. Little bits of business here and there, significant camera shots, sequences of scenes illuminating each other—these are the things that give it life, these are the things that make it elfingly life-like."

Telegraph: "'The Wall Flower' is a Burbank sudy of the feminine soul. It is more than that—a delightfully piquant and entertaining comedy, full of humorous ripples, plenty of chuckles and a life-size portion of uproarious laughter. A variation of the Cinderella theme, the oldest and most popular in literature. Miss Moore plays her role with a fine sense of the comedy values it involves. This is a Goldwyn picture. One of the best."

The Daily News summary of the picture: "Type. Reconstruction comedy. Direction. Very good. Plot. Pretty. Photography. Fine. Value. About 95 per cent."

American: "It is just a little human interest story very vividly told. Colleen Moore should be well pleased with the result of her work in the title role. Idalene Nobbin is a definite, natural person who draws one's sympathy against one's will."

Herald: "In directing his story Mr. Hughes has introduced many human and humorous touches. His sub-titles are excellent."

Polo Serial Censored Without Cut

An unusual record is being made in the matter of censoring "Cap'n Kidd," Eddie Polo's first Independent serial in that, with twelve chapters viewed by the National Board of Review, not a single cut in any episode has been ordered by the committee.

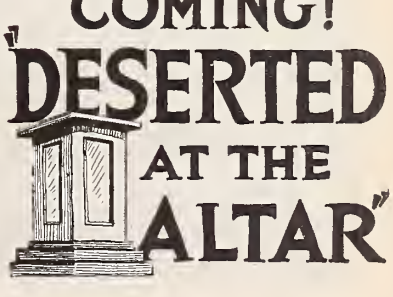
This is especially unusual in view of the type production "Cap'n Kidd" is, every chapter being full of good hard fights, and the National Board being especially strict in their rulings on such incidents in films.

Capter 12 was finally edited and titled this week, and paper lobby display, and advertising accessories on it are announced as ready.

Keaton's Next Titled "Day Dreams"

Buster Keaton is no exception to the rule. Consequently he has decided to name his next comedy for First National release "Day Dreams." The scenario is from the prolific pens of Buster Keaton and Eddie Cline, who also directed it.

There is nothing sadder than failure, but the First National comedy star, in his inimitable way, makes his "failure" a laughing success. Virginia Fox plays opposite Keaton, with Joe Roberts enacting the role of the "heavy."



Mermaid Comedy Starts New York Run

"Danger!" a Mermaid Comedy produced under the supervision of Jack White, and featuring Lige Conley, began a run of two or three weeks at the Criterion Theatre in New York on Sunday, June 25. "Danger!" is the most recent Jack White production in the Mermaid Comedy series released by Educational.

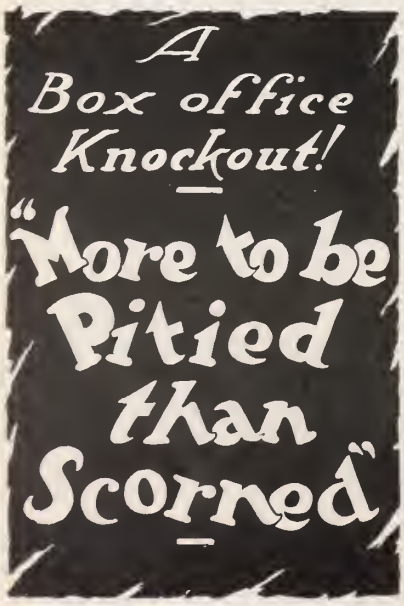
"Cap'n Kidd" Is Going Well in South

Associated First National Pictures of Atlanta reports success this week with "Cap'n Kidd," the Eddie Polo serial. According to this company, the picture is going over big in North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, and Alabama territory to which it holds rights on the serial.

Jane Novak Vehicle Due as July 9th Release

THE first of a series of six outdoor special productions which, it is expected will definitely establish Jane Novak as one of the most popular female stars of the screen, is announced as the July 9th release of the Film Booking Offices of America, the newly named named Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation. It is titled "Colleen of the Pines" and was produced by Chester Bennett from an original story by J. Grubb Alexander. "Colleen of the Pines" will be the first picture to be released through the Film Booking Offices, the change of name becoming effective on July 1st.



Miss Novak's leading man is Edward Hearn. The remainder of the cast includes Alfred Allen, J. Gordon Russell, Charlotte Pierce, Ernest Shield and "Smoke" Turner.

Lupino Lane Subjects Are Announced

The tentative titles of Lupino Lane's first group of specials for William Fox are "The Reporter," "My Hero," and "The Pirate." Each production possesses a brand of humor, it is said by those who have seen it, that will at once make popular a unique comedy personality. It is Mr. Lane's first appearance before the camera in his long and varied career, and every effort was placed behind the making of these really sensational two-reelers.

Preliminaries for "Ben Hur" Under Way

With the identity of the man who will direct the picturization of "Ben Hur" still not known, preliminary work on the gigantic production is now under way at Goldwyn's California studios. Cedric Gibbons, Goldwyn's art director, and his staff of technical assistants are hard at work on the mammoth sets that will be required for the "Ben Hur" interiors.

Railroad Tank Cars Used for Flood Scenes

Fifteen railroad tank cars, each with a capacity of 5,000 gallons, which were emptied and refilled six times, provided the flood water for the wonderfully realistic climax to "The Town That Forgot God," the Fox special production for the season of 1922-23. The village, consisting of thirty frame buildings, was built at the foot of a hill near Fort Lee, New Jersey. A railroad spur ran along the top of the hill, and the fifteen tank cars were stationed on this track.

A system of hose carried the water from the tank cars to the inlet gate of a concrete moat built around the village. More than five miles of hose were used in filming the flood scenes. The entire seventy-five thousand gallons of water were turned loose into the well or moat at one time. In order to obtain varied views of this flood and the destruction it caused, it was necessary to refill the tanks six times before the desired results were obtained.

Lorraine Picture Suited to Warm Weather

The five part comedy, "Up in the Air About Mary," is the current Associated Exhibitors offering, this laugh-provoker being set for release June 25th. The date appears to have been well chosen, for the picture, according to Associated's announcements, provides exactly the kinds of locale for which everybody longs in June and July—seashore scenes in which one almost scents the salt water, and rural settings in which it is almost possible to sniff the pure air even on the screen.

"Up in the Air About Mary" is declared to tell a real story and the role is just suited to Louise Lorraine.

Universal Films Popular in Mexico

Universal pictures are the best liked film product in Mexico today, states J. W. MacFarland, Universal's branch manager in Mexico City, who now is in New York on a short visit. Strict fairness in dealing with exhibitors, even during the most chaotic conditions has done much to win popular favor for Universal, he declares.

Universal has inaugurated a new method of film rental, which promises to become general in the Southern republic, although at present Universal is the only company now operating under it, says Mr. MacFarland. The new policy is based on a flat price rental. Heretofore business has been done with Mexican exhibitors on percentage basis almost exclusively.

Universal's Mexico branch, although only two years old, has expanded enormously. There are now nine Universal agencies, below the Rio Grande, including four major ones, the central one being in Mexico City, and three large exchanges also located in Marida, Torreon and Mazatlan.

"Silver Wings" Offers Exploitation

"Silver Wings," first of the list of Fox special productions for the season 1922-23 to receive its world premiere on Broadway New York, where it is showing for an indefinite pre-release run, offers the exhibitor, by virtue of its universally appealing and elaborately developed theme, many opportunities for effective exploitation, according to the Fox office. The picture is in the seventh week of its engagement at the Appollo Theatre.

The story, dealing with various differences arising within the family life, contains material for earnest discussion on the part of ministers, teachers and lecturers.

Rawlinson Starts New Film for Universal

With Harriet Hammond, famous bathing beauty, as his leading woman, Herbert Rawlinson has started his latest Universal attraction. It is an original story by Bernard Hyman, and will be called "Confidence." It is typically Rawlinsonesque in its whirlwind speed and romance. Harry A. Pollard will direct.

Outstanding players among others who will support the star are William Robert Daly, Melbourne McDowell, Gerald Pring, Sam Allen, Lincoln Plumer, William A. Carroll, Otto Hoffman and John Steppling.

Senator Borah Talks in Urban Movie Chats

Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, poses for the next issue of the Urban Movie Chats and takes enough time from his Senatorial duties to say to motion picture patrons:

"If we abandon the leadership and teachings of Washington, we will go back. We will return to his policy. Americanism shall not, cannot die. We may go back in sackcloth and ashes, but we will return to the faith of our fathers."

Eleanor Boardman of New York, selected by Goldwyn from 9,000 young women for training and development as a motion picture actress

Atlantic Staff Off for Work in Europe

The second contingent of the producing staff of Atlantic Enterprises, Inc., sailed Saturday on the liner America for Europe, where immediate production will be inaugurated on a series of features specially planned for the American trade with the marvelous natural wonders of continental Europe as a background.

Heading the party is Walter R. Hall, lately appointed Scenario Editor of the company, and who has behind him twelve successful years as author, scenarist and director. Hall is taking with him the prepared scenarios for the first four productions and a trunk full of stories, which will comprise the first year's output.

With Hall are his wife, a well known picture and stage star; Jose Fabra, casting director, who will later head a separate producing unit in his native country, Spain, and assistant director, property men and electricians. All these men were selected from among hundreds of applicants because of their knowledge of foreign conditions and methods.

"The Kentucky Derby" Nears Completion

King Baggot is nearing completion of the Universal-Jewal all star upon which he has been busy for ten weeks. The locations used have ranged over Southern California from Universal City to the Mexican border and even to Kentucy, where two weeks was spent in filming the annual derby classic at Louisville and the big stable scenes at Lexington. Reginald Denny and Lillian Rich have the leading roles.

"Money, Money, Money" Bought by Schulberg

B. P. Schulberg, president of Preferred Pictures, has purchased the photoplay rights to "Money, Money, Money," written by Larry Evans, as a suitable screen vehicle for Katherine MacDonald, the Frst National star.

Metro's Plans for Season of 1922-1923

WITH a schedule of big special productions of distinctive merit and balanced excellence, Metro Pictures Corporation is beginning the most auspicious season of its history.

For all that there is a variety of subject and treatment of every one of the pictures for release, in the course of making, or planned, they are uniform in that they are all special productions.

The special production, according to William E. Atkinson, vice-president and general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, is the solution of the box-office problem.

The public, even more than it has done in the last year, is going, in 1922-1923, to shop for its pictures; and select them for the reputation or story, director, star and excellence of production—regarded collectively. Pictures must have more than one point of excellence to recommend them to an increasingly critical public.

This is in part the significance of the statement issued this week from the home offices of Metro Pictures Corporation by Mr. Atkinson. The full text follows:

"Metro pictures are produced with a single, dominating principle always in mind: that every release must be a winner for the man exhibiting them, that every picture must turn over a sound profit for the showman.

"That principle is the basis for Metro's successes in the past, for its present enviable place in the faith of the exhibitor, and for its policy during the coming season of 1922-23.

"To adhere to that principle is becoming more and more difficult of achievement, as the demands of the public are becoming more and more difficult of satisfaction.

"The public no longer selects its evening's screen entertainment with the carelessness of a man buying a straw hat. The public shops for movies now with the discerning eye of a woman who can only afford one hat a season.

"What the public shops for is the special production.

"And since Metro must give the exhibitor what the public wants, special productions only constitute the Metro schedule for the crucial year to come.

"Every Metro picture during this period will come easily under the classification of a super-production. The most dramatic story material available, the most capable directors in the world today, stars that pull irresistibly, with casts of players of proven artistry—these essentials of photoplay excellence Metro has gathered together for the purpose of making every Metro picture a winner.

"The wise exhibitor, then, is the exhibitor who books Metro solid, for thus he insures the solidity of his profits."

The first five of the special productions announced by Metro for its early fall release group are:

The Rex Ingram production of "The Prisoner of Zenda," based on Anthony Hope's famous romantic novel. The photoplay has been produced on the scale of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," and is enacted by a cast as distinguished and fitting as that of the Ibanez picture. The players include Lewis Stone, Alice Terry, Ramon Novarro, Barbara La Marr, Robert Edeson, Lois Wilson, Malcolm McGregor and Edward Connelly. The scenario of this picture was written by Mary O'Hara, and the photography is by John F. Seitz. Stage dramatization was by Edward Rose.

Mae Murray in "Broadway Rose," presented by Robert Z. Leonard, who likewise directed the picture. This third of the Productions, following "Peacock Alley" and "Fascination," is expected to outdraw the first two record-breakers. Edmund Goulding wrote both the story and scenario of "Broadway Rose."

Viola Dana comes to the screen for the first time during the coming season in a photoplay of Irvin S. Cobb's celebrated story, "The Five Dollar Baby." Harry Beaumont, director of Miss Dana's successes, "The Fourteenth Lover," "Glass Houses," "They Like 'Em Rough" and "Seeing's Believing," staged "The Five Dollar Baby" and has been retained by Metro to direct Miss Dana in her later productions. First of these will be "Page Tim O'Brien," by John A. Moroso, and already the star and director are at work on it before the Metro cameras in Hollywood.

One of the best-selling novels of the year, the much-discussed story by Richard Washburn Child, "The Hands of Nara," has provided the structure of Clara Kimball Young's first appearance in a Metro release. The photoplay has been directed by Harry Garson, who presents it. Following this Miss Young will be seen in a picturization of the New York dramatic success, "Enter Madame." "The Hands of Nara" is a story of Russian intrigue and the strange power attributed to a fugitive girl. As a serial in Collier's Weekly, and later as a volume published by E. P. Dutton & Co., the story proved tremendously popular. It is considered the ideal means of introducing Miss Young to Metro exhibitors.

Bull Montana, the only tractable caveman in captivity, has frankly turned comedian. Hunt Stromberg has produced a three-reel comedy starring Mr. Montana, entitled "The Ladies' Man." This is to be the first of a series of eight. The seven to come will be of two reels each—a length to which it was hoped to hold "The Ladies' Man." But this premier appearance of Mr. Montana, in the role of a coy courtier of the expensive sex, proved so full of robust comedy that it was deemed a sheer waste of laughs to crop it.

Virtually completed, or in a more preliminary stage of growth, are other pictures of a magnitude similar to the group constituting the early fall releases. Rex Ingram is expected to bring to New York with him, within a month, a first print of a recently made photoplay, the story and direction of which are both his own. The title of this has not as yet been announced.

Fred Niblo, who directed "The Mark of Zorro," "The Three Musketeers" and "Blood and Sand," is at the point of beginning production of a big special picture to be presented by Louis B. Mayer. Metro has contracted with this celebrated director for four Fred Niblo Productions during the coming year. What Mr. Niblo's choice of subjects is has not as yet been reported from Hollywood.

Laurette Taylor has started for the west coast for the work of enacting for the screen her most beloved role, that of the title character of J. Hartley Manners' play, "Peg O' My Heart." There is little need to comment upon the celebrity of this piece. It has been given more than 14,000 times on the stages of the English-speaking world; and its arrival on the screen will be greeted by a tremendous ovation wherever people have eyes to see a screen. Mary O'Hara, adapter of "The Prisoner of Zenda," is writing the scenario, and King Vidor will direct Miss Taylor before the camera.

The most famous of home-folk stories, "Quincy Adams Sawyer," by Charles Fulton Pidgin, will be screened as a Metro-S-L Special Production by Clarence Badger, who is responsible for many Paramount comedy successes and human interest dramas for Goldwyn. His making of the Will Rogers pictures, "Honest Hutch" and "Jubilo," are excellent examples of Mr. Badger's skill and understanding the hearts of people. In "Quincy Adams Sawyer" he has for material a story which, in book form, reached a million and a half homes, and which was proportionately successful on the stage.

A special stories series, picturizations of outstandingly meritorious works by the most popular short-story and photoplay writer of America, is being begun. Each of these pictures is to be enacted by an especially distinguished cast, headed by Billie Dove, Metro's new screen discovery. Among the stories mentioned in this group are: "Country Love," by Hulbert Footner—now being made, under the direction of Emile Chautard; "The House on the Avenue," by Cosmo Hamilton; "East of Suez," by E. Lloyd Sheldon; "The Girl in the Gilded Cage," by Marion Fairfax, and "A Temporary Marriage," by Cardell Hale.

Billie Dove to Head Cast in Series

METRO has begun the making, at the studios in Hollywood, of the first of a series of super-productions of special stories, to be enacted by distinguished casts, headed by Billie Dove.

The initial photoplay is "Country Love," adapted by Edith Kennedy from Hulbert Footner's story, and being staged under the direction of Emile Chautard.

After "Country Love" will come other stories, of no less positive appeal. Those mentioned by Metro are "East of Suez," by L. Lloyd Sheldon; "A Temporary Marriage," by Cardell Halo; "The Girl in the Gilded Cage," by Marion Fairfax; and "The House of the Avenue," by Cosmo Hamilton.

Metro Productions Are Money Makers : :

IN the box-office achievements of its big productions during the past year Metro believes that it has provided exhibitors with record money-making photoplays.

The pictures in the mind of the producing and distributing organization are the Rex Ingram productions of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," "The Conquering Power" and "Turn to the Right," and the presentations by Robert Z. Leonard of Mae Murray in "Peacock Alley" and "Fascination."

The success of these Metro releases is not measured by hearsay or rumor, but by official and unsolicited statements from theatre managers, from exhibitors' comments in trade magazines and, chiefly, box-office figures. The dependability of these standards makes this information of unquestionable reliability.

Perhaps no further proof of its power as an audience getter is necessary in the case of "The Four Horsemen" than to say it established a new record for receipts at the Capitol Theatre in New York, the world's largest picture theatre, where it was shown a year after the conclusion of its phenomenal run at the Astor Theatre.

At the Capitol the audiences averaged 20,000 persons a day. In order to accommodate the crowds the doors were opened at noon. The nation-wide welcome granted this film version of the Ibanez masterpiece has, if anything, increased since its initial showing. It is now being booked—in many cases for a return engagement—in theatres of various classes throughout the cinema world. It is the first real world-picture. The comment of exhibitors is uniformly: "Wonderful business"; "run extended"; "played to capacity"; "congratulations to Metro"—this is the general vein of exhibitors' reports.

No less a magnetic attraction has been "Turn to the Right," Rex Ingram's production of the famous John Golden stage hit by Winchell Smith and John E. Hazzard. Praise from every New York newspaper followed its premiere at the Lyric Theatre. And these criticisms have proved an accurate index to its box office power, for in every case where the picture has been shown exhibitors' statements have coincided with the reviews.

"The Conquering Power," which Ingram produced after his picturization of the Ibanez novel, is another Metro special of exceptional merit. Mr. Ingram's direction, said a reviewer on the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, is "an advance on his work in 'The Four Horsemen.'" It was this film that was shown at the Rivoli Theatre in New York after a capacity week at the Rialto Theatre. These theatres are two of the finest in the metropolis and it is only a production of such great appeal as "The Conquering Power" that is transferred to one after having completed its normal run at the other.

Metro is the distributing medium for its own productions exclusively, but in exceptional cases acts in a similar capacity for photoplays which it would not hesitate to claim as its own.

"Fascination," Miss Murray's latest production, is meeting with an even greater response than her first. The house records of New York's Capitol Theatre were threatened by the crowds which fought their way into the palatial house when it was first shown there.

"Stroke of Midnight" Run Lengthened : :

EXTENSION of the run of "The Stroke of Midnight," Metro's importation of the Swedish Biograph Company's notable production at the Criterion treatre, New York, is confirmation of the belief of the releasing company in the commercial as well as the artistic strength of the picture. The hearty response accorded the photoplay at one of New York's most important film theatres is sufficiently great to sustain its run easily into a third week and the end of its engagement is not yet in sight.

The favor with which the photoplay has been received by Criterion patrons substantiates the general run of reviews of critics on the New York newspapers and trade magazines.

The "Film Daily" expressed the consensus of criticial opinion when, in its review, it paid the following tribute to the story: "An entirely new and splendid handling of the regeneration theme; absorbing from start to finish." While the idea of the photodrama—that of a man raised to decency from degradation and despair—has been the substance of innumerable screen plays, none has been able to carry the spectator along with the conviction and realism of the Metro picture.

Much of the credit for the film's excellence is due to the remarkable acting of the cast. "Better acting never was seen on the American screen," said the New York World. "A very fine cast assist in making this one of the finest pieces of cinema art on the screen today," is the summarized criticism of the Exhibitors Trade Review.

All in all, considering the absorbing appeal of the story, the unusual artistry of the cast and the masterly direction of Victor Seastrom, the Metro staff is convinced that it has in "The Stroke of Midnight" a production which will find favor with exhibitors everywhere, for its demonstrated box-office power.

"The Stroke of Midnight," adapted and directed by Victor Seastrom, is based on the novel of Dr. Selma Lagerlof. The cast includes Hilda Borgstrom, Astrid Holm, and Tore Svennberg.

"Peg O' My Heart" to Rival Stage Version : : :

"PEG O' MY HEART" as a motion picture will equal and in many cases surpass the long-run records the stage play has set in the great cities of the world.

Theatrical statisticians have been kept busy ever since the premiere of this comedy by J. Hartley Manners, May 26, 1912, in keeping pace with the number of performances; and it is anticipated that they will be given double duty as soon as Laurette Taylor, who created the world-famous title-role of "Peg o' My Heart," makes her screen debut in the Metro production of the piece.

Motion pictures of this high order are no longer regarded as presentations of only weekly or even monthly duration. In New York the dramas of the screen often show greater box-office stamina than do the legitimate attractions playing nearby and at the same prices.

In the case of "Peg o' My Heart," of course—for the play has been given 14,925 times and in parts of the world ranging from Indiana to India—the photoplay has work cut out for it to equal the theatrical presentation's record; but the quality of the motion picture production—its scale and the wealth of new scenes the technique of the screen will allow where the theatre could not—are expected so to enhance the attraction of the Manners comedy that it will outdistance, in the end, the performances before the footlights.

The presence of Laurette Taylor in the character of Peg is in itself of inestimable value to the exhibitor of the picture. To think of "Peg o' My Heart" is to think of Miss Taylor; and it must be noted that while the play has been enacted 14,925 times, the original star herself has appeared in the leading role only 1,127 times, these including performances in the United States and in London. American theatregoers and picture fans are divided into three classes: those who have seen Laurette Taylor as Peg; those who have not; and those who have not seen the play at all, but know it only by reputation and the praise of the friends.

In addition to the popularity of "Peg o' My Heart as a play, the novel based upon it has outsold many of the volumes big publishers herald as fiction sensations.

Mary O'Hara already has advanced sufficiently far with the script of the photoplay to allow Miss Taylor to begin work at the Metro studios, under the direction of King Vidor, at the scheduled time of July 5. J. Hartley Manners, author of the play, and Miss Taylor's husband, will accompany her to Los Angeles, there to render such assistance as he can in the suitable reproduction of his play for the screen.

Ingram to Challenge Previous Effort - - - - - -

BEFORE a fraction of the period of Rex Ingram's new contract with Metro Fictures Corporation has expired, the photoplay company believes that the brilliant young director will have achieved advances in picture production over "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" as great as this masterpiece of the screen made over any other motion picture produced up to the present time.

Such is the sense of the opinion voiced this week by William E. Atkinson, vice-president and general manager of Metro, at the home offices of the company in New York.

The industry will recall the predictions of many well acquainted with the film market that to make such a photoplay as "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" was sheer folly from the commercial point of view. Granting that as a novel it was popular—for there could be no gainsaying that—reliable motion picture experts felt that its appeal to the public would be limited only to those members of it possessing a degree of literary appreciation. Now that the picture has behind it an exceptional run on Broadway at the Astor Theatre, showings of commensurate length in every big city in the United States, the attendance record of the Capitol Theatre, the world's largest picture palace, enthusiastic receptions and bonanza receipts in theatres in Paris, Madrid, and other Continental capitals, and recently forty simultaneous exhibitions in Chicago theatres—critics of Metro and of Mr. Ingram have come to see that times change in the picture business as well as in the other activities of the world.

"The Prisoner of Zenda," Rex Ingram's production of Anthony Hope's romantic novel; and a second picture, a drama of exotic love, the title of which has not as yet been announced, are already filmed.

The director, who won a degree for screen artistry from Yale University, plans next to make Victor Hugo's "Toilers of the Sea," and the importance of this photoplay is indicative of the calibre which will constitute Mr. Ingram's contributions for Metro release during the coming two years.

"Absurd though it may sound at this time," said William E. Atkinson, vice-president and general manager of Metro, "we believe that before Mr. Ingram has half completed his projected next six pictures for us, he will have made strides in photoplay making that will make even 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse' appear at a disadvantage in comparison.

"No matter that it seems impossible, it is inevitable."

Dana Scores in "Five Dollar Baby" : : : :

NOT only in the estimation of the officials of Metro Pictures Corporation, which made and will distribute "The Five Dollar Baby," starring Viola Dana, but also in the eyes of the trade paper critics who have seen this screen version of Irvin S. Cobb's celebrated short story, this photoplay is the most successful offering in which the star has ever appeared.

Both from the artistic and the box-office angle, "The Five Dollar Baby" is acclaimed as one of the prize infants of the industry by Metro. Star, story, direction, and the appeal which draws the crowds into the theatre and impels them to tell their friends of their enjoyment—all these are praised by the reviewers of the trade press.

"A sure fire number that is real entertainment" is the comment of the Film Daily, and an accurate summary of the entire wealth of favorable criticism of "The Five Dollar Baby."

Taken even in comparison with the series of previous Viola Dana successes—"The Fourteenth Lover," "Glass Houses," "They Like 'Em Rough," all highly nutritious to the box-office—"The Five Dollar Baby" stands out as especially worthy of adoption into the exhibitor's film household.

Expanding the digested criticism in its headline, "A sure fire number that is real entertainment that is sure to please," the Film Daily continues: "A really delightful comedy offering that mixes laughs with pathos in appealing fashion."

In other words the Moving Picture World gives the same advice to motion picture showmen when it says:

"Few pictures lately can be said to carry a greater human appeal than this one. . . . This film can be counted on to come in for a great deal of praise from any sort of audience. It will prove a money-maker for exhibitors no matter from what station in life their patrons are drawn. Miss Dana does some of the best work of her career."

The Motion Picture News places "The Five Dollar Baby" immediately among the season's best. "When the season's best contributions are compiled at the end of the year Metro's picture 'The Five Dollar Baby' . . . will be ranked among the winners."

Miss Dana's picture is adapted from Irvin S. Cobb's now classic short story, which appeared originally in The Saturday Evening Post. mont Production was written by. Rex Taylor.

Badger Directs "Quincy Adams Sawyer" : : : :

THAT great home-folks' story, "Quincy Adams Sawyer," by Charles Felton Pidgin, has been bought for conversion into photoplay form for release through Metro Pictures Corporation, and is at present in course of production at the company's studios in Hollywood. It is to be a Metro-S-L Special Production.

Clarence Badger, to whose credit are many Paramount and Goldwyn screen successes, is directing "Quincy Adams Sawyer." The script has been written by Bernard McConville, adaptor of Mark Twain's "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court."

"Quincy Adams Sawyer" comes to the screen with the advantage of a tremendous accumulated popularity. The setting is New England, the people those who indulge in chores and straw rides and dances in the fire company's hall. Both as a book and as a play it has stood over a long period of years. A million and a half copies of the novel were sold and, as if the public could not be satisfied with this, there was such a demand for further acquaintance with the title character that the author, Charles Felton Pidgin, was practically forced by weight of popular desire to write two sequels: "The Further Adventures of Quincy Adams Sawyer" and "The Chronicles of Quincy Adams Sawyer, Detective."

S-L Pictures (Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin) and Metro have exercised judgment in the delegation of the responsibilities of adaptation and direction. Bernard McConville's skill in translating into pictures the quaint, twangy hero of "A Connecticut Yankee" merited his choice for the task of imparting the same flavor of reality and humanness to the fiction characters of "Quincy Adams Sawyer," the most popular down-East story ever written.

"Jubilo," likewise a drama of country life, was another of Clarence Badger's hits, as were "A Perfect Lady," "Sis Hopkins," "Leave It to Susan," "Strictly Confidential," "Almost a Husband," "The Strange Boarder" and others.

"Prisoner of Zenda" for Fall Release : :

"THE Prisoner of Zenda," the Rex Ingram production for Metro Pictures Corporation, based on the famous novel by Anthony Hope, will be among the first of the fall releases of this producing company. The statement has been made to supply definite information to the numerous exhibitors who have already expressed to Metro their desire of being among the first to book the production.

If the advance reviews of critics who have witnessed this Metro photoplay is a standard by which the industry can form its conclusions, "The Prisoner of Zenda" should prove a box-office attraction of even greater power than "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," which is now conceded to be the greatest money-maker and audience-getter that exhibitors have ever played. The photoplay was shown at the recent Exhibitors' Convention at Washington, and the crowds who viewed it were convinced that this Metro attraction was certain to establish itself as the most phenomenal box-office magnet in a decade.

Mr. Arthur James in The Moving Picture Worl summed up his prophecy for "The Prisoner of Zenda" with the statement that:

"Metro will find a harvest in releasing it, and exhibitors who take advantage of its extraordinary advertising opportunities should break house records."

"A splendid box-office, sure fire picture" re-echoes Film Daily.

"Has several things in it that may make the famous quartet of 'Horsemen' look out for their blue ribbons," advises the Exhibitors' Herald.

Rarely has a production earned such a remarkable unanimity of critical praise. Only an exceptional production like "The Prisoner of Zenda" could merit it.

The quality of the photoplay is such that its appeal is a really universal one. The elements of its greatness are that it can be relied upon to provide fascinating entertainment for every type of motion picture patron. Romance, danger, intrigue, love, charm—these qualities are the basis of universal entertainment, and it is in these qualities that this picture abounds. That "The Prisoner of Zenda" was to be a photoplay was inevitable. Its great balls and receptions as produced by Mr. Ingram are masterpieces of crowd handling as well as supreme achievements of scenic art; while its breath-taking episodes, exciting and unexpected turns of plot make it a feature long to be remembered.

The painstaking care which has characterized all of the Rex Ingram productions for Metro is apparent in "The Prisoner of Zenda."

"The acting is superb" says the Moving Picture World.

"You are transported for the time being," is the tribute the MOTION PICTURE NEWS pays to its characterization.

Mr. Ingram has displayed the same genius for picking players who represent to the life the persons they are called upon to portray, that made "The Four Horsemen" a portrait gallery that has never been surpassed.

Alice Terry, whose characterization of the beautiful Marguerite Laurier in "The Four Horsemen" was one of the most appealing in that photoplay, is seen in the leading feminine role. Her superb grace lavish coronation scenes, its brilland delicate beauty as Princess Flavia in her present part make her portrayal the finest she has yet done.

Lewis Stone the well-known actor of the stage and screen, does the best work of his brilliant career in the dual role of Rudolf Rassendyl and King Rudolf, playing opposite Miss Terry.

Ramon Novarro, the young Spaniard whom Ingram considers one of the most promising actors of the day, plays the part of Rupert of Hentzau in a manner that fully justifies the faith which the director has placed in him.

Barbara La Marr, as Antoinette de Mauban, provides a remarkable characterization. Her portrayal of Hope's adventuress is one of the interesting portrayals in the production.

Others in the long cast are Robert Edeson, as the genial Colonel Sapt; Malcolm McGregor as Fritz Von Tarlenheim; Stuart Holmes as Duke Michael; and Lois Lee as the Countess Helga.

"The Prisoner of Zenda" was adapted by Mary O'Hara from the novel by Anthony Hope. John F. Seitz photographed it. Edward Rose dramatized the story.

Clara Kimball Young in Metro Debut : :

MAKING her debut as a Metro star, Clara Kimball Young will be seen in the principal role of "The Hands of Nara," a screen version of Richard Washburn Child's famous novel, whose popularity as a best-selling volume of fiction and as a breathlessly interesting magazine serial will launch Miss Young upon her coming season with every indication of its being her most successful.

"The Hands of Nara," in which the star is presented by Harry Garson, was produced at the Garson Studios in Los Angeles. The story on which it is based was written by Richard Washburn Child, the famous novelist who is the present ambassador to Italy. It ran as a serial for sixteen weeks in Collier's Magazine, and was subsequently published in book form by E. P. Dutton & Co.

The story, highly colored and dramatic in character, concerns an aristocratic Russian refugee in this country, beset by agents of the Red regime. Those who have had glimpses of the film declare that it affords Miss Young the biggest opportunity of her career. Her characterization in the role of the heroine is said to be one of the greatest she has ever portrayed. Elliott Dexter is cast in the leading male role, playing opposite Miss Young.

Following "The Hands of Nara," the star will be seen in "Enter Madame," the successful play by Dolly Byrne and Gilda Varesi, which played for forty-five weeks on Broadway, New York, both at the Fulton and the Republic theatres. After its metropolitan engagement three companies toured the United States in it. Later the play was seen at the Royal theatre in London. "Enter Madame" has been shown or is scheduled for production in France, Germany, Italy, Spain, Poland, South America and the Scandinavian countries.

The stellar role in the play is that of Mme. Della Robbia, a temperamental Italian opera singer who enjoys an international reputation. Her marital difficulties with an American husband who is unwilling to merge his own identity into that of his wife and who balks at serving merely as companion to the talented singer, forms a comedy-drama of real entertainment. Each of its characterizations is clear-cut and sharply defined, and the humor and pathos of its complications caused critics to greet it as one of the finest plays that the American theatre had produced.

As was "The Hands of Nara," "Enter Madame" will be produced by the Samuel Zierler Photoplay Corporation, and directed by Harry Garson. Except in New York and northern New Jersey, Metro is distributor of these special productions. In the territory excepted they are released by the Commonwealth Film Corporation, which is under the same management as the producing unit.

Mae Murray in "Broadway Rose" : :

IN part on account of the tremendous success of Mae Murray's appearances in "Peacock Alley" and "Fascination," this star's coming presentation by Robert Z. Leonard in "Broadway Rose," a Metro release, will outscore at the box office even the enviable records of either of those two earlier Tiffany productions.

Such is the conviction of M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of Tiffany Productions, in regard to the newest photoplay for Miss Murray written by Edmund Goulding.

At the studios in New York, Mr. Hoffman said this week:

"The most amazing thing about Miss Murray and Mr. Leonard, her director and husband, is that they are not content with big successes. They are constantly seeking bigger ones, never striving merely for the equalling of their last.

"'Peacock Alley,' I know from the booking reports from Metro, and 'Fascination' have proven two of the most certain paying attractions of the year. There is a glamour, a brilliancy about the Mae Murray picture which, in addition to the magnetism of the star and the splendidly presented drama, set them apart as something different from any other photoplays. They cast a spell over the audience, an illusion of colorful romance which once experienced calls for repetition.

"The thrills and enchantment in 'Peacock Alley' and 'Fascination' have generated an eagerness on the part of the public; and this, in addition to the fact that in her new picture Miss Murray is seen as an American girl, after French and Spanish roles, is bound to make 'Broadway Rose' the most powerful attendance magnet of the series so far."

William E. Atkinson, vice-president and general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, expressed himself as fully as confident as Mr. Hoffman of the immediate and big-scale success of "Broadway Rose."

"Broadway Rose," directed by Robert Z. Leonard, as were "Peacock Alley" and "Fascination," will in every respect be comparable with those productions in the elaborateness of settings, the artistic development of the story and the beauty of the costumes. Every effort has been made to create a production which shall exceed Miss Murray's previous pictures in public favor.

An extraordinarily large number of exhibitors after showing "Fascination" telegraphed or wrote to Metro exchanges asking for more pictures like it. Whatever the varying public taste may be, there seems to be a very decided demand for the type of picture with which Miss Murray has become identified and exhibitors are discovering that they cannot afford to ignore this demand.

UNDER the direction of Harry Beaumont, Viola Dana has begun work at the Metro studios in Hollywood upon a new series of comedy-dramas to follow her first release of the approaching season, "The Five Dollar Baby."

First on the schedule, and already in course of enaction, is "Page Tim O'Brien," John A. Moroso's story. Staging the piece is Harry Beaumont, who was Miss Dana's first director back in the days when she was, as well as the industry, undoubtedly an infant, and who is responsible for the many highlights of action in this little star's recent string of unqualified successes: "The Fourteenth Lover," "Glass Houses," "Seeing's Believing," "They Like 'Em Rough" and "The Five Dollar Baby."

Between Miss Dana and Mr. Beaumont there is an artistic harmony which has made invariably, in the star's releases since January of this year, for excellence in the kind of picture Viola Dana has made famous: human, poignant and gay comedies of youth. The newest story, "Page Tim O'Brien," is of that same style, and despite the highly gratifying praise reviewers have bestowed upon its immediate precurser, "The Five Dollar Baby," Miss Dana is out to, and confident that she will, excel even that production's success.

The other stories, to come after Tim O'Brien has been paged, are: "June Madness," by Crosby George; "A Noise in Newboro," by Edgar Franklin. Mr. Beaumont's contract, renewed for a long term, calls for his directing these and later Viola Dana pictures for Metro.

"Missing Husbands" French Photoplay : :

PARTICULARLY because of its title's exploitive possibilities, as well as on account of its merit as a photoplay, "Missing Husbands," the French photoplay which is being released in this country by Metro Pictures Corporation, is proving one of the undeniably first-class box office attractions of the season.

Exhibitors in communications to Metro's home offices in New York emphasize the fact that the publicity and exploitation stunts to which the picture readily lends itself make this imported photoplay a great drawing card.

Much of the exploitation has centered about the title, the box office value of which has demonstrated to Metro that an attractive name can do much to draw justified attention to a good story. Highly successful stunts, based in most cases on the name of the picture, have been worked with an unusual degree of success wherever the photoplay has been shown.

In addition to the title, the quality of the picture itself is such that stamps it as a receipts booster. "If it's something new your audiences want, here is one that will set them talking," is the recommendation of the Exhibitor's Trade Review. "Here is a unique and vastly different story," says Billboard. "The exhibitor who continually clamors for something fresh and original will find this French photoplay a decided novelty."

"Missing Husbands" was adapted by Jacques Feyder from Pierre Benoit's novel, "L'Atlantide." The cast, among which are players of exceptional prominence on the French screen, includes Stacia Napierkowska, Marie Louise Iribe, Jean Angelo and Georges Melchoir.

Mr. Gauntlet divides bis time between the three houses, making bis general headquarters at the house in Seattle. Mr. Hamrick has been playing some very successful return engagements of exceptional features that have had first-run bookings at his theatres. "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" has had two return engagements at the Blue Mouse in Seattle, and "The Queen of Sheba" also enjoyed a return booking, after playing an opening engagement of two weeks. "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" was scheduled for a return engagement during the month of July.

The Colonial theatre, under the ownership and direction of John Danz, recently reduced admission prices to ten cents at any time. The Colonial is one of the smaller theatres in the downtown district of the city, playing second runs of many of the bigger features, with occasional first run showings.

ST. LOUIS

Manager G. E. McKean of the local Fox office, will install an educational department on July 1 with his son, Claud McKean, formerly assistant manager of the local office, in charge, it is announced. This department, it is stated, will cater to churches, schools, educational and fraternal organizations, but will endeavor to obtain the cooperation of the local exhibitors when possible. About thirty feature pictures have been selected for use by this department, as well as a number of comedies and short length subjects.

Dr. Max A. Goldstein, director of the Central Institute for the Deaf, told the fifth annual convention of the Society of Progressive Oral Advocates meeting at the Washington University Medical School, June 17, that motion pictures have performed wonders in teaching the deaf to talk. He said that the ultra slow-motion picture, which shows the muscular movements of the neck and throat, had opened a vast new field in the teaching of the deaf.

Joe Feld is the new assistant manager of the local Fox office. He formerly was with Pioneer and Fox in Kansas City.

Black Art Productions is the name of a producing unit that has been formed here to make several special short length pictures. Romaine Fielding is producing director for the company, which uses the studios of the National Film Publicity Company. Their first product was "Sawing a Woman in Two."

The local Peacock office has moved to 3435 Olive street. Pioneer and Hodkinson have quarters in the same building.

The success of the St. Louis Browns in the American League race, which they assumed the lead of Friday, June 16, has been an inventive in bringing many out-of-town exhibitors to the city during these hot days. They come early, shop in the morning and root for the Browns in the afternoon.

J. F. Rees, owner of the Regal theatre, Wellsville, Mo., who sold an ice cream parlor in that town last October, was regretting that move last Saturday when the thermometer was hitting around 95 degrees in the shade and ice cream cones and soda pop were as popular as home-run drives by the home-town sluggers.

CLEVELAND

H. O. Moranz o fthe American theatre, Latonia, O., has purchased the Grand theatre and Opera House, both at Lisbon, O., from Gross and Schoenfeld.

George Sbankel has leased the Superior theatre, Superior Avenue and East 86th Street, Cleveland, from George Heinbuck. Heinbuck has retired from the motion picture business for the time being, and is devoting all his time to real estate transactions.

The Capitol theatre, Youngstown, erected this past winter at a cost of approximating a million dollars, is closed for the summer. Manager Denziger is reported to be in Buffalo.

The Strand theatre, Youngstown, is also closed for the warm months. The Strand and Capitol are two of the leading downtown first-run houses of Youngstown.

There's a rumor afloat that when the Capitol at Youngstown opens again, it will be under the banner of Christie Deibel, manager of the Liberty, Youngstown.

R. L. Grey, for the past five years manager of the Majestic theatre, one of the big houses on the West Side, was unable to renew his lease on the house. The lease expired this week, and is now being run by the owners of the building.

Eddie Mott, manager of the Lyric theatre, Wooster, O., is taking advantage of the slack season to build himself a beautiful new home.

Allen Simmons, manager of the Allen theatre, Akron, has a system all his own for getting good film service. Simmons has a fine home on one of the hills just as you enter Akron. It's getting to be quite the thing for film men entering Akron to stop at the Simmons home for refreshments, it being a convenient stopping-off place for the boys who drive down. This makes for good feeling all around, and by the time they get to talking business, everybody's ready to meet the other fellow half way.

Ike Lipson, L. Heidengfeld, of Cincinnati, and John Harris, of Pittsburgh, are principals in the organization which last week took over the lease of the Southern theatre, Columbus. The organization now controls the Strand, Walnut, Family, Palace and Capitol theatres in Cincinnati, in addition to the newly acquired Southern.

At the farewell dinner tendered Eugene Quigley, former manager of Ascher's Capitol before leaving for Cbicago, a new organization of newspaper writers and motion picture publicity men was formed, for the purpose of promoting greater cooperation between newspaper editors and publicity people. It is known as the STATE AND SCREEN WRITERS' GUILD. Officers are: president, William S. Goldberg, dramatic editor Cincinnati Enquirer; vice-president, Albert Thompson, dramatic editor Commercial Tribune; secretary, Myrtle Miles, motion picture editor Times-Star; treasurer, Elmer Dressman, motion picture editor Post. Directors are William G. Steigler, dramatic editor Times-Star; Carl Adams, motion picture editor Enquirer; Lew Heck, press agent Lyric and Gifts theatres; Bob Newhall, theatrical writer Commercial-Tribune. Rudolph Benson, publicity agent for Chester Park, is head of a committee for drafting the constitution.

W. J. Slimm, veteran motion picture exhibitor of Cleveland, retires from the field of activities on June 15 witb the expiration of his lease on the Marquis theatre, Crawford Road and Hough Avenue. The lease has been taken over by E. C. Flannigan, Frank Nolan and B. C. Steele. Flannigan, Nolan and Steele are out collecting motion picture theatres. They want about eight. They now have, beside the Marquis, the Penn Square and the Terminal.

Scoville, Essick and Reiff, managers of a string of West Side tbeatres, have just taken over the Lucier, one of leading motion picture houses of Lakewood. The Lucier was formerly owned by Mrs. Louis Becht, widow of one of Cleveland's most prominent pioneer exhibitors.

The Dream as a 15-cent house, with a cbildren's rate of 10 cents, generally sbows to full seats at every performance.

The Colonial Players continue to be a popular feature at the Colonial theatre, their weekly playlets being in addition to the film program, without any advance in prices. "Counsel for the Defense," taking 30 minutes, was one of their recent successes.

Niblo to Make Four During Season

FRED NIBLO, whose record as a director includes the making of such famous photoplays as "The Mark of Zorro," "The Three Musketeers" and "Blood and Sand," will stage for Metro Pictures Corporation four big pictures, to be released during the coming season. These will be presented by Louis B. Mayer.

Definite announcement of the subjects of these Fred Niblo Productions has not as yet come from the Metro offices, but is expected soon.

Ever since signing the contract with Metro, Mr. Niblo has been going over likely stories, plays and scripts, and word of his selection of a first subject doubtless will be forthcoming within a few days.

The acquisition of Mr. Niblo by the Metro forces is regarded as one of the most strengthening units of that organization's already strong structure.

Great Expense for One "Monte Cristo" Scene

FOX FILM CORPORATION issues through its auditing department an interesting statement in which the figures are given of the cost of constructing and photographing the immense ball room scene in "Monte Cristo." The total expense incidental to the one scene is said to have been $183,100.

The actual cost of the mechanical construction, exclusive of tapestries, rugs, candelabra, sconces and bric-a-brac generally was $15,380. A great marble and onyx staircase, leading into the ballroom and down which Monte Cristo makes his first public appearance in Paris society, cost $5,120.

"Dressed," as studio folk designate a scene ready for shooting, which included furniture, painting, curtains, bronzes and specially painted murals, the set represented an actual monetary value of $130,300. Added to this initial cost comes the costumes of 100 "extras" garbed in the graceful and beautiful gowns of the Empire period, representing an outlay of about $21,600. The latter were in fabrics of panne velvet, brocades and satins, and expensive furs played an important part in the trimmings. Clothes of the men, made of equally expensive material, added another $10,700.

DeMille Is Busy with "Manslaughter"

Cecil B. DeMille, having completed the big bacchanal and courtroom scenes for his current Paramount production of "Manslaughter," in which Thomas Meighan, Leatrice Joy, Lois Wilson, John Miltern, George Fawcett and other prominent players are featured, is now engaged on the sequence of prison scenes.

It will be recalled that Jeanie MacPherson, who wrote the scenario from Alice Duer Miller's novel, committed a petty crime, was genuinely tried and sentenced to the woman's prison in Detroit and there spent three days in order to get first-hand knowledge of prison interior atmosphere. Thus duly qualified as an expert, Miss MacPherson is supervising the technical details of these scenes which are supposed to transpire in the woman's section of the famous State prison at Auburn, N. Y.

All-Comedy Program at Garrick, Los Angeles

By arranging a show composed entirely of comedies, the management of the Garrick Theatre, Los Angeles, supplied more laughs to one performance than ever before known to pictures. The bill consisted of Charles Chaplin in "Pay Day"; Buster Keaton in "The Boat,"; and Ben Turpin in his latest success, "Step Forward," all First National attractions. The Garrick is reported to have done a record business on the all-comedy bill.

Wilderness Tales Approved

Magazines and Newspapers Comment Favorably Upon Educational Release

THE appeal that is being made by the Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce which Educational is releasing, is evidenced by the increasing number of reviews on these subjects which are being printed in the magazines and newspapers of the country in spite of their brief length.

The National Board of Reviews publication Exceptional Photoplays had never before reviewed any subject of one-reel length as an Exceptional Picture, but with only five of the series of Wilderness Tales released so far two of them, "And Women Must Weep" and "The One Man Reunion," have been listed as Exceptional Pictures and reviewed at considerable length.

One of the most recent reviews was written by W. Ward Marsh in the Plain Dealer of Cleveland.

"The first of a series of ten story scenics, combined under the title of 'Wildernes Tales' is now showing in the Stilman," writes Marsh. "This one is called 'And Women Must Weep.' Single reel features seldom are given special mention; if they be exceptionally good ones, such as this one, they deserve and will get more than 'their names in the paper.'"

"'And Women Must Weep' was made by Robert C. Bruce for Educational from Kingsly's 'Three Fishers' and Symon's 'The Fisher's Widow.' It is but a single reel, as has been said, but it contains the action of a feature length picture and has more beauty and photography and settings than are found in a dozen averge features. This one is a tragedy; perhaps that is why it seems longer than it really is. I am not so certain that the titles are word perfect, but this matters little when scene and action are perfect. Bruce has produced a photographic gem. Its characters are real and are naturally portrayed."

Mary Carr In New Picture

Fox Will Present Great Screen Mother in Production of "The Custard Cup"

MARY Carr, famed as the "most beloved mother" of the screen, will shortly be presented in a new production by William Fox, it was announced today. "The Custard Cup," one of the year's best sellers, has been selected as the story for Mrs. Carr's next picture. In this she will portray one of the most lovable characters ever created in fiction—that of Penzie.

"The Custard Cup" by Florence Bingham Livingston, has been pronounced by critics one of the greatest of the humorous novels since "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." The title of the photoplay will be "Penzie."

"Penzie" tells the story of the joys to be found in the little things of life. The book itself is noted for its delicious humor and is a portrayal of the lives of people who manage to live on almost nothing a year and have an uproariously good time. "Penzie" is the mother not only to a brood of adopted waifs but to all the people in the tumbledown section, called "The Custard Cup," where she lives. The story is one of human kindness, of everyday folks, of troubles and worries and of the sunshine that always can be found if one seeks it rightly.

In addition to having one of the best novels of the year for her story, Mrs. Carr will be guided by one of the most able of directors—Herbert Brenon.

At present Brenon is at work on a new picture, "Moonshine Valley," in which William Farnum is the star. When this picture is completed he will begin at once to prepare "Penzie" for screening.

Local Color Plentiful in "Old Homestead"

HANSOM cabs, queer looking derby hats, cobble stone streets, gas lights at the street corners, a horse car drawn by mules, Chinamen wearing queues, women wearing basques and small bustles and impossible hats, small boys with funny long trousers or still funnier short ones, all the paraphernalia of Gotham in the days before automobiles, radiotelephones, wireless, motion pictures and other familiar things of today—all these are going to carry a lot of people back on the wings of memory when Paramount's "The Old Homestead" is seen on the screen.

James Cruze, the director, with his large crops of assistants, has been very careful that no anachronisms should slip through and it will be difficult to pick flaws in any sequence of the famous old play which is now being made in enlarged and elaborated form for the films.

The property department, with Howard Wells, Julia Haron and others as well as the experts on building sets and doing other technical work for such big scenes, have all been kept busy making sure that nothing should creep into the picture that didn't belong.

Production Starts on Gloria Joy Series

Work on the first Sherwood MacDonald production, featuring Gloria Joy, started last week at the R-C studio in Los Angeles. Mr. MacDonald will make twelve two-reel comedies featuring the young star for release through the Film Booking Offices of America. The first to be engaged in support of Miss Joy was Gordon Sackville, who will impersonate the father of the dainty leading woman throughout the series.

Glen Gordon, a screen juvenile of fourteen years, who has played opposite Miss Joy in "I Want to be a Lady" and "Little Miss Grown-Up" will appear as her beau in all the pictures, and Dixie Lamont has been engaged for the sister role.

Rotarians at Pickford-Fairbanks Studios

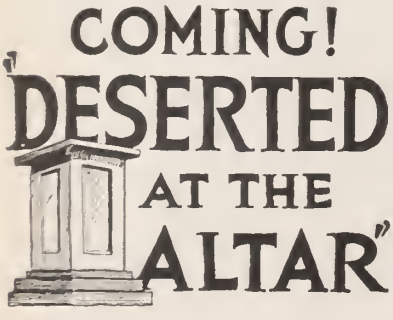
During the recent thirteenth international convention of Rotarians at Los Angeles, the Pickford-Fairbanks studios were thrown open to the delegates, and thousands of members of the big organization swarmed to this favored spot in Filmland.

Douglas Fairbanks was in the midst of the gigantic task of producing "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," and Mary Pickford was just as busy at the equally big task involved in her new production of "Tess of the Storm Country," her great triumph of nine years ago. Both these special features are being made for fall release through United Artists Corporation.

Nacht Reports Business Good in North

"BUSINESS conditions throughout northern New York State and the whole of New England are showing a marked improvement, and exhibitors are happy in consequence. Indeed, a decided advance has already set in in the industry and yet greater results are expected in the autumn."

This statement was made this week by A. Nacht, manager of the sales control and statistical department of Associated Exhibitors, on his return from a two weeks' automobile tour which took him almost to the Canadian borderline in Maine. Mr. Nacht made stops in some forty or fifty cities and towns in northern New York, Massachusetts, Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine, and though the trip was made primarily for pleasure, he took occasion everywhere to confer not only with exhibitors but with representatives of other lines of business also.



Baby Marie Osborne in New Pathe Playlet

Baby Marie Osborne is featured in an all-star cast in the latest Pathe Playlet, "The Little Diplomat," re-edited from a former feature success. The offering has been scheduled by Pathe for release the week of July 9th. Betty Compson is in the cast including such names as Jack Connolly, Sunshine Sammy, William Welsh, Lydia Knott, Murdock MacQuarrie, Maida Vale and Al MacQuarrie.

Stuart Paton direced the photoplay which was written by Emma Bell Clifton. The story shows the exploits of Baby Marie in uncovering the work of a band of crooks.

Constance Binney May Star in New Dane Play

When Constance Binney returns to America in July, it is extremely probable that she will have with her, the manuscript of a new play by Clemence Dane, the author of "A Bill of Divorcement," in which Miss Binney is staring at the Ideal Film Company's studies, near London, England. The new drama will be used by the young star as her theatrical vehicle for coming season, and Mrs. Dane is said to be writing it with the ultimate idea of motion picture production in mind after the play has become established on the boards.

A Novelty by International

"The Mirror" Will Be One-Reel Revival of Great Events of Past

A ONE-REEL film novelty, called "The Mirror," that instantly has jumped into popular favor and now is being shown in the country's leading theatres, is being issued by the International News Reel Corporation, through Universal. It is a revival of great news events of the past, made before news reels were thought of. The first number, now being issued, features pictures taken twenty-five years ago during the inauguration of President William McKinley in 1897.

Everywhere this reel has been shown it has attracted great attention, and assumed feature proportions during its run. Columns of newspaper publicity have been written round the novelty of viewing moving pictures of events which now are far back on the pages of history. The inauguration pictures are surprisingly good, but the vast improvement of the art of the moving picture camera is easily seen by contrasting the McKinley pictures with pictures of President Wilson's 1913 inauguration, and President Harding's last year, excerpts of which are shown in the same reel.

The McKinley pictures included in this reel are believed to be the only moving pictures extant of the inauguration of the martyred President, or of any news event which took place so long ago. Grover Cleveland, the retiring President, is seen with McKinley. These pictures are particularly newsy at the present time in connection with a series of McKinley reminiscences appearing in the Saturday Evening Post.

The Rialto theatre, New York City, featured "The Mirror" containing the McKinley pictures, during that theatre's recent anniversary week. Balaban & Katz' new Tivoli theatre, Chicago, also featured the first issue of "The Mirror."

Following issue No. 1, of "The Mirror," there will be subseqeunt issues. The following interesting and historical news revivals are scheduled for inclusion: No. 2, the Lusitania breaking records across the Atlantic, 1907. No. 3, the Coronation of King George, 1911. No. 4, the Czar, at the height of his power, 1908. No. 5, King George with the Kaiser, 1908. No. 6, brilliant episodes in the reign of Edward VII., 1905-1908. No. 7, with Theodore Roosevelt in Africa, 1910.

Paramount's July Schedule

"The Man Unconquerable" Due for July 2nd Heads List of Releases

WITH five productions listed for release on the July schedule as announced by S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution, Paramount presents a fine program of entertainment for the Midsummer month.

Opening the month on July 2 is Jack Holt in "The Man Unconquerable," a story of South Sea pearl fisheries by Hamilton Smith. Julien Josephson wrote the scenario and Joseph Henabery directed. Sylvia Breamer returns to the Paramount banner as leading woman and others in the cast are Clarence Burton, Ann Schaeffer, Jean de Briac and Edwin Stevens.

One of the releases for July 9 is Ethel Clayton in "For the Defense." Paul Powell directed, Vernon Steele is leading man and ZaSu Pitts, Bertram Grassby, Maym Kelso, Sylvia Ashton and Mabel Van Buren are prominent in the support.

On the same date the Hamilton Theatrical Corporation presents "The Greatest Truth," a UFA production, directed by J. May. It is described as a sensationally dramatic story of modern life, the cast being composed of some of the leading European screen artists.

"South of Suva," starring Mary Miles Minter, is the release for July 16. This is a story of life in the South Sea Islands, and Miss Minter appears for the first time in a truly "grown-up" role. Edward Adamson wrote the story and Fred Myton the scenario. Frank Urson directed. John Bowers plays opposite the star. Walter Long is the heavy and Roy Atwell has a comedy role.

Agnes Ayres in "Borderland," is the release for July 30. Miss Ayres plays three distinct roles. Milton Sills is the leading man.

Pathe News Puts Over Many "Scoops"

PATHE NEWS lays claim to the efficiency feat of screening six clean "scoops" on important events in a single issue of its regular service. This was No. 51, released Saturday, June 24th. These events were as follows—all pictured in detail:

The three days' sensational blaze at Los Angeles which turned a tank containing 55,000 barrels of oil into a volcano of smoke and flame—both night and day scenes.

At Kiel, Germany, the purchase by the German Government of old English sea relics, British warships, to be scrapped.

At Singapore, visit of the Prince of Wales to the British Straits settlement, showing the decorated capital and the review of the guard of honor.

The quelling of the prison mutiny at Alipore, India, after an armed fight with 500 native convicts who had set fire to the Presidency Jail.

Maternity hospitals in New York take "footprints" of babies and finger prints of mothers to prevent "mix-ups."

Rapf Leaves to Make New Picture

Harry Rapf left last week for the Warner Brothers' west coast studios to begin production of the second Wesley Barry feature, "Little Heroes of the Street," which will be directed by William Beaudine. Jack and Sam Warner also left for the coast.

The finished print of the first Barry picture "Rags to Riches," was brought east by Rapf, and it is reported it will be the first of seven productions to be distributed by the Warner Brothers this coming season.

Following the completion of the second Barry attraction, Rapf will film "Brass," Charles G. Norris' novel of marriage and divorce.

Critic Commends Leah Baird Picture

The Associated Exhibitors feature, "When the Devil Drives," with Leah Baird, occupied the place of honor in the motion picture section of the Chicago Sunday Tribune of June 18th. Mae Tinee, writing over her signature, devoted nearly a column to praise of the picture, and the entire review was set in double column, with a two-column head.

The review followed the successful week's run at the Bijou Dream Theatre. "Miss Baird's interpretation of a woman good at heart, who loves not wisely but too well, and Richard Tucker's portrayal of a friend in need," were regarded by this critic as particularly convincing, but the entire cast was described as notably capable. Paul Scardon's direction of the production was commended highly, and the story, which was written by Leah Baird herself, was considered powerful and convincing.

"Nanook of the North" Wins Much Praise

Almost immediately following the exceptionally successful premiere week of "Nanook of the North" at the Capitol Theatre, the popular human appeal of this screen epic of native life and adventure in the desolate frozen regions, declares Pathe, is established beyond any doubt by its remarkable reception by public and critics in a typical American city more than a thousand miles distant from the Eastern metropolis. This significant test of Pathe's novel special feature occurred at the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Texas, operated by The Southern Enterprises, Inc.

Pathe quotes the following telegram received from the Southern Enterprises, Inc.:

"Some picture. It has caused more favorable comment than any picture we have ever run."

"Man's Law and God's"

American Releasing Corp.—5 Reels

(Reviewed by Pearl Gaddis)

HERE'S a picture that's neither fish, flesh, nor good red herring. It isn't quite a drama, it is not a comedy, though there are spots that make you suspect that the author meant it as such—and there are times when it borders on the slapstick variety. Although it's probably a bit cruel to say so, there are moments that will strike the readers of the Satevepost as strongly reminiscent of the irresistible "Merton Gill." Still, it's fair entertainment, and it isn't offensive, and it introduces a delightful little leading woman—a sort of demi-tasse girl of real beauty, Ethel Shannon.

It's a tale of the Royal Northwest Mounted—of the great open spaces where men are men. In a confused sort of way, it holds up the dangers of "courtship-by-mail," along with the R. N. W. M. P. standards and ideals. There is a villain who foully murders an old woman for the sake of an inconspicuous cameo pin she wears, and a heroine who, set adrift in British Columbia, in a very decent looking hotel with plenty of nice-looking, athletically clad young women, respectable old ladies and every possible evidence of conventional protection about for the care of lost little girls, trusts herself innocently to the guidance of said villain, and departs for heaven knows where, supposedly to meet her father, with this man—a rank stranger to her. Finis Fox, who wrote and directed this, ought to realize that no girl as sophisticated and modern as Kitty Roshay would ever do such a foolish thing. Still, of such stunts are movies made, and we all swallow the improbabilities for the sake of being entertained.

The production is good. The photography is excellent. The outdoor locations are unusually effective, and the interior sets, all of which are dance-halls, miners' cabins, and the like, register with realism.

The Cast

Bruce McDonald.....Jack Livingstone
Mrs. McDonald, his mother.....Kate Anderson
Uncle Jimmy.....Bobby Mack
Kitty Roshay.....Ethel Shannon
"Cameo" Brooks.....George Cummings
Aunt Jenny.....Joy Winthrop
Helen De Rose.....Rosa Melville

Written and directed by Finis Fox. Produced by Finix Fox Productions. Released by American Releasing Corp.

The Story—Has to do with a member of the R.N.W.M.P., Bruce McDonald, whose mother is murdered by "Cameo" Brooks, a typical dance-hall villain. Uncle Jimmy, whose one affair of the heart was blasted forty years ago by a quarrel with his sweetheart, has a romantic idea of getting Bruce happily married, and so writes an ad to a matrimonial newspaper. Kitty Roshay, young, beautiful and wealthy, answers the ad for fun, and she and Uncle Jimmy correspond, the affair growing more and more ardent, until Kitty leaves for British Columbia, ostensibly to meet her father but in reality to mary her unknown correspondent. At the hotel, she learns her father has gone—and allows Cameo Brooks to drive her to Eagle's Pass. On the way, learning his intentions, she escapes from him. Bruce learns of the correspondence courtship conducted by Uncle Jimmy for him. Aunt Jenny comes looking for Kitty—and proves to be Uncle Jimmy's lost sweetheart. And the double romance ends the story.

Classifications—Serio-comedy of the R.N.W. M.P. Love-interest predominates.

Production Highlights—A really good fight between Bruce and Cameo Brooks. Fine photography. Wonderful "shots" of out-door stuff.

Exploitation Angles—All the usual northwestern stuff goes—and the middle-aged love-affair might offer some angles for comedy-exploitation.

Drawing Power—This may prove to be a fair hot-weather picture in that it is almost all out-door stuff, the story is light, and fairly amusing at times, and it makes no call upon the thinking powers. It will appeal to the neighborhood houses, and perhaps the down-town places where they like the Northwestern stuff, and are not averse to being "kidded" a bit about it.

"The Leech"

Pioneer—5 Reels

(Reviewed by Pearl Gaddis)

THIS picture shows signs of having been made quite some time ago, and, perhaps, tucked away on the shelf, until lately. The photography is very bad, the interior sets are not good, the exteriors are few, and uninteresting, the acting is mediocre, and, to cap it all, it is another of the "aftermath of war" pictures. There are just a few poorly photographed, badly-lighted "shots" of war, which is to the credit of the picture, but with all due respect, it's a picture that's best left alone.

The story is rambling, incoherent, going nowhere in particular, and telling nothing, rather badly. Claire Whitney has no opportunity whatever to look pretty, or act like a sane human being. She is billed rather largely in the advertising paper as "the darling of the studio" and "the adorable Claire," which may all be true—but the picture doesn't bear out the adjectives, in the least.

From the title, and the beginning of the picture, one would imagine it a serious, purposeful story—but after the first few scenes, one becomes so confused trying to decide what it's all about, that the purpose—if there is any—is completely misplaced.

It is possible that this picture might go in the smaller towns, or in the second-run, second-class down-town houses, as a "chaser" after vaudeville, or something of that sort. But it is not a picture that will stand booking in a first-class up-and-coming theatre.

The Cast

Dorothy Allen.....Claire Whitney
Ruth Allen.....Katheryn Leon
Mrs. Allen.....Charlotte Coer
Billy Anderson.....Alexander Hall
Teddy Alexander.....Ray Howard

Directed by Herbert Hancock. Story by Alfred Karper. Photographed by Alvin Ketchell. Distributed by Pioneer Film Corp.

The Story—Dying, Mrs. Anderson leaves her two boys to her old friend, Mrs. Allen, to raise. Mrs. Allen has two daughters, and the four children are raised together. Grown, the two boys become ball-players, enlisting in the army at the declaration of war, where one loses a leg, the other an arm, thus spoiling their future chances in baseball. In the vocational hospital, they learn trades to earn their living, despite their disabilities. Returning to Hicksville, Teddy becomes a hero, while Billy allows himself to get tangled up in the toils of a human leach, and, later, is held for a murder of which he is innocent. He is tried, convicted, sentenced to hang—and the morning of the execution comes—and then he awakes to find it all a dream. The dream has awakened him to the folly of his ways and he decides to brace up and be a man—for the sake of all concerned. The story ends with a double romance.

Classification—Love drama—with baseball, war, and pool-room gambling as side-issues.

Production Highlights—There aren't any.

Exploitation Angles—If you must play it Claire Whitney is your one-and only bet. Still it seems hardly fair to her followers to lure them into seeing it.

Drawing Power—Only the second-run houses where they aren't critical.

"Cloudburst"

Lee Pictures-S. R.—5 Reels

(Reviewed by Pearl Gaddis)

AFTER sitting through this picture twice it is still difficult to know what it is all about. Judging purely from the looks of it it is partly foreign-made, part of American manufacture, and the two don't go together any too well. It has been badly handled both in the story and the direction. It looks as if some one had decided that the picture must have plenty of thrills, so we begin with a rowing match, in which the hero, drugged by the villain, is overcome, falls into the water, and causes his team to lose the race then we have a bit of aviation with the hero rescued from the gutter, at the head of an Aviation School, and spurning the amorous advances of his employer's daughter; then, as a culmination of all this, we have a horse-race that is about the most genuine thrill in the whole picture.

It would have been vastly better if any one of these three sequences had been selected and worked out sanely, and logically, to the end, rather than trying to drag all three of them in. Any idea of realism has been sacrificed for the sake of the alleged "thrills" and punches.

The scenes in which the brave young hero spurns the hand of his employer's daughter and is wrathfully discharged by that lady approach the ridiculous. Such scenes are dangerous, to any but the most skilled hands—and even then, they are likely to explode

The Cast

Jerry Farrell.....Bombardier Billy Wells
Mark Carter
Kate Graham
Sybil Hamilton
John Graham
Turner, Carter's "Tool"

The Story—Jerry Farrell, a social favorite is ruined by a trick of Mark Carter's and he descends into the gutter, from which he is rescued by John Hamilton, a wealthy banker who establishes an Aviation School, and puts Jerry at its head. Kate Graham, a victim of Carter's, drifts into the scene and Jerry, attracted, engages her as his secretary. Synbi Hamilton is in love with Jerry, and, at her father's death, proposes to him, and is refused. Angry she discharges him and Kate. He returns to his own home, and finds that his father who has disowned him, is banking all his hopes on Cloudburst, a fine race-horse, in a coming race. Carter, betting against Cloudburst, in favor of his own horse tries to disqualify Cloudburst, but is caught in his own trap, ruined and thrown out, while Jerry is forgiven by his father, and free to marry Kate.

Classification—A love-story, with rowing aviation, and horse-racing as the thrills.

Production Highlights—The race-track stuff and the race itself. The rowing match has a moment or two that is interesting, and there are a few scenes at the Aerodrome which register

Exploitation Angles—The three sports mentioned—rowing, racing, aviation—offer you your best bets for exploitation.

Drawing Power—May go in the small second run houses, but is not strong enough for first-runs in the better houses.

"Human Hearts"

Universal-Jewel—7 Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

THERE has been a general call for a "cleanup" in the motion picture industry. Will Hays, Adolph Zukor, the Amerifederation of Women's Clubs have issued edicts which in effect call for cleaner, better, bigger pictures. Carl Laemmle answers this demand with "Human Hearts." Never has a more wholesome, sweeter, thrilling, entertaining story been told on the shadow stage. Here we get back to the "old home folks" those beloved characters which many of us had begun to fear had passed from the realm of screen lore. Here is real life, its joys, sorrows, despairs, its sunshine and shadows; life as it has undoubtedly been lived.

The big thing in this production is its story. It's full of "meat." Although seven full reels in length, one will be surprised at the way the plot holds from first to last scene. There's a host of dramatic situations, in fact enough for several five reelers of average type. King Baggott who directed this one, has put some sure fire heart throbs into it. We'll wager that only the hard-boiled, ivory topped will be able to hold back the tears when the old blind mother goes to the governor to plead for the release of her son from jail. The faith of this screen mother in her son is an inspiring thing. The village scenes are exceptionally appealing and here some real legitimate fun is introduced in the form of greased pig, horse shoe and other rural "champeenships." The storm scenes surrounding the murder of "Paw" Logan are realistic to the "nth" degree. We are given some good shots of a prison interior and a battle between some of the prisoners, while the climax, showing a stirring fistic encounter between the hero and the villain, leaves nothing to be desired in the way of thrills. The photography is unusually fine and the continuity excellent.

We would say that "Human Hearts," approaches 100 per cent. as a picture play. That also goes for its box office appeal. If this is an example of some of the pictures we may expect this fall—well, exhibitors better install larger safes in their houses to hold the receipts overnight.

The cast of "Human Hearts," is one of uniform excellence. So good are they all that one almost forgets that it's just acting after all. First honors go to House Peters, as Tom Logan, who fits the part like a glove. Stepping close on the star's heels for honors are Gertrude Claire who gives to the screen another classic bit of interpretation as the mother; Russell Simpson as "Paw" Logan, whose work as the stern, religious blacksmith of the Ozarks is convincing at all times; George Hackathorne as Jimmie Logan, the half witted brother and Edith Hallor as Barbara Kay who displays histrionic ability of a type that will surprise a lot of folks. Then there is our old friend Snitz Edwards who supplies the comedy relief, Ramsey Wallace in the role of Benton, the convict and little Gene Dawson as Little Barbara. It's a cast that sets a pace for others to follow.

The Cast

Tom Logan	House Peters
Paul Logan	Russell Simpson
"Maw" Logan	Gertrude Claire
Jimmie Logan	George Hackathorne
Ruth, his sister	Mary Philbin
Barbara Kay	Edith Hallor
Jay Benton	Ramsey Wallace
Governor	Emmett King
Warden	Wilton Taylor
Little Barbara	Gene Dawson
Ray Scheiber	Snitz Edwards

By Hal Reid. Directed by King Baggott. Scenario by Lucien Hubbard. Photographed by Victor Milner.

The Story—Barbara Kaye, an adventuress, learning that Tom Logan will inherit his father's land, under which there is a great coal field, plots to win him. She confides her plan to her former lover and companion in crime in prison. Tom's father sees through the scheme. He warns his son that he will be cut out of the will if he weds Barbara. Tom marries the woman. A baby is born. The father never speaks to his son. One evening while Tom is away to fire drill, the convict comes to take Barbara away. She has tired of farm life and its drudgery. The old man in trying to interrupt the convict is fatally wounded. Tom is sent to prison for the crime. He believes his wife shot his father. The wife, however, driven to desperation by the cruelty of her new lover, confesses. Tom is released. He goes for his wife, finds the convict in her presence. There is a terrific battle, in which the wife, trying to shield Tom, is killed. Tom returns to the old farm with his child to start life over.

Classification—Good old "Back Home" stuff. filled with heart throbs, thrills, comedy excellent character portrayals. A picture that meets the demand for cleaner, better films.

Production Highlights—The village scenes, the fall of the grandstand and the injury of the brother. The wedding. The storm and the murder of "Paw" Logan. The trial of Tom. The interiors and fight in prison. The scenes between the blind mother and the governor. The battle between Tom and Benton at the close. The comedy moments. The fine photography and natural settings. The work of the cast. The mother love theme.

Exploitation Angles—Look up all the superlatives in Webster's well known book and use them on this one. It will stand up under the strongest plugging. Tell your patrons that here is a super-production in the true sense of the word. Play up the fine cast, its mother love theme, its "old home" backgrounds and its abundance of thrills.

Drawing Power—Suitable for the finest houses in the land. Properly exploited it should be a clean-up. Go to it!

"Nine Seconds from Heaven"

Peerless Feature Producing Company—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

AN amusing novelty, if not altogether convincing. Part of the time, following a first reel that drags unmercifully, it would appear that the characters, shrouded in gruesome shadows, are not exactly compos mentis. Then, for a couple of reels, the spectator concludes that perhaps it is he that is crazy and NOT those on the screen, while a trick ending lifts the veil of mystery and there arrives the decision that it is really the scenarist who must answer "guilty," and go in quest of a padded cell.

Therefore, if your patrons are fond of material such as old time serials were made from and have sufficient patience to endure through five reels of unfathomable overdrawn situations, "Nine Seconds from Heaven" has a value. It compels a certain interest and might have been easier to take had the cast been stronger and the photography better, which would have been demanded by a more efficient director. Neither the screen nor press literature call him to task, in print. The picture has nothing to offer other than to entertain those who might find it entertaining. It is not a spectacle, nor a problem play. It aims at nothing, gets nowhere and is a conglomeration of incidents which happen because:

A young millionaire, who is too lazy to avoid being bored with doing nothing, wins a lot more money playing poker and then decides to commit suicide. His friends, which appear his enemies until the final explanation, plan to dissuade him. Whereupon happen sequence of baffling episodes. It isn't a question of whether the picture is, after all, good or bad. It is neutral. There are those who would acclaim it; others who would label it as silly. No one will take it seriously. It is likely the thinking person will express the opinion that seeing "Nine Seconds from Heaven" absorbed time that might have been spent to much greater advantage.

The Cast

John Ballard	Charles King
Doris	Louise Reinwood
Other characters	Not credited

Direction not credited. Sub-titles by Harry Chandlee. Art titles by Warren Newcombe and Capt. C. F. Mims. Producers, Peerless Producing Company.

The Story—Young millionaire, bored with life, decides upon suicide. Intruder, calling himself Wood, interrupts just as trigger is about to be snapped and guarantees to interest Ballard in living for fee of twenty thousand pounds, with five thousand retainer balance pending Ballard's admission life worth living. Finding letter of appeal in Wood's wallet, Ballard starts on search for beautiful girl, who has disappeared, his friend, Morton accompanying him. Their adventures incorporate gruesome and deathly experiments. In the end, it is explained that the two girls for whom Ballard and Morton risked their lives, are actresses. Nevertheless, the germ of affection has taken firm hold with result of double wedding.

Classification—Comedy-drama, locale London, England. Millionaire hero; mystery; action.

Production Highlights—Rescue of girl from slimy cellar, her apparent doom, when just about to make a successful escape. Trick mechanical effects.

Exploitation Angles—There is a possibility of tie-up with drug stores, since the plot involves a powerful chemical, guaranteed to promote unconsciousness an hour for each drop. And the trick furniture used in the millionaire's home might offer an angle with furniture dealers.

Drawing Power—Charles King is the only well known player. Would have to draw on strength of mystery, excitement, thrills.

"Jan of the Big Snows"

American Releasing Corp.—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Pearl Gaddis)

HERE'S another James Oliver Curwood yarn of the Big Snows, the theme of which is based on the law of the Northwest. "It is the Law of the Woods that the strong must protect the weak—that a man will suffer, starve, die before he takes what belongs to another man. Any man who does not live up to this code cannot live," and on this "Honor of the Big Snows," Mr. Curwood has fashioned his story.

On this law, the seventeen inhabitants of a far North trading post had built their lives. It was their law, their standard and religion. One of the men, Fred Cummings, returned from the States with his bride, and promptly each of the seventeen took a solemn oath to protect her. Among them is Jan Allaire, who has judged all women by those he has met in dance-halls and saloons of the North. To him, Nancy is like a being from another world—a golden-haired angel of beauty. Then comes the outsider in the person of Blanding, a representative of a huge fur company of New York, and, of course, he ignores the code of the Big Snows and makes advances to Nancy. On the day that Cummings visits his traps, Blanding plans to outwit the little wife—but with seventeen pairs of eyes watching him, he finds himself up against a proposition he hasn't expected. There is a fight in the snow which packs a tremendous thrill, because physical action between men who are well matched, when both seem to be heart and soul in the fight, is always more or less of a thrill.

Taken all in all, "Jan of the Big Snows" is a picture that will appeal to nine out of ten movie patrons, and is a feature worthy of runs in the best houses.

The cast here is a good one—Warner Richmond plays Jan, and Louise Prussing is a very appealing Nancy Cummings. There is a cute youngster in it, too—young Eastman Heywood—which seems an awfully big name for a little chap.

Charles Seay directed the picture, and they say that it has been officially approved by Mr. Curwood himself—which seems quite possible, in view of the picture itself.

The Cast

Jan Allaire	Warner Richmond
Nancy Cummings	Louise Prussing
Frederick Cummings	William Peavy
Freddie	Baby Eastman Heywood
Mukee	Frank Robbins
Blanding	Richard Neill

Written by James Oliver Curwood. Directed by Charles M. Seay. Released by American Releasing Corp.

The Story—Fred Cummings brings his young wife into an isolated Northern trading post where she becomes the idol of the seventeen inhabitants. Jan finds her more than a woman, and makes her "the angel of his dreams." Blanding, from New York, makes an attack on Nancy, and is thrashed by Jan, and driven from the country. Fred is killed in a fall from a cliff, and Nancy leaves the country with her baby—but leaves Jan radiant with the hope that, some day, maybe she will come back to him.

Classification—Straight-away Northern drama, with plenty of action, and heart-interest well developed.

Production Highlights—Photography, and direction both good. The fight in the snow is perhaps the most thrilling single moment in it. The scenes between Jan and Nancy when he deceives her about her husband's death, are well-handled.

Exploitation Angles—The most important thing of all is to let 'em know that it's a Curwood picture—his admirers will like it. Warner Richmond and Louise Prussing do good work, and deserve featuring in this. It's snow-stuff, hence good stuff for the hot-weather.

Drawing Power—Will appeal to the transient trade in down-town houses, but will also have an appeal in the neighborhood house.

"John Smith"

Selznick Pictures—6000 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

THIS is an improvement on previous O'Brien releases. There's more action in it and Gene does not take up so much space posing and in emotional close-ups as in former vehicles. In fact once the action starts in this one, it's intensely interesting. However, the production uses up three reels almost before things commence. The opening part of the picture dealing with the antics and reforming of the servants could be trimmed down. In five reels "John Smith" would be better from an action standpoint.

Members of the hoi-polloi, ultra rich or "400," will enjoy this picture. It gives them some good tips on how to keep servants. When so many other factors have failed to solve this question, it is interesting to have the screen come along and do it. The secret it seems consists in "pouring on the oil," i. e., flattery.

Crook plays are usually entertaining and this one is no exception. In truth it gives us a slightly different angle. This crook is good all through the picture, except the flash we get of him in Sing Sing in the opening scenes. Thereafter John Smith becomes a very good man and remains so in spite of a lot of circumstantial evidence that tries to make him otherwise.

The film contains some good character work. There's our old friend George W. Fawcett, who, of course, is always convincing. Then there's charming Mary Astor who is very easy to look at and who possesses real ability which some day may be used for bigger things. Ester Banks sure is true to form in the role of the irritable lady of the mansion. There is also William J. Ferguson, Tammany Young, Vivia Ogden, Frankie Mann and Walter Greene, all of whom contribute adequate support to the star, who will please his admirers in his appealing part.

There are some intelligent subtitles. The bazar scenes, especially the dance of "John Smith" and Mrs. Lang, are well worked out. The trial is realistic. There are a number of dramatic moments. Victor Heerman directed the picture in praiseworthy manner. The photography is fair.

The Cast

John Smith	Eugene O'Brien
Mary Mason	Mary Astor
Martin Lang	J. Barney Sherry
Haynes	George W. Fawcett
Mrs. Lang	Ester Banks
Butler	William J. Ferguson
Cook	Vivia Ogden
Maid	Frankie Mann
Doctor	Warren Cook
District Attorney	Walter Greene
Lawyer	H. Sedley
Gangster	Daniel Hayes
Chauffeur	Tammany Young
Crook	John Butler

By Victor Heerman. Scenario by Lewis Allen Browne. Directed by Victor Heerman.

The Story—Deals with the adventures of an ex-crook who, upon leaving prison, reforms, gets a good job and is assigned by his employer to put his mother's estate in shape. The mother, being exceptionally nervous, has made things decidedly unpleasant for her companion, Mary Mason, and the servants have got beyond control. "John Smith" arrives, restores harmony and helps get the old lady finance a bazar for charity where a goodly sum is raised. John is made treasurer and is given charge of the funds. Meanwhile a former prison crony of Smith's learns of the money in the home. When Smith is away he steals the coin and kills the chauffeur. Smith is accused of the whole business, but at an interesting trial he is acquitted, thanks to the work of a clever detective who makes the guilty man confess. John marries Mary.

Classification—Comedy drama telling a fairly interesting crook story. Much better than several recent O'Brien releases.

Production Highlights—A fine cast. Some clever comedy portrayals by some veteran players. The scenes showing the bazar. The robbery of the money in the Lang mansion. The third degree staged by the district attorney and the court room scenes. The logically developed story and its fine climax.

Exploitation Angles—The star. The cast. Might hook up with the title by inviting all the John Smiths in town to a special performance. You'll probably have a house full and create a lot of talk if you tip the newspapers off on the stunt. The crook reform theme. Play up the fine court room scenes.

Drawing Power—Should get by in second class, first run downtown houses and first class neighborhood theatres in the larger cities. It ought to go good in the towns. Star's popularity will help.

"Trimmed"

Universal—4583 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS is an episodic western which is mighty slender in plot material but manages to entertain after a fashion, due to the comedy scenes which are developed around a trick donkey. Hoot Gibson is seen in the opening reel as a hero returning from the war. He hops off a train to greet some pals and the villagers at the station are disappointed until he hoves in sight pacing a black bear. The "welcome home" scene is exaggerated, of course, for no band would be garbed like a circus outfit with a leader who is allowed to put over his ridiculous idea of comedy.

After this episode one is introduced to the crooked element of the town who groom Gibson for sheriff and elect him. Here again there is much overacting on the part of Otto Hoffman who, in all his screen experience, has never practised restraint. The slenderness of the story is noticeable when the plot at this point centers upon embarrassing the new sheriff by tipping him off about a certain moonshiner up in the hills. The crooked politicians are involved in bootlegging and Gibson and his boys give them battle. There is a shot showing the hero pursuing the moonshiner and falling with his horse through a bridge over a deep gorge. This scene is never explained. You wonder how Gibson escaped death. Yet he bobs up with the horse in front of his office. This is either hap-hazard direction or poor editing.

The story is filled with trifling details and the romantic interest is mostly subordinated to the action episodes. The sheriff engages in a man hunt. Which introduces the trick donkey. And the incident at this point is humorous enough to score a good laugh. The concluding scene presents a he-man fight with the murderer brought in by the donkey. And the crooked politicians are locked up in the same cell with their henchman—who is still astride the jack-ass, the reason being that the sheriff used leg-irons to capture him. The picture bears evidence of being shot as it went along—with very little attention paid to the script.

The Cast

Dick Garland.....Hoot Gibson
Alice Millard.....Patsy Ruth Miller
John Millard.....Alfred Hollingsworth
Young Bill Young.....Fred Kohler
Nebo Slayter.....Otto Hoffman
Judge Wm. Dandridge.....Dick Lareno
Lem Fyfer.....R. Hugh Sutherland

By Hapsburg Liebe. Scenario by A. F. Statter and Wallace Clifton. Directed by Harry Pollard. Photographed by Sol Polito. Produced by Universal.

The Story—Hero returns from war and gets reception from villagers. Political crooks run him for sheriff thinking they can handle him. He learns of their dishonest schemes and frustrates them. Engages in man hunt for one of their henchmen who has killed a moonshiner and the latter's accomplices confess to the crooked plans of the politicians. His honesty and heroism win the girl's love despite the hero's political defeat of her father.

Classification—Episodic story of westerner who returns from war a conquering hero, is elected to office of sheriff and cleans up the community. Incident mostly dominant.

Production Highlights—Scene when hero returns home chased by a bear. Gibson's fun with a trick donkey. The he-man fight.

Exploitation Angles—While this isn't up to the calibre of Gibson's previous efforts, it will afford fair entertainment. It needs some exploitation. Why not play up the political angle? Why not use one of your staff or a man hired for the occasion to ride a donkey through the principal streets announcing fact of picture's appearance at the theatre.

Drawing Power—Will be liked probably among second class down-town houses.

"Slim Shoulders"

Tilford-Hodkinson—6000 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WITH a new note sounded in crook characterization—with an optically pleasing background of charming exteriors—with Irene Castle demonstrating her athletic prowess as well as an ability to appreciate the values of her role—with all these qualities coupled with a smooth, progressive continuity, "Slim Shoulders" should make some money for Hodkinson. It is a society melodrama touching upon the familiar theme of a daughter determined to save her father from prison. You may say it is old stuff. But wait. The girl turns crook to aid her parent in his distress.

Another new development is having the real criminal killed long before the picture has reached the climax. Indeed, he dies by an accident in the third reel. If there is any fault it may be found in the rather farfetched idea of a girl becoming a crook. It is hard to swallow this. Yet it never becomes uninteresting. Again there are times when the action drags. However, Irene Castle is in there supplying a creditable rapidity of scenes due to her athletic capabilities. The director has framed his story against an appropriate background which takes in a Southern beach resort, and his interiors are always in good taste.

You think you are in for a moth-eaten plot when you look upon a girl selling herself to the highest bidder to save her father from suicide and jail. He is a forger and the scheming promoter has him in his power. Then something happens. Call it convenience that his death occurs so early. But what develops has its place in bringing forth something new—and something really suspenseful because of the crisp melodrama of the scenes. A burglar enters the girl's home, but her quick wit comes to the rescue of her jewels and before she is finished with him she has made him promise to accompany her to the promoter's house with the idea of stealing the incriminating papers.

The love interest arrives rather late, but it is not dragged in by the heels. The girl dressed up in man's clothes is caught in the nephew's house. He thinks her a crook and tries to reform her. And ends by falling in love with her. A well balanced cast gives a good rendition of the supporting roles. In all it is a picture which eclipses anything the star has appeared in for some time.

The Cast

John Clinton Warren.....Warren Cook
Count Guilo Morranni.....Mario Carrilo
Mrs. Warren.....Marie Burke

By Charles K. Harris. Scenario by Lawrence McCloskey. Directed by Alan Crosland. Photographed by George Falsey. Produced by Tilford Cinema Studios Prod. Released by Hodkinson.

The Story—Rich society girl agrees to marry a rich money lender upon condition that her father will not be sent to prison for forgery. On the eve of the wedding the promoter is killed in an accident and his nephew inherits the estate. Later a crook attempts to steal the girl's jewels, but she persuades him that she also belongs to the light-fingered gentry. Forming a friendship with him she gets him to rob the nephew's safe and steal the papers incriminating her father. The youth captures her, and tries to reform her. Eventually he learns the truth and happiness arrives for all concerned.

Classification—Society melodrama based upon frenzied finance with a crook characterization lending the punch.

Production Highlights—The atmosphere of story, the locations taking in many beautiful backgrounds. The star's appealing performance. Scene when burglar breaks in the house and is outwitted by girl. Scene when they go to rob the hero and are frustrated. The able direction and touch of originality of theme.

Exploitation Angles—This being a society drama it would be well to emphasize the backgrounds by a generous lobby display of stills. Feature the fact that Irene Castle indulges in considerable athletic work as well as providing enjoyment through her acting. Feature it as the best of star's recent efforts. You might dwell upon the touch of novelty of story detailing how society girl becomes a crook to save her father from prison.

Drawing Power—This should go well in all neighborhood houses and among folks who like society dramas. The original touches will please all spectators who are expecting the old situations.

"The Understudy"

R-C Pictures—4557 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

YOU may catalogue this picture as a romantic comedy, but long before it has reached its conclusion you have to admit that it has been built upon a slender thread. Treating of a stage-struck girl who is compromised into a marriage with a youth whose rich father's well developed sense of humor causes her to give up the stage and settle down in his home—it starts off pleasantly enough but fails to intrigue the imagination after the introductory footage. The characters are manipulated like so many marionettes and indulge in many entrances and exits.

They work hard—these players, but there is no material present to give them an opportunity. The cast comprises a small group of players, Otis Harlan lending his rotund physique and his sunny personality to the rich father. He is the only experienced farceur in the company—and when he fails to get over you are forced to admit that the story lacks substance.

The youth has been sent to the far West that he might forget a mercenary chorus girl. His father has sent for her so that he might reimburse her with a good check on the condition that she leave his son alone. Unable to be present she substitutes the stage-struck girl. And the latter wins the parent through her spirited manner. The boy comes home and is surprised to find the girl awaiting him. He takes it good-naturedly and the marriage ceremony is duly performed. In reaching this situation the director adds a deal of inconsequential detail which is as light and fluffy as a cream-puff. The climax reveals the financier's chauffeur kidnapping the couple and taking them to a mountain, retreat. A rain storm develops (the only pictorial touch in the feature) and some mild complications follow when the chorine arrives demanding explanations. She registers happiness when the comedy foil puts in an appearance and claims her.

Doris May indulges in some pretty poutings and the romantic touches may appeal to the sweet sentimentalists. Those spectators who delighted in her early offerings will be disappointed here if they are expecting something out of the ordinary. The settings are first rate. It strikes us that better stories could have been selected than this mild study. There isn't a funny scene.

The Cast

Mary Neil.....Doris May
Tom Manning.....Wallace MacDonald
Grace Lorimer.....Christine Mayo
Martha Manning.....Otis Harlan
Cathbert Vane.....Arthur Hoyt

By Ethel M. Hadden. Scenario by Beatrice Van. Directed by William A. Seiter. Photographed by Joseph Dubray. Released by R-C.

The Story—Treats of stage-struck girl who is persuaded by chorus girl to work with her. The chorine has ensnared a rich man's son and the parent sends for her to break up the affair. The younger girl goes in her place and tries to deceive the financier. He, taking it as a joke, is fascinated by her and makes her promise to become his son's wife. Later youth is sent for and they fall in love—there being plenty of surprises for all concerned.

Classification—Romantic comedy treating of stage-struck girl who marries rich man's son.

Production Highlights—Not many to speak of. The good atmosphere of picture.

Exploitation Angles—Play up that Doris May is getting pretty good vehicles, although this is below the calibre of her recent efforts. The title may be worked up in some effective exploitation along publicity lines. Use the teaser and sticker campaign. Stories telling that Elsie Ferguson, Pauline Frederick and dozens of others were formerly understudies will lend a personal touch to your copy.

Drawing Power—Will not go with sophisticated audiences. Best suited for neighborhood houses where feminine patronage is dominant.

"While Satan Sleeps"

Paramount—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE parties responsible for this story (we are speaking of the author and scenarist), have refurbished an old idea and a familiar characterization and by seeking for originality have lifted the picture into acceptable entertainment—even though it is a picture which relies considerably upon sentiment for appeal. Bill Hart used to interpret the fighting parson role and did a good job of it. But Bill never was a wolf in sheep's clothing if memory serves us rightly. Here Jack Holt disguises himself as a minister to evade the law and he presides over his flock in a mining town which carries the picturesque name of Panamint.

There is something doing most every minute from the time he passes his first blessing upon the flock. His ultimate regeneration is anticipated and cannot be accepted as novel. But the manner in which he asserts his personality calls for strict attention. If you don't follow the plot you are apt to miss some healthy action. The punch arrives when his former prison buddy comes to Panamint with the intention of cleaning up the town. But the pseudo-clergyman has already seen the light. It is brought to him by a saloon-keeper's daughter, not forgetting a dance-hall girl who starts him on the right path when she is dying from a gunshot wound.

The following scene is developed in masterly fashion. The director has caught the psychology of the saloon mob, temporarily sentimental through copious drinks. It lends quite a spiritual touch. And is followed by some incident entirely in keeping with human nature. There is a rousing fight which the minister engages in with the saloon-keeper. The director deserves praise for his admirable handling of the theme, particularly the regeneration of the criminal. No mock heroics are used. The praying crook makes a confession and his father, a bishop, comes to the scene. It looks pretty black for the youth. When things are set straight, he triumphs and makes good.

Considerable has been left to the imagination here. In all the story is adroit in building its interest. There isn't so much gun play as you anticipate. The impostor trifles with the lock on the church door by blowing it away. Jack Holt gives a convincing performance in the leading role. It is his fattest part and he makes the most from it. And Valentino won't have everything his own way with the feminine clientele after they have witnessed Jack in his ministerial robes playing his character with nonchalence and poise. The role is really actor proof, but that doesn't take anything away from Holt. It was his good fortune to have it delivered to him for interpretation.

The Cast

Phil	Jack Holt
Red Barton	Wade Boteler
Sunflower Sadie	Mabel Van Buren
Salome Deming	Fritzi Brunette
Bud Deming	Will R. Walling
Chuckawalla Bill	J. P. Lockney
Absolom Randall	Fred Huntly
Bones	Bobbie Mack
Mrs. Bones	Sylvia Ashton
Bishop	Herbert Standing

By Albert S. Le Vino, from novel by Peter B. Kyne. Directed by Joseph Henebery. Produced by Famous Players.

The Story—Burglar escapes from prison and goes to town called Panamint, disguised as minister. The town needs a clergyman and the crook, a son of a bishop, thinks he fills the bill. His intentions are to rob the bank after he has won the confidence of the churchgoers, but instead reforms himself and all the unruly element to boot. Eventually falls in love with saloon-keeper's daughter and makes a confession. After his pardon Panamint welcomes him with open arms.

Classification—Story of crook's redemption with hero finding truth disguised as minister. Plenty of heart interest and sentiment.

Production Highlights—Scene when burglar assumes ministerial disguise to escape the law. Scene when he compels denizens of saloon to find religion. The moment when tough girl dies and the crowd all sing the hymn. The moment when he resolves to go straight. The fight between the crook and saloon-keeper. Jack Holt's work and the performances of a well-balanced cast.

Exploitation Angles—This is a good heart interest story of crook's redemption. And should be exploited for its highlights. Telling them that it is an adaptation of popular story by Peter B. Kyne will help. The title is a winner. Use Jack Holt's popularity to get the feminine clientele.

Drawing Power—Will go well in most all communities. Will be liked by the crowd who want action and by the women looking for sentiment.

"Perils of the Yukon"

(Universal Serial)

HERE is a serial with an added appeal. It has all the drawing power identified with the ordinary serial, leaving the hero and heroine in desperate straights, "to be continued," thrills, suspense and death defying stunts, but it has something greater, a historical and informative value. Because of these it is convincing, and there should be no trouble in keeping patrons interested from week to week, sufficiently to attend your theatre, if they happen in on any of the first three chapters.

This serial, also, has been carefully directed, and given the same sort of treatment one might expect to find in a high class feature.

For instance, historic scenes depicting the conferences between President Andrew Johnson and the Russian ambassador, preliminary to the signing of the pact by which U. S. acquired the fabulously wealthy territories in 1867. It was then that Jack Merrill, Sr., played by William Desmond, is the prey of Ivan Petrof, who spirits Jack away in order that the Russian may force the hand of Olga, a beautiful girl vividly portrayed by Laura LaPlante. The Russian does not succeed in destroying the life of the hero, but does keep him in captivity long enough to mislead the coveted girl, so that after a lapse of many years, Miss LaPlante appears as the daughter of Olga, and is object of Jack Merrill, Jr's., affections. William Desmond, as a young and energetic American, then takes advantage of his opportunity to show off his athletic and physical superiority, enlisting as a seaman, in order to reach Alaska. The serial offers supreme exploitation angles, and the first three chapters are especially fitted to cover the months when one welcomes pictures laid in the frozen country. Because of its historic virtues, it can be tied up with schools, and guaranteed as entertaining as well as instructive to young folk. One of the best starts for a serial the writer has seen. An able cast, well directed and assembled in a way to create a permanent interest in the adventures of Jack Merrill, Jr., which serves as a splendid role for William Desmond. —LILLIAN GALE.

"Bucking Broadway"

(Christie-Educational—Two Reels)

Neal Burns appears to advantage in "Bucking Broadway," since it offers opportunity to stunt a bit, wear good clothes and make himself thoroughly likable in sincere admiration for a Broadway actress. He intends to marry the star of a musical show despite her father's protests. Father decides to win the girl from son, just to show son how fickle are women. But instead, he lets himself in for a heart-breaking romance, for he finds the girl good enough for father to marry, if not for son. Nevertheless, after many laughable situations and interesting expose of back stage happenings, the son's agility is too much for the older man. Since father has bought the show in which the girl appears, son threatens to take his wife out of the cast and lose father a fat sum of money unless he behaves. So father does —LILLIAN GALE.

Motion Picture Palaces of the City and the Country Theatre

Houses in the Small Towns Often Fail to Realize Their Natural Advantages

IN the past few months several motion picture theatres have opened claiming the distinction of representing a million dollars or more of investment. Yet the motion picture industry has not become wildly enthused over these monuments of grandeur which mark this industry with a distinction attained by no other. These and past remarkable achievements have been taken as a matter of course. Regardless of the momentary depression in this industry, these wonderful creations mark the advancement and secure hold the motion picture has and is further attaining in our present civilization.

It is not to be imagined for an instant that our modern palaces have been conceived thru the realization of some artistic genius. These palaces have been built to satisfy an actual demand by the modern theatre patrons.

The First Theatre

Centuries ago, when the play and stage were first conceived as a mode of entertainment, the audience held little thought for their own personal comfort. The theatre was an open affair exposing the auditorium to the sun or rain, and warmth or cold. Gradually, however, thru the following centuries, the patrons of the theatre became more exacting in their demands until we find today a most discriminating clientele exacting of our modern theatre the criterion in art and physical comfort.

The fulfillment of these demands by the modern motion picture palace results decidedly benefically for the entire industry. At the time when motion pictures were first commercialized and thruout their subsequent growth, a large percentage of the public looked upon this form of entertainment with disfavor. It must be admitted their views had justification. Today, however, the art of producing pictures has reached a stage of perfection, and the motion picture has been placed on a plane with the higher arts. No one element has played a greater part in the changing of public opinion than our modern theatre. These creations demand the admiration of all.

THE trend of the present time is to construct wonderful palaces in the large cities for the presentation of motion pictures. This policy has presented a decided problem to the theatre in the smaller towns. The problem has been magnified through the demands now made on the exhibitor by a discriminating public.

However, many exhibitors fail to realize that this problem confronts them or how to meet it.

The small town house has many advantages provided they are properly handled. To be a successful exhibitor today one must realize the importance of physical comfort to the public.

The theatre that best pleases the audience by appealing to their personal comforts is following the demand of the times.

The tendency toward the erection of houses in the larger cities representing enormous expenditures has been followed in a comparative degree in the construction of theatres in the smaller towns. Theatres are being constructed today in moderate and small sized towns which represent an astounding investment. This has been made necessary as well as practical thru the advancement of the art of motion pictures and a discriminating public.

Requirement of a Theatre

It requires more than an ordinary picture thrown on a plaster wall with attempted atmosphere created thru the jangle of a cheap piano to constitute a modern theatre. It is necessary as well as very possible to convince the people in a small town that they can find a most enjoyable and comfortable evening in the modern theatre. Nearly every person in the average town is a prospective patron. To secure a high percentage of attendance from the town people, it is necessary to provide a place of entertainment of such inviting physical features, as well as good pictures, that those who are accustomed to spend their evenings at home will find it worth the effort to attend.

Again there is another possible contender for the clientele of the theatre in small towns; the larger house in the city which is within convenient travelling distance.

There is always a certain percentage of any population who are regular motion picture attendants. Consider those who live in the small town within an hour or less journey of a city. The choice is theirs between the local theatre or the disagreeable trip to the city where they may attend the larger theatre. The decision of the choice depends, to a large degree, on the physical characteristics of the smaller house. Providing none of the physical features of our modern motion picture theatres are embodied in the local house, it is to be expected that a considerable portion of the desirable patronage will prefer the unpleasantries of the trip to the city and the city theatre.

Essential Elements

Not only does the old fashioned theatre lose patronage to the city but it also fails to attract those people whose demands are discriminating and yet prefer to remain at home rather than bother traveling to the city. The small modern theatre can convert this class of people into a regular clientele.

It is not expected nor is it necessary that the country town theatre should embody, in the same degree, the features of the modern motion picture palace. The elaborate elegance of detail followed thruout these large houses emphasizes the grandeur of the structure and is by no means an unimportant factor. Nevertheless, the actual comforts to the audience lie in the more essential physical features of a theatre.

For instance, take music and its part in lending the all important atmosphere to a picture. It is indisputable that the larger house here has an advantage. However, the modern theatre organ has, in many respects, somewhat equalized this advantage. Not only does the organ provide most excellent music but it replaces in many instances, the need of orchestras. Good music is an absolute necessity for the modern theatre.

Novel Broadway Demonstration of Organ Proves a Great Success

A STRIKING demonstration of the popularity of the modern theatre organ when operated by an artist was emphatically brought out at the Rialto theatre, Broadway, New York City.

The organist, C. Sharpe Minor, explained by means of slides shown on the screen and his accompaniment at the organ, the intricate action and sounds of the new instrument which has recently been installed. The performance was of exceptional merit and met with tremendous approval by the audience.

The following description has been received of this demonstration:

"The pipe organ, as a direct box office attraction, came into its own last week in New York, when, for the first time in the history of the amusement business on Broadway, an organist's name was displayed in electric lights. To C. Sharpe Minor, a product of the Pacific Coast, went this distinction when he opened a huge, new Wurlitzer Hope-Jones Unit Organ in the Rialto theatre at 42nd Street and Broadway. The Rialto, by the way, is the home of one of the finest orchestras in any motion picture theatre in America, under the personal direction of Mr. Hugo Riesenfeld.

"C. Sharpe Minor's solo number was a most happy choice, as he combined his wonderful musical talent with a number of slides which interpreted each movement he made at the console. In other words, it comprised a complete demonstration of the new instrument and made it possible for a layman to appreciate just what constitutes a modern pipe organ that is constructed for theatrical purposes. It is needless to say that Minor's appearance was a tremendous success, both from the viewpoint of the audience and management. He repeaterly, 'stopped the show' and was recalled time and again by the enthusiastic crowds at each performance. The Wurlitzer as installed in the Rialto is similar to the one this company has installed in Grauman's Los Angeles, California; Granada, San Francisco; The Tivoli, Chicago, and in seevral other of the largest theatres in the country.

"Combined in one gigantic unit, there are six complete organs or sections and over 200 individual instruments. The reeds and pipes of this mammoth organ vary in weight from an ounce to one-half ton. Miles upon miles of electric wiring were used in connecting the various sections. The complete organ is a magnificent orchestra, including every known orchestral instrument and many never heard in any orchestra. In volume of melody, the Wurlitzer excels an orchestra of one hundred men.

"All of the intricate mechanism of the instrument is under the instantaneous control of a single musician. The double touch system of manuals makes it possible for the operator, by the pressure of one finger, to bring out in solo any one instrument, while with the fingers of the same hand, he plays the melody parts on other instruments. Besides the three hundred stops and keys controlled by hand, there are eight foot pedals.

"The audiences listened to the recitals of the organ last week, with thrills at this wonderful range of expression. The slender thrill of the lute; the violin solo; the blaze of trumpets; the deafening roar of thunder—nothing seemed beyond its capacity. The violin solo with harp accompaniment was followed by a syncopated harmony of an ultra-modern jazz number and in each selection, the organ was perfect."

A similar demonstration might well be followed by theatres equipped with the modern organ.

Contract Awarded for Neu Theatre at Eustis, Florida

The contract for the erection of a new theatre at Eustis, Fla., was awarded to J. B. Southard of Orlando, Fla. The Mattocks-Wheeler Building Co., of Eustis, are the promotors of the building, which will cost, as stated by the building committee, approximately $60,000 for building and the ground.

The building will occupy the entire space of two lots, 58 feet front and extending back 12(feet. It will be constructed of face brick, with half inch colored mortar, raked joints. The front will be trimmed with stone.

The building was designed by Architect Alar J. MacDonough, of Eustis. Actual work has been started and the building will be completed by the first of November.

The theatre is designed for motion pictures but there will be a fully equipped stage, 18 by 40 feet, so that any standard theatrical attraction can be played. The equipment will include two motion picture projectors, seating capacity of about 550, a pipe organ and an up-to-the minute heating and ventilating system.

This house will make a welcome addition to the many beautiful theatres in this state.

Certain Colored Lights Used in Theatres Suggest Coolness and Comfort

ON a hot day there is probably no greater drawing feature for a theatre than the assurance to its patrons of a cool comfortable atmosphere. Ventilation is the only means of actually securing this comfort, but there are various other effects that may be employed to give the general surroundings a pschological cooling effect.

The color of lights used thruout the house has a strong suggestive quality. For instance, an amber or red light is associated with warmth, while blue or blue green light gives a sensation of coolness.

This principle of the effect of colored light may well be employed in the motion picture theatres during the hot summer months. By changing the lights in the lobby to a pale blue or blue green (this may be accomplished by simply dipping the blubs once or twice in a light blue or blue green solution) the general effect will be of coolness. This serves to suggest the coolness which may be found within the theatres. The lights under the marques should be treated in the same manner.

The "Daylight" Mazda lamps for use in signs will give a suggestion of the desired effect and may be used to good advantage for the evterior sign illumination.

It may not be found advisable to follow the particular plan of colored illumination thruout the auditorium as here we must first consider the harmony of the interior. The auditorium may be brightened up by using summer chair coverings.

These views tell how C. Sharpe Minor, the talented artist of the Wurlitzer Organ Co., was received on Broadway at the Rialto theatre where he gave a special number explaining the fine points of the new Wurlitzer organ. This act was received with the greatest of enthusiasm by the audien

CAPTURE the FLOATING AUDIENCE

Grey Matt glazed Terra Cotta — EDGAR P. MADORIE, Architect

THE 12TH STREET THEATRE
KANSAS CITY, MO.

"ABOUT 35% of the average movie audience may be termed the 'floating' element. The capture of this group often spells the difference between 'breaking even' and making profits."

How to capture that 35%? A hard question to answer. But this is certain: if there are two or more theatres near one another, all showing bills of equal merit, the theatre that offers the most inviting front will consistently draw the largest crowds.

Whether your frontage is large or small, it pays to capitalize into attractiveness every square foot of it. The 12th Street Theatre has small frontage, yet it succeeds in looking extremely inviting. Architecturally, it centers attention around the entrance doorway. The rest of the facade is made interesting by a discriminating use of ornament on plain surface—beautifully modeled bas-reliefs at the top, and rich-looking decorative mouldings—all in Terra Cotta.

This material is ideal for facing theatre buildings. It permits the use of fine design at moderate cost—and offers unlimited scope in form and color. And when Terra Cotta is used, maintenance cost is negligible. Highly fire-resistant and weather-proof—Terra Cotta is easily kept clean and bright by an occasional washing with soap and water.

If you are interested in theatre buildings, write us for information. Tell us your problems and needs. We believe we can be of service to you. Address National Terra Cotta Society, 19 West 44th St., New York, N. Y.

Properties of the Component Elements for Projection

Continuation of Motion Picture Projection with Mazda Lamps
by H. H. Madgsick and C. E. Egler, National Lamp Works of G. E. Co.

The Aperture

The standard aperture is a rectangular opening 0.6795 inches high and 0.906 inches wide. The aperture plate across which the film moves must, for best efficiency, be located where as much as possible of the converging beam from the condensing lens will pass through the opening and at the same time be uniformly distributed over this area. In practice a light leam larger in diameter than the diagonal of the aperture opening must be used since the light near the edge of the beam is of somewhat lower intensity and shows color due to chromatic aberration from the condensing lens, and this part, constituting from 40 to 65 per cent, must therefore be intercepted. If the aperture plate were located at position a of Fig. 21 an unnecessary amount of the light would be wasted; if placed in position b, the unevenness of distribution in the beam would become noticeable. In position c the aperture is correctly placed for the condensing lens shown; the light passing through it is uniform throughout the open area; only enough is intercepted to leave the projected beam practically uniform in cross section.

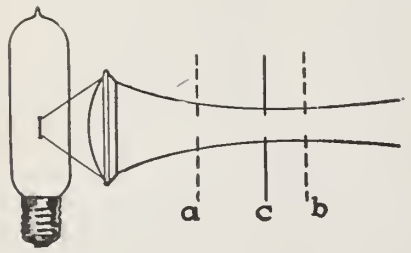

Fig. 21—Placing the Aperture—At position a considerable light is wasted; at b the beam is not uniform and a small part of the light is wasted; position c is the correct one for the prismatic condenser.

Projection Objective Lens

From Fig. 3 it will be seen that the projection lens consists of three elements, one of which is a cemented doublet. By combining suitable optical glasses in elements of proper thickness, surface curvature, and spacing, the units can be given the following characteristics:

1 Freedom from sperical aberration, providing good definition;

2 Flatness of field, which produces equally sharp images over the entire screen picture;

3 Freedom from chromatic aberration, eliminating colored fringes on the screen image;

4 Large diameter and free aperture, giving high screen illumination.

The commercial objective lenses are obtainable in two sizes, the "quarter" size or No. 1 lens of about 1½-inch free aperture, and the "half size" or No. 2 lens of about 2½-inch free aperture. The first three characteristics are most easily obtained in the No. 1 lenses and the longer focal lengths. But as shown in Fig. 21, the beam diverges rapidly after passing through the aperture, and to obtain maximum screen illumination the lens of larger diameter should be used. The curves of Fig. 22 show the relative amounts of light projected to the screen with objectives of the two sizes and the prismatic condenser of $4\frac{7}{16}$-inch diameter. In general, twice as much light is projected with the larger lens. Until recently the No. 2 lenses were not obtainable with the better corrections of the small size, but with increased skill in design and manufacture high grade No. 2 lenses have recently been made available by the principle manufacturers and these have essentially the same characteristics as the best No. 1 lenses. These higher grade No. 2 projection lenses should be used for projection with MAZDA lamps. They are at present obtainable for all focal lengths from 5¾ inches upward. These higher grade objectives are also available in the No. 1 sizes for the shorter focal lengths.

The focal length of the objective lens determines the picture size for a given throw (page 206). With the width of the picture selected, the focal length of the required objective lens is given with sufficient accuracy for practically all purposes by the approximate formula:

The throw is measured from the center of the objective to the screen; the formula applies for an aperture of standard size.

applies for an aperture of standard siz

For a given throw, increase in the picture area decreases the average screen illumination but not proportionately since a larger amount of light is transmitted by projection lenses of shorter focal length. The data of Fig. 24, page 20 show the effect of change in picture width on the screen illumination for a 30-ampere

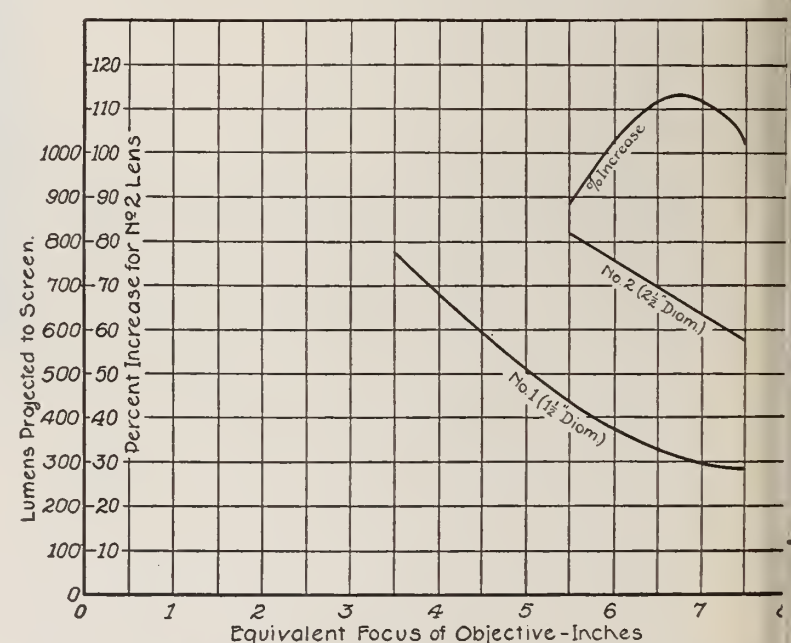

Fig. 23—Light flux projected to screen when the 900-Watt, 30-Amper Mazda lamp and the prismatic condenser are used with the No. 1 and No. projection lenses of various focal lengths. Beam unobstructed by rotar shutter or film.

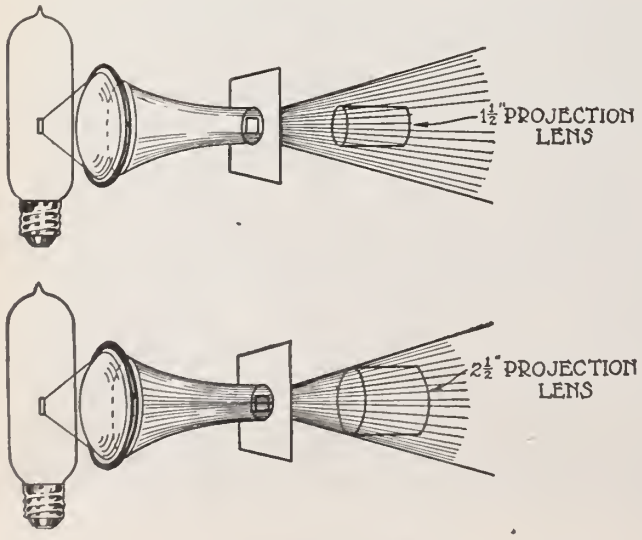

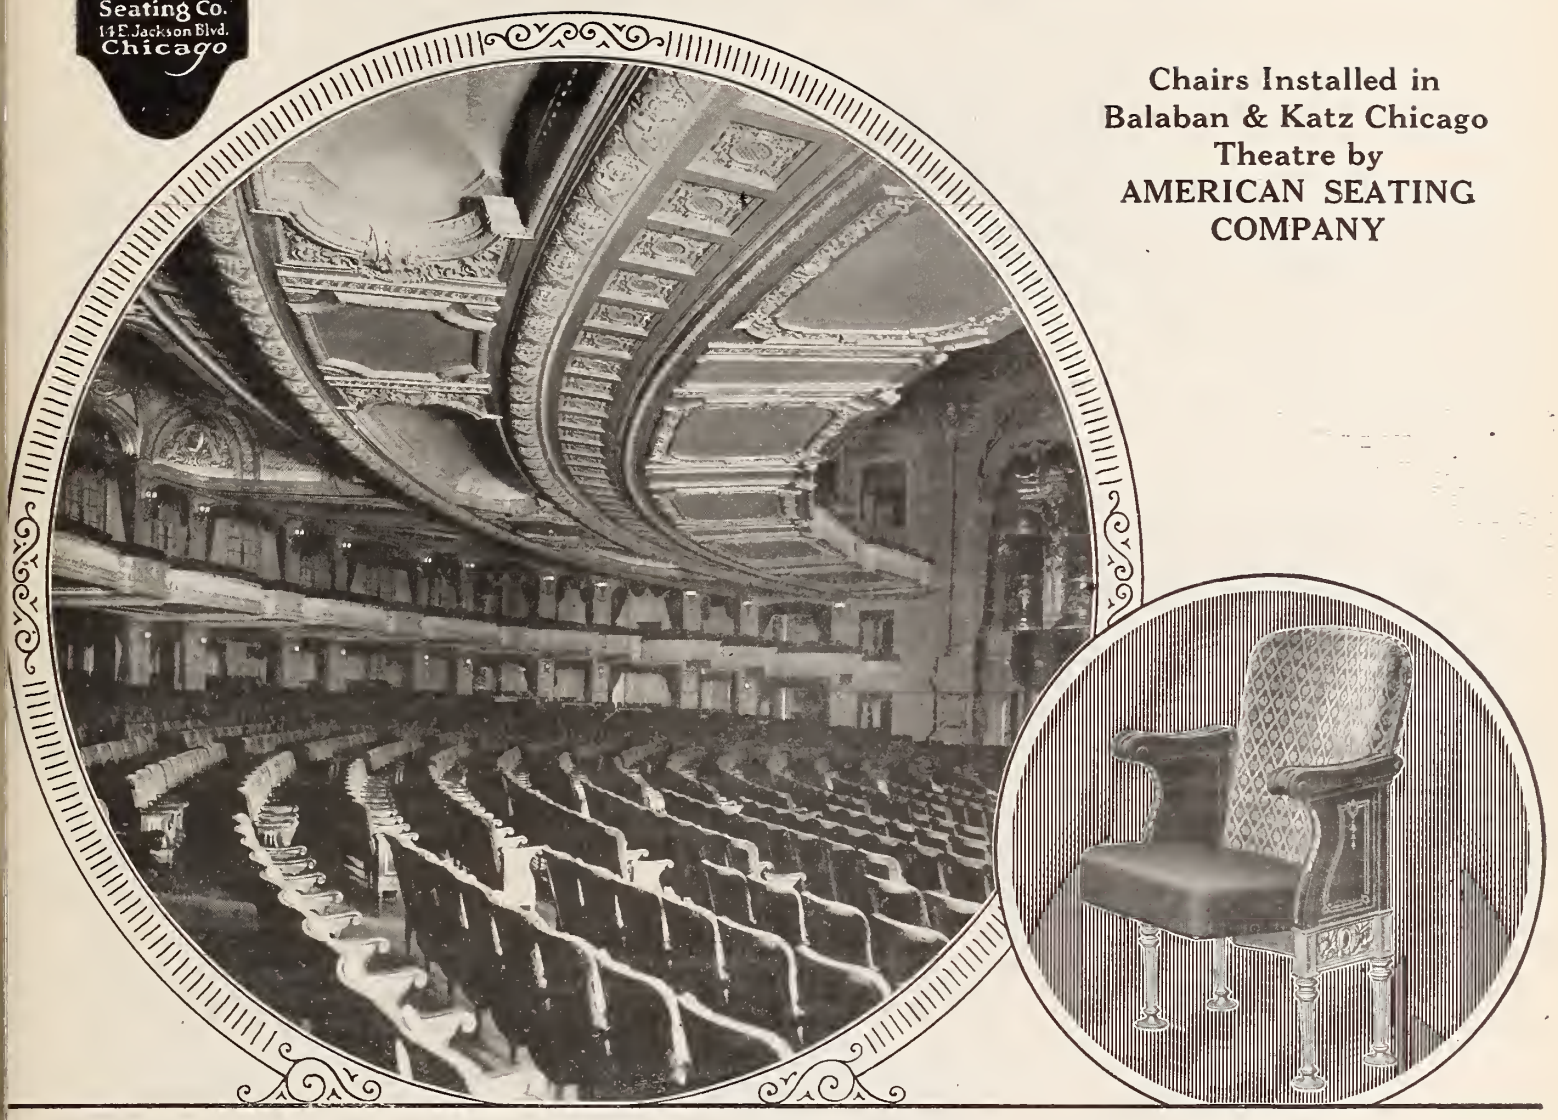

Fig. 22—The cross-section of the beam at the position of the objective lens is so large that the No. 2 objective lens utilizes twice as much light as does the No. 1 lens.

Theatre Chairs by American Seating Co. 14 E. Jackson Blvd. Chicago

Chairs Installed in Balaban & Katz Chicago Theatre by AMERICAN SEATING COMPANY

In America's Foremost Theatres

THE public-wise manager knows that an audience comfortably seated is half won. He knows, too, that with the other elements of attraction more or less evenly balanced, the more comfortable seats of one theatre will easily swing the decision of "where to go" in its favor. Seating that was tolerated five and ten years ago is endured under protest now or altogether avoided.

Our Theatre Engineering Seating Department will be glad to consult with any theatre owner or manager on new installations or renewal of old. We can show you without obligation how your theatre can "cheat old age" and revive its youth for further years of service.

Mazda lamp and the prismatic condensing lens.

To determine a desirable size of picture it is necessary to give considerable to maximum and minimum limitations determined by the angle which the picture subtends at the eyes of those in the front seats and those farthest away from the screen. Observations indicate that under usual conditions the picture appears too small if its width subtends an angle of less than about nine degrees, and, on the other hand, it cannot be viewed with comfort by those at the front of the house if it subtends an angle of more than about 45 degrees.

Dear Sir:

Inclosed find a small portion of end of one reel of a feature. There were about 60 punch holes in all. I see there are a great improvement in the films I get now and hope it will keep up. I have two Simplex and have the Mazda lamps 900 watt and Gold King screen. Am getting good projection. I did have some trouble with my light on the screen. It had yellow streaks in it at first but if you will put a piece of white card in front of the aperture plate but first close lamphouse dowser and then turn the reflector to one side and adjust lamp filament on aperture plate to right size, and then turn reflector filament close to aperture plate, and turn it up to the same size as the filament of the lamp and turn and spot it on the aperture plate between the filament of the lamp, with a little work you will get a good clear light on the screen. Hope this will help some one.

Will close now and ask you to please send me some labels.

Very truly yours,
C. R. Yockstick, No. 1599,
Jewel Theatre,
Harleyville, Okla.

Dear Sir:

My projection is coming along just fine. I am still trying to live up to the pledge of the N. A. M. L. My ideal of the best way to keep good film is not to curse the film exchange but to look after a film as if you were going to have to run it always. I am quite sure that no exchange is going to tear up a print. It means money to them. I don't think that they want any projection to tear film up. If any projectionist does not take care of a print they soon find it out and send him an old one if they have it.

I find a lot of film with bad patches. So many projectionists do not know how to make a patch and do not care. Some projectionists in making a patch cut off about two or three feet of film. I do not see their idea. I don't think they do either. I have received several prints where they put at least thirty different kind of punch holes. I do not know what the idea is unless it is to show their pretty punches or they just want to punch something. Some do not use punches or do not patch them so they take a pair of scissors and cut a big hole. What is the use of all this? Why not take good care of the print you have.

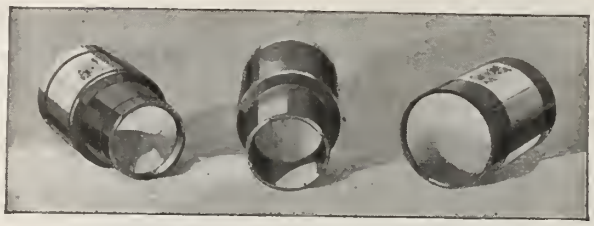

Fig. 25—Typical high grade No. 2 objective lenses

I am sending 25c. for a new membership button.

Faithfully,

Dear Sir:

Dear Editor:

I am sending in my application for membership to the N. A. M. L. also 25c. in in stamps for membership button.

Sincerely,
William Snapp,
Princess Theatre,
St. Charles, Va.

Dear Sir:

Received the supply of labels some time ago and I'm really ashamed of myself for not writing and thanking you for them. But I have been busy and thought I would wait until my button came then thank you for them both.

The button came okay and I cannot tell you how pleased I am with it. I think they are "swell."

I know of an operator who does not know a lamphouse from a re-wind who is holding down a job that a projectionist should have. He is a disgrace to the motion picture industry because he puts on "rotten" shows and does not want to do better.

Do you suppose it would help any for me to write you about this fellow and have you publish the letter? I either want to see him "sent back to the farm" and the position given to a good projectionist who has not a job, or get him interested in his work. I hate to knock, but if I do, don't you think it will help? Shall I write?

Hoping to hear from you soon, I remain,
Truly,
Clyde Edmondson, No. 1126,

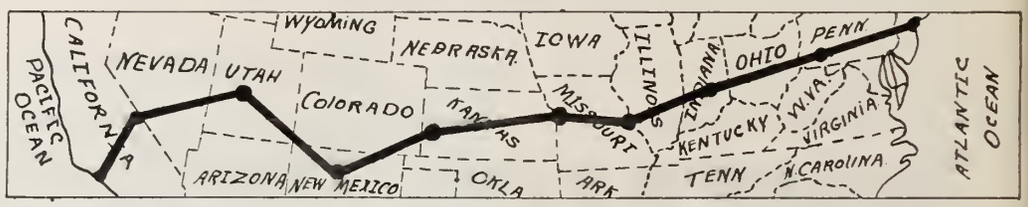
Simple Mechanical Movement For Lobby Attracts Attention and Business

NOTHING attracts more attention in a lobby than a mechanical or moving display.

Frank H. Burns of the Beacham theatre used a lobby display which embodied considerable action and which brought him, he claims, twenty-five per cent. additional business. This display was tied up with the picture "Across the Continent." Mr. Burns in a letter to Mr. Stewart of the Southern Enterprises, Inc., says:

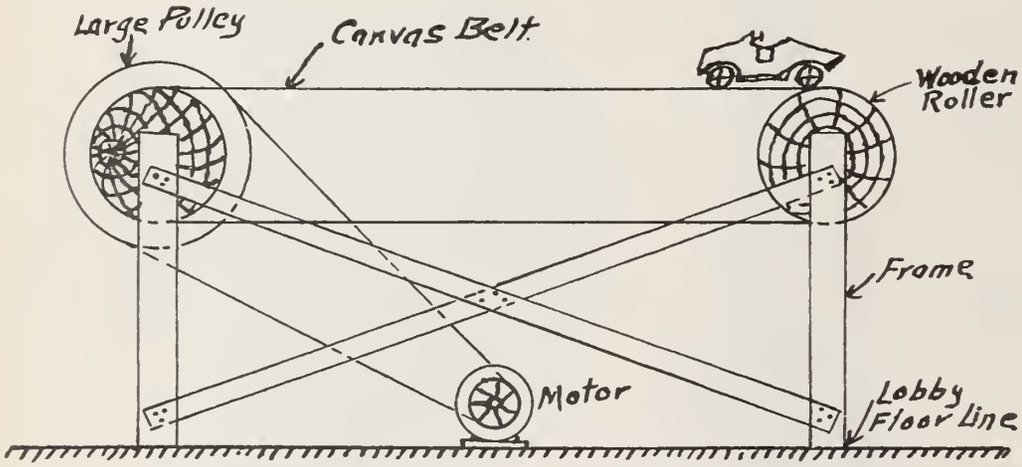
"Used your suggestion for the mechanical lobby display and it is a knockout. Built this "Continent Race Track" about eight feet long and had small car on top. Used small motor to make "continent" move under car. This made wheels of car turn and the whole effect was great. Caused more attention than anything we have done for a long time. . . ."

The actual construction of this apparatus is very simple and the cost of material is negligible.



The following instructions should enable anyone to construct this display for "Across the Continent."

Make a canvas belt about 2½' wide x 14' long. On this have painted a strip of the map of the United States, with a wide road laid out from coast to coast. Fasten the two ends of the belt together and place it over two wooden rollers held the proper distance apart in a wooden framework. Connect by pulley and belt to a small motor.



Place a toy racing automobile on the belt, wired to make it stand still. Then when the motor is turned on the belt will revolve under the auto and the "continent" will pass across before the eyes.

The change points, shown on the accompanying sketch, but not named are: Jersey City, N. J. (start); Pittsburg, Pa.; Indianapolis, Ind.; St. Louis, Mo.; Kansas City, Mo.; Fort Dodge, Kan.; Albuquerque, N. M.; Salt Lake City, Utah; Needles, Cal.; Los Angeles, Cal. (finish).

These cities are the change points for the race in the picture and should be named on your belt map. Also the different states should be colored to make this map as realistic as possible.

The design used on the canvas belt for the mechanical device used in giving action to the lobby display of "Across the Continent"

Cumberland's New Vaudeville and Picture Theatre

Mr. Thomas Burke, manager of the Liberty theatre, announces that Cumberland, Md., is to have a new vaudeville and motion picture theatre. It is Mr. Burke's intention to make a first class picture and vaudeville theatres out of a house originally intended to be a nickel theatre and toward this end $20,000 will be spent on repairs and remodeling on the Liberty theatre. The stage will be 25x50 and will be able to handle six vaudeville acts in addition to first run pictures. Work will be started on the new theatre in a few days, the construction of which is in the hands of local contractors.—Barnett.

Theatre Being Built in St. James, Manitoba

Construction is well under way on the new moving picture theatre in the St. James district of Manitoba, Canada. The new house will seat 1,000 and cost in the neighborhood of $50,000, it is announced. The building has a frontage of 48 feet and a depth of 125 feet and will include stores on each side of the entrance, with a billiard parlor in the basement. Theatre is on Portage avenue near Parkview street.

Marberry to Open New Theatre

The new theatre, recently erected by Ivy Marberry, in Vienna, Ill., opend on July 1st. The theatre seats 300 persons, and will show three nights weekly.

Cincinnati Motion Picture Co. Predicts Good Business

The Cincinnati Motion Picture Company, the wide-awake supply concern in the queen city, states that the supply business is on the up grade in the territory, and some live advertising which they have been running in the daily press has stimulated their business materially.

They report the sale of six Motiograph De Luxe Projectors during the week ending June 17th, and have a number of live prospects on hand.

"Put ginger into your salesmen and advertising behind them and they will get the business," according to managers of the Cincinnati concern.

Construction Delayed Six Months Started

After a delay of more than six months, actual construction work has begun on the finest and largest theatre in the state of Kansas, the new Electric theatre, Kansas City, Kans., which will cost $520,000. It will replace the present Electric theatre, which now is being razed and will be operated by the same company, the Brubel Brothers of Kansas City, Kans., who operate theatres in Springfield. Mo., St. Joseph, Mo., Joplin, Mo.

The new building will have a seating capacity of 2,500 and will have every modern device and improvement in theatre construction. When completed, the building will be 90x125 feet, with a balcony carrying clear across. The new house, located at 646 Minnesota avenue, will have an outside frontage on Minnesota avenue, 75 feet wide and 54 feet in height.—True.

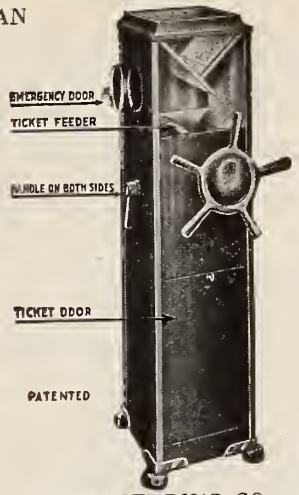
Theatre Managers Know

That the curtain and draperies of the house exercise a mighty influence on box office receipts.

Harmony of design, consideration of colors, and appropriate materials decide whether a house is elegant or tawdry.

Our long experience and individual study of each theatre enable us to make draperies pay for themselves plus a profit.



Architects, owners and managers are invited to get our ideas—and we manufacture especially good equipment, too.

City and Country Theatres

The essential features necessary to make a theatre comfortable and attractive are relatively few in number, but each is an "essential."

The presentation of the picture on the screen is of first importance. An exhibitor may show the very best of pictures and find that all the effectiveness of the acting, fineness of the art of photography with its attention to details, depth and high lights are lost to his audience through defects in the projection. There is no reason for any theatre having anything but the criterion in projection. In fact, ordinary business judgment should point to the absolute necessity of this feature.

To thoroughly enjoy a picture the patrons must feel themselves transferred into the very action and atmosphere of the plot. Yet many exhibitors defeat this very end through imperfections in the presentation of the picture on the screen. Imagine the distraction caused through an unsteady picture or misframes and patches in the film. Again, low or uneven illumination produces a constant strain on the audience in the effort to follow the action and detail.

No one element has a greater determining factor in the success of a theatre than perfection in the screening of the picture. It is in this most important element of the modern theatre that the small theatre can well equal the city palace.

How many exhibitors today are missing the splendid opportunity of both pleasing their regular patrons and of attracting an additional summer clientele thru ventilation? Ventilation is a modern improvement that is rapidly being adopted by a large percentage of the theatres. Imagine the exploitation possibilities for a theatre that has an interior cooler by ten or fifteen degrees than the prevailing temperature.

The character of the seats also is of great importance. A seat should be so designed that the patron is rested rather than fatigued after the performance.

Then there are such additional touches as colored lighting, interior decoration, lobby displays and the like which add very materially to the general atmosphere of the theatre.

It is the physical comfort of the patron that is of the utmost importance to the small town theatre today. At all houses may be shown within a short range of time, the same picture. It therefore rests with the exhibitor to cultivate his clientele through their physical comfort. By modernizing his theatre, the exhibitor is not only attracting greater patronage but is also helping the motion picture industry in general.

Reviews of Latest Short Subject Releases

" Ten Seconds "

(Century-Universal—Two Reels)

THIS comedy starring Lee Moran centers around a prize fight in a ring with rubber ropes. The gags and incidents are of a familiar brand. You follow the comedian as he attracts a crowd through a bottle on his hip. A rubber tube is used to syphon a good part of the liquor which they discover in the end to be brass polish. When this is over with, Lee removes his high hat and puts on his chauffeur's cap and polishes the car. This follows with his driving the girl to a party, the chief attraction of which is a prize fight.

The champion is peculiarly affected with a weakness. He is unable to control his emotions whenever "Where is my Wandering Boy Tonight?" is played on the violin. The girl, however, goads Lee into entering the combat. He is saved by the bell on several occasions and the rubber ropes rescue him from biting the sawdust. It is when the familiar song is played on the fiddle that Lee exerts just enough strength to score a knockout. It is fair entertainment and provides a hearty laugh here and there.—LAURENCE REID.

" Punch the Clock "

(Hal Roach Comedy—One Reel)

THIS comedy introduces Snub Pollard as the funmaker. He is asleep in front of the factory for fear of being late when the whistle blows in the morning. His rest is interrupted by the cop on the beat and then his troubles start. The plot switches to a jealous husband who finding a letter addressed to his wife goes out gunning for the romantic correspondent. The frightened masher encounters Snub and the latter takes to his heels. This brings out the familiar chase.

Most of the comedy is humorous because of the situations which link Pollard and the wife together. He is unable to escape her presence. Eventually he reaches his office and discovers a sign tacked on the door, which reads: "Closed on Account of Jesse James' Birthday." The piece is conventional but speeds through with sufficient gags.—LAURENCE REID.

Urban Movie Chat No. 22

(Hodkinson—Two Reels)

THE fair sex will be particularly interested in seeing Nina Wilcox Putnam illustrate how she reduced fifty pounds in seven months and assert that any woman can do the same by avoiding certain foods. This offers a glimpse of the celebrated author in her own home. The balance of the short subject is composed of views depicting how hemp, from Manila, is received upon the Pacific coast, following its travels until it becomes full-fledged rope. "Magnolia Gardens," a spot in South Carolina which has been the subject of much admiration, is shown in picturesque detail. Then a skip to the extreme of showing a rooster perched upon the topmost peak of a Fifth avenue building, looking over the sights of Fifth avenue, New York, concluding with views showing different animals in captivity, with their characteristics accurately described by the camera, informs, in interesting fashion, things it is well to know about the reindeer, the tapir, polar bear, Peninsula bear, sea lion and otter.—LILLIAN GALE.

" Sherlock Holmes " Series

(Educational—Two Reels)

A PROMISING series of detective stories from the renowned pen of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, produced by the Stoll Picture Productions, London, England.

First, "The Devil's Foot." Sherlock Holmes is enjoying much needed vacation accompanied by his friend and physician, Dr. Watson. Reminded that he is due for a rest Holmes agrees, but is thrown immediately upon trail of crime.

Watson, intent upon securing directions to nearest inn, goes to door of country house. No response to his knocking. Glancing in at the window he sees three forms, rigid as if petrified, calls Holmes and they find a triple murder, but with no signs of violence. Sherlock loses no time and in the end discovers a poisonous gas has been used to exterminate the three, whose death would leave enormous properties to scapegoat brother. The "Devil's Foot" gas is a discovery of a tropical explorer, who accidentally explained its mysterious effect to the murderer. Sherlock drives the man whose cleverness might have outwitted any ordinary detective, to justice with his usual professional ease and deductive powers.

Second, "The Dying Detective" is also a poison case, one wherein Sherlock assumes being the victim of inoculation from germs carrying fatal contagion in order to ensnare murderous chemist responsible for death of a Scotland Yards man who was inoculated and died from the dread fever. In clever ways and means identified with Holmes, instigator of crime is taken in clever trap.

Both are interesting, well acted, mystifying and evidence good direction. Not too well photographed. Long enough to complete each story, short enough to remain interesting.—LILLIAN GALE.

Real Giant for "Jack and the Beanstalk"

ALF GOULDING, Baby Peggy's director has started production on the second fairy tale to be made by Century: "Jack and the Beanstalk." The first of the series was "Little Red Riding Hood." An entire series of well known fairy tales will be produced according to Julius Stern, president of the company.

Goulding, after several experiments with faked giants made up his mind that only the real thing would suit him and he found a successful applicant no further off than in Venice, California. Jack Erlich is his name, and though only fifteen years old he weighs 237 pounds and stands 7 feet 3 inches. Young Erlich came from Houston, Texas and sought the climate of Southern California for his health.

Atlantic Enterprises Strengthens Staff

Following out a policy of aligning with it only those men whose records warrant a belief in their power to produce results, Atlantic Enterprises Inc., announced this week that Richard A. Schwartz, one of the most widely known and successful amusement men in the East, had joined the company in the capacity of General Manager.

Schwartz brings to Atlantic Enterprises Inc., the fruits of twelve years experience in the promotion and direction of amusement enterprises.

Hardly less interesting is the announcement that Don Bartlett has been signed as Production Editor. Bartlett, like so many other successful authors, scenarists and editors, is a former newspaper man having been for years a Washington correspondent. Joining Paramount in 1915 as publicity manager of the New York exchange, he was subsequently Advertising Manager of Triangle, Assistant Scenario Editor of the Triangle Yonkers studio, Assistant Publicity Manager of Vitagraph, for three years Production Editor of Vitagraph, and Assistant Production Editor of Famous Players-Lasky.

Phil Goldstone Plans Lively Season

Phil Goldstone's plans for the coming season are the most extensive of his career.

Following his special production "Deserted at the Altar," he will produce three more specials along the same lines, selecting the best stories and titles on the market that offer exploitation possibilities for the independent showmen.

Goldstone has just completed his first series of six Richard Talmadge productions and for the coming season will make eight special pictures with this coming star.

Franklyn Farnum will shortly complete his first series of six comedy, dramas, westerns, for his seassons market. These pictures are a new type of westerns.

"Padded Serial Must Go"

Chapter Plays Will Be Produced in Their Natural Length, Says Laemmle

FOR the first time in the history of serial production, chapter-plays will be filmed without recourse to padding, says Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. Serials will be of no prescribed length—if there is only material enough for six episodes, they will be produced in six episodes; if there is sufficient "meat" in the script for ten or twelve episodes, they will be produced in those lengths. Next season's chapter-plays will be adapted from better scenarios, and will star actors and actresses with feature following, he promises.

"I firmly believe the sooner we make our chapter-plays conform strictly to the unpadded value of the story," he said prior to his departure for Europe last week, "the better it will be for the industry in general. Years and years of experiment have convinced the magazines that serial stories running longer than six installments are not wanted. They lose their force. The same is true of chapter-plays.

"No story I have ever read was strong enough to carry for eighteen weeks—magazines no longer even attempt to find such material. One of our greatest difficulties has been to find good serial stories. We have rejected hundreds of submitted scenarios because they did not contain material enough for eighteen episodes. Making short serials will revolutionize the production end of the industry and throw open a brand new field for serial material to us. In future, when we make a serial," he continued, "we shall eliminate all 'hokum.' Chapter-plays will be made in their natural length, and if we film a classic in episode form, it will be the original story without one foot of extraneous material injected to obtain footage."

Lloyd Heads Pathe Releases

Comedian in "A Jazzed Honeymoon" Tops Strong Collection of Short Subjects

PATHE Exchange, Inc., announces that the strong collection of short subject features and the one serial episode scheduled for release the week of July 9th will be headed by the latest Harold Lloyd reissued one-reel comedy, "A Jazzed Honeymoon," and the new Pathe Playlet, "The Little Diplomat," starring Baby Marie Osborne. "A Jazzed Honeymoon," shows Lloyd as the groom, Bebe Daniels as the bride, and "Snub" Pollard as the purser aboard a steamship.

"The Little Diplomat" presents Baby Marie Osborne in a Pathe Playlet re-edited to three reels from a former feature success. A splendid cast is seen supporting the little star, including Betty Compson, Sunshine Sammy, Jack Connolly, William Welsh, Lydia Knott, Murdock MacQarrie, Maida Vale and Al MacQuarrie.

"In the Doorway of Death" is the title of the fourteenth episode of the new Pathe serial, "Go-Get-'Em Hutch," produced by George B. Seitz, starring Charles Hutchinson.

"The Stone Age" is the latest Hal Roach comedy featuring "Snub" Pollard, with Marie Mosquini and Noah Young playing prominent roles.

"Crime in a Big City" is the current animated cartoon of the series of "Aesop's Film Fables," produced by Fables Pictures, Inc., and created for the screen by Cartoonist Paul Terry.

"The Late Lamented" is the title of the current Rolin Comedy.

Big First National Productions Under Way

THE Talmadge sisters and John M. Stahl are busy on new subjects for release by First National. "The Voice from the Minaret," adapted from the novel by Robert Hichens, is Norma Talmadge's new subject Upon the completion of "The Voice from the Minaret," Miss Talmadge will start a screen version of "The Garden of Allah." Frank Lloyd will direct both these pictures.

"East Is West" is the new production now under way on the Coast in which Constance Talmadge is presented as the star in the role of Ming Toy. Edward Burns plays the part of Billy Benson. Fred Warren appears as Lo Sang Kee, and Frank Lanning as Hop Toy. Warner Oland has the part of Charlie Young. Nigel Barrie, Nick de Riux and Jim Wang are also in the cast.

John M. Stahl has begun work on "The Dangerous Age" an original story by Frances Irene Reels, author of "The Woman in His House," and "The Song of Life." Ruth Clifford has been engaged for one of the leading roles. J. G. Hawks and Bess Meredyth collaborated with Mr. Stahl on the scenario.

Paul Parrott Comedies Proving Popular

There is increasing evidence, reports Pathe, that exhibitors find Hal Roach Comedies profitably enriched by the one-reelers featuring Paul Parrott. This loose-legged comedian has already been distinguished in newspaper reviews as the "Doodlewit of screen comedy." That Paul Parrott lives up to this grotesque title better than ever in late Pathe releases each successive screening has shown for itself.

Harry Carey Starts His Second F. B. O. Film

Harry Carey's second production for release through the Film Booking Offices of America, is now in production. It will be a screen version of Eugene Manlove Rhodes' story "Good Men and True" which several years ago was one of the most popular books of the season.

Carey will be supported in this picture by Vola Vale, Tully Marshall, Noah Beery, Charles Le Moyne, Billy Elmer, Helen Davidge and Helen Gilmore. Val Paul is again Mr. Carey's director.

Serials Fatten Receipts Is Pathe Claim

That serial thrills are box office fatteners of timely hot weather value, is again indicated, says Pathe, in a recent marked increase in the volume of bookings of all of its current chapter plays.

"White Eagle," with Ruth Roland, and "Go-Get-'Em Hutch," starring Charles Hutchison, are named as productions especially favored as business-getters for the dog days.

THE undersigned is one of the "back bones" of the industry, one of those small town exhibitors, in a village of 7000 located in the "Territory of Chicago." His one claim to "Movie Fame" is that he took over the old "Opera House" (and an up-stairs one at that), called it a Theatre, put on Paramount Pictures practically exclusively and disproved the claim that "people won't go up-stairs to movies." They will go "up-stairs" to see Paramount Pictures. But it is not the wonderful entertainment value of the productions nor the great national advertising campaigns conducted by Paramount that has made him a user of Paramount Pictures.

He decided that the claim that "honesty was the best policy" could be made use of in the Motion Picture "profession" as well as any other endeavor if applied to the exhibitor as well as the producer. He therefore took his problems to his Paramount Exchange, put all his cards on the table and secured from that organization a spirit of co-operation that he had been told was unknown in motion pictures.

He has found that the Paramount organization is a big institution and wants to do things in a big way. That it is ready at all times to meet the exhibitors more than half way. That Paramount realizes that your problems are its problems, and thoroughly appreciates that the "small town exhibitor is the back bone of the industry."

And so I would say that the principal reason (of the many others I might name) that causes me to run Paramount Pictures, is the kind, conscientious and considerate treatment (the true spirit of co-operation) I have always received from the Paramount organization.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) ANDRES L. HAINLINE.

A Sam Wood Production

A Paramount Picture

SEE glorious Gloria as a cabaret dancer in Paris.

She plays the part of a beautiful girl who is trying to be the breadwinner of the family.

Along comes a clever press agent who advertises her charms so successfully that she becomes the favorite dancer of all Paris.

Temptations trail her all the time—the door of many a gilded cage is held open to her dainty dancing form but she keeps her heart pure for the great love she knows will come.

Those who saw Sam Wood's "Beyond the Rocks," "The Great Moment" and "Her Husband's Trademark," have an inkling of the thrills afforded by his spectacular handling of "Her Gilded Cage."

The brilliant Paramount cast includes David Powell, Harrison Ford, Walter Hiers, Ann Cornwall and Charles Stevenson.

For authentic scenes of the back-stage life of a popular dancer this is the best picture ever made.

FINELY staged and admirably acted is "A Woman of No Importance," and admirers of Oscar Wilde's dramatic art should find it especially interesting. Plays adapted to the screen invariably develop peculiar problems in treatment of theme and character and there is always the fear that a drama written brilliantly will appear at a great disadvantage when reproduced silently, with only sub-titles to suggest the sparkle of the original production.

FAY COMPTON

Yet "A Woman of No Importance" seems not to suffer in its transition to the screen. Fay Compton, blonde and stately, carries off the difficult title role with an artistry that is wholly convincing. Milton Rosmer as Lord Illingworth is true to the traditional type of British nobleman. Ward McCallister, in the part of the illegitimate son, does very well indeed, and there is a suggestion of resemblance about him to the noble Lord that is altogether artful.

The surrounding programme bristles with entertaining numbers.

Christie Comedies entertain the whole family

CHRISTIE COMEDIES lead the field in appeal to every member of the family — for several good reasons.

There's a real idea behind every one of them — better ideas than in many five-reel serious dramas.

Their humor is that of human interest — their situations are ones almost everyone has been in himself.

Their direction is supervised by a man of common sense and ability. Al Christie has no superior anywhere among motion picture directors.

They are produced with the same care and attention that formerly was given only to feature-length productions.

They present artists of character and ability. Besides Bobby Vernon, Neal Burns, Dorothy Devore and Viora Daniel, there are Vera Steadman, Earl Rodney, Charlotte Stevens and many others in the supporting casts.

Not only Christie Comedies, but ALL motion pictures bearing the Educational Pictures trade-mark are leaders of their type.

SHADOWS

What do they mean? Primitive man, fearing them mightily, never understood. In modern times shadows, flickering on a lighted screen, have been made to provide four-fifths of all the theatre entertainment of mankind, in the form of motion pictures. Still there is much misunderstanding in regard to shadows, and especially their uses as photoplays and the effective distribution of the same. Many film companies are groping and experimenting, burdened by enormous overheads which absorb too much of the gross and leave too little for producers and exhibitors. Not so with—

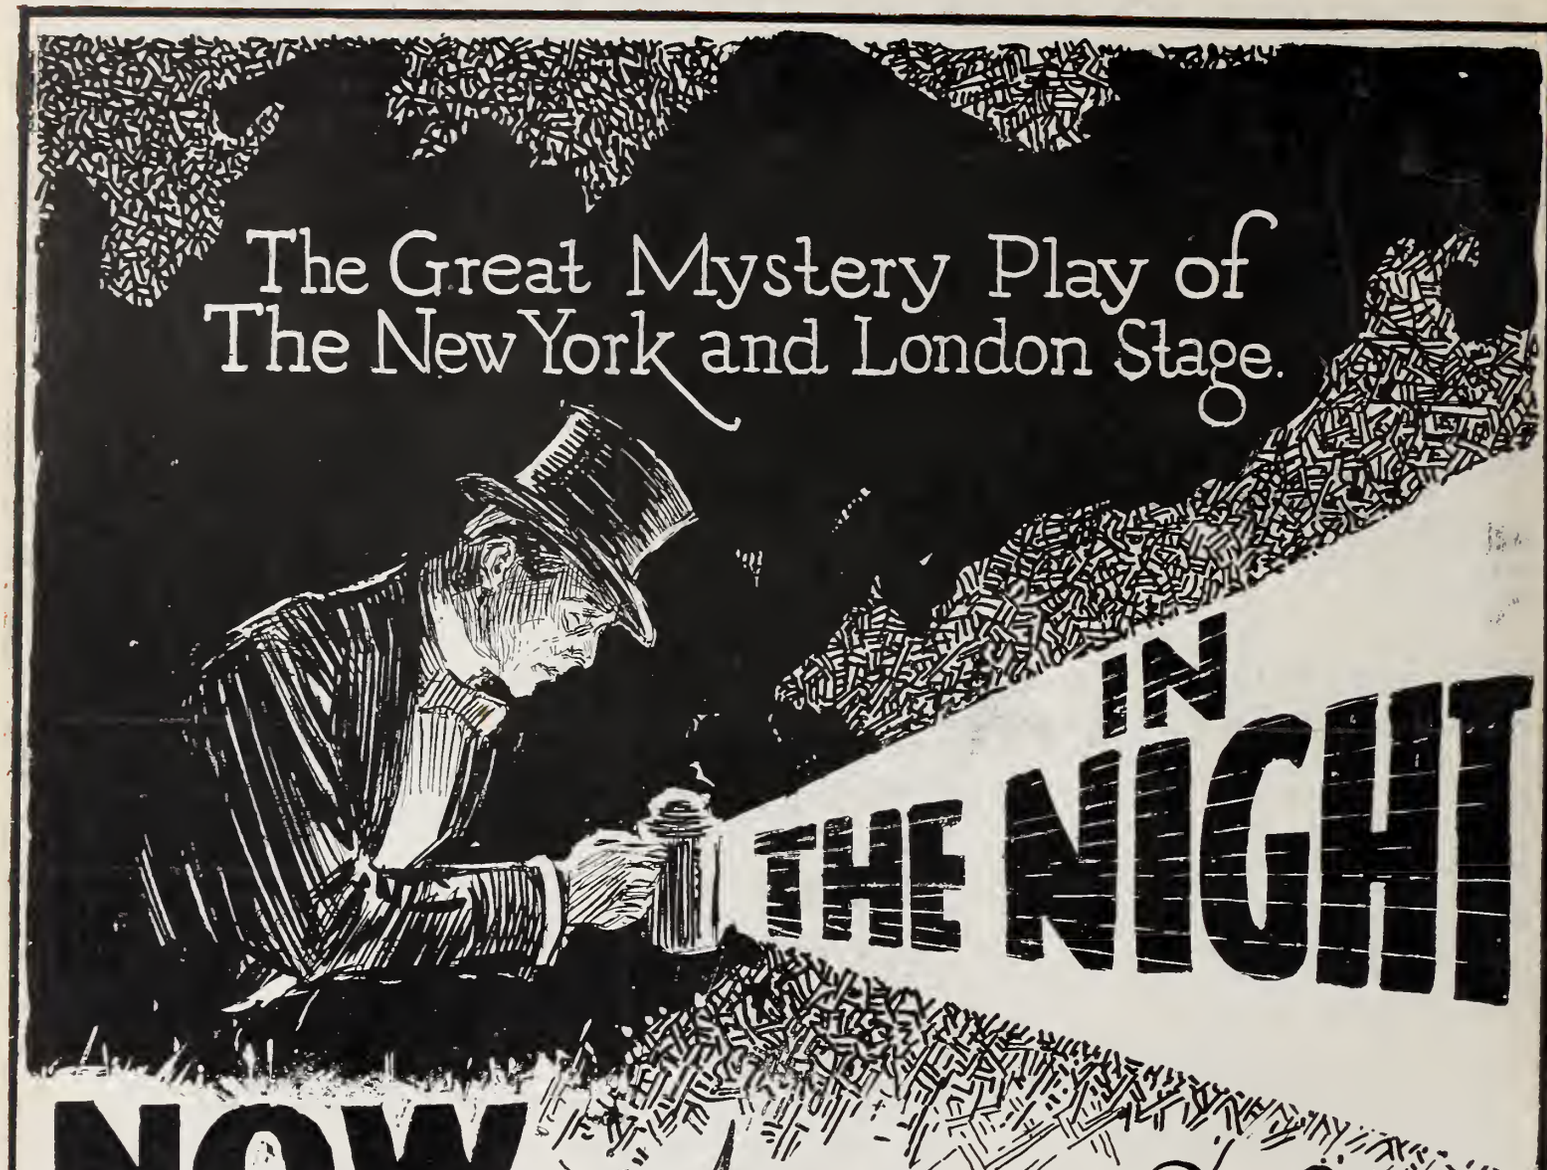
You ask for big novels that have had widespread circulation produced in a big way. Here is one. You ask for casts of big names that carry weight with the public. Read the roster of personalities in this picture. You ask for big direction. We say to you that no one in a year has done anything bigger than this.

Frothingham has made very little fuss about himself since he entered production but he has created a standard of honest entertainment values that makes the big name producing "cheaters" appear ridiculous. His values are greater than their reputations.

To our way of thinking—which exhibitors are likely to confirm — this is the most spectacular picture in a production sense that has been released in a year.



Sloman, the director, has accomplished perfection and bigness of optical appeal in a way to make every technical expert in the industry jealous of his achievement.

You have never seen seven reels into which have been crowded stronger dramatic situations, more suspense, swifter action—or a story with a more overwhelming climax than "Shattered Idols."

Motion Picture News

Play Dates Are Pay Dates

THIS is a very vital matter.

Jumping right to the conclusion, we don't hesitate to say that high rentals today are very largely the result of the all around waste due to the fact that a play doesn't mean a pay date.

There is no use of arguing over who is to blame—exhibitor or distributor—for this uneconomic situation.

It's about fifty-fifty.

The exhibitor overloads himself with play dates—pictures he cannot possibly play—to keep his competitor from getting them.

The distributor overloads the exhibitor with play dates—pictures he should not expect the exhibitor to play—by tieing a lot of poor product fast to a desirable picture.

And there are other selfish motives—fifty-fifty, either side.

But like all abuses between the interdependent and interrelated branches of a business—any business—the suffering is also fifty-fifty. A loss borne by one branch is bound to be partly unloaded in another.

So we have high rentals—for one thing.

Let us see how it works.

A prominent distributor, somewhat new to the vagaries of this branch of the business, closed his fall season last year with $9,000,000 in bookings. He ordered accessories to suit—a very considerable bill alone, and made the other necessary outlay.

$9,000,000 represented his play dates. At the end of the season his pay dates totalled $6,000,000.

You can readily estimate the loss in wasted accessories and other wasted preparation made for this false business.

But this wasn't the main loss. The main loss was the wasted selling effort—the high salary cost of a national force of field salesmen who had to go over and over the same tracks, selling already sold goods over and over again.

And again, this doesn't become the distributor's loss. Certainly not. The exhibitor has to pay for the waste, too—his share—in raised rentals.

Why not? Is there any other way out of it?

Some other concrete instances:

One theatre in New York state, at a point where competition is keen, has two hundred features booked ahead, enough for several years.

Recently, in New York City, a house showing cheap pictures, opened up near a theatre well-known for its good, if later run, offerings. The new house is paying quadrupled prices for good pictures and shelving them just to hurt the other theatre.

Is any better evidence needed—from these two of thousands of cases—of the basic cause of higher rentals?

The play date business has soared skyward.

Pay dates alone will bring the balloon back to earth—and must.

No business can stand such a volume of gas—not even the picture business.

It's a mighty big and basic problem.

It's overselling and overbuying. And we are not so sure that such a thing can be quickly and generally settled. It is, in turn based on other economic evils.

But Mr. Hays and the exhibitor committees have located the thing and got it by the horns. They know, too, that it is a two-sided evil, as this editorial seeks to point out; and that is the first step.

The whole industry is vitally interested. It's a big matter. If it's ever solved most of our troubles and misunderstandings will automatically disappear.

HAYS—ISMS

Ours is a Cause—with a Capital C
Mobilize for Better Pictures
Criticize Constructively

Condemn the Bad Productions
Get Close to Us—Aid Us
Help the Exhibitor

THE sincerity of Will Hays in his determination that pictures must and will be better and cleaner, cannot be questioned after the addresses made by him before the General Federation of Women's Clubs at Chautauqua, New York, June 28th, and the National Educational Association at Boston, July 6th. Hays urged delegates to both conventions to positively refuse their patronage to bad pictures.

Not only did he request them as individuals to fail to patronize the picture house that showed bad pictures, but he also urged that they enlist the support of all affiliated bodies and that they set the wheels of their entire organizations against the bad pictures and for the better and cleaner picture movement. In this way, Hays said, political censorship could not only be avoided, but there would be absolutely no need for it.

Before the women's clubs Hays said:

"Exactly how can this General Federation help?

"Every individual can help by her own words and actions very easily and materially by refusing as I have said to patronize bad pictures. You can have your affiliated clubs do the same thing.

"Get close to the situation; constructively criticize and earnestly help in everything. Mobilize all the good women of the country for better films; get Better Film Committees under the auspices of your division of films, in every community where there is any kind of organization affiliated with the General Federation. Definitely plan by any method you can devise, to get the good pictures supported and the bad pictures condemned. Get in touch and cooperate with the exhibitors in your communities."

Hays pointed out to the women delegates the objective of the new efforts the industry was making in the association which he heads. He said the association had two great objectives; establishing and maintaining the highest possible moral and artistic standards in motion picture production, and developing the educational as well as the entertainment value and the general usefulness of the motion picture.

Along these lines Hays said:

"I tell you, a movement earnestly and sincerely inaugurated and carried on to establish and maintain the highest possible moral and artistic standards of motion picture production and to develop the educational as well as the entertainment value of the general usefulness of the motion picture is a Cause—a Cause with a capital C. And again, I say, I am going to give all I have to this Cause. It commands the sympathetic help and cooperation of you and every well wisher for better things in this nation, and I know full well that that help will come from you in your own effective way, just as fast as you are acquainted with our purposes and we prove our deserts."

In concluding his address before the women delegates Hays said:

"Again I say, those who are responsible for this industry do not minimize their responsibility, nor would they shirk it. With your help and the help of the thinking people in this country in supporting the good pictures, we can accomplish the purposes of this association. And I promise you that this agency for the distribution of information and thought, this agency for the amusement of the millions and for the inevitable inculcation of standards in taste, in art and conduct—I promise that it shall endeavor honestly and earnestly to measure up to its great responsibilities.

"I would repeat: that the motion picture industry accepts the challenge in the demand of the American people for a higher quality of art and interest in its entertainment."

The same plea for cooperation was made by Hays before the National Educational Association at Boston. He urged each of the delegates to use every influence in their power and he urged the body as an association to patronize only the good pictures. He pointed out the advantage of the motion picture as an educator and read reports from professors in different parts of America as to the value of the motion picture as a visual educator.

Regarding the latter Hays said:

"Professor Jos. J. Weber of the University of Kansas during 1920 conducted a series of tests in Public School No. 62, New York City. The following is a result of one of his experiments:

Four hundred and eighty-five pupils in Public School 62 were examined as to their knowledge of Geography. When the experiment began, all pupils had an average knowledge of about 31.8 units. This standing they had gained from the knowledge of their Geography prior to the experiment. From this starting point (31.8 points) the four hundred and eighty-five pupils who were taught orally without the aid of correlated motion picture film improved to 45.5 points, a gain of 13.7. The same pupils with the aid of the film shown after the oral lesson, improved to 49.9 points, a gain of 18.1. The same pupils with the aid of the motion picture film before the lesson improved to 52.7 points, a gain of 20.9. Professor Weber says, "statistically these points are reliable to the point of practical certainty."

In urging the cooperation of the National Educational Association in the use of pictures along educational lines and in pledging that association the cooperation of the industry, Hays said:

"The motion picture industry will cooperate with the National Educational Association fully to that end. On behalf of our organization I offer to your association all of our facilities to aid in your experimentation. There is already a great demand for pedagogic pictures. I propose that we jointly study that demand and that we jointly find ways and means of supplying it. Let a committee be appointed of this association made up of the very best talent within your ranks; let them meet with the great producers of the country and find ways to use our facilities. We ask you to aid us and to let us aid you in the study of the whole problem of the use of the motion picture as a direct pedagogic instrument. Let us together find the means of making pedagogic pictures which are scientifically, psychologically and pedagogically sound. Not only can we take care of the demand which now obtains but the great demand which is imminent and which will certainly come, must be met, and met by the producers with a supply that measures up to the ideas of the educators of the country."

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

A TOTAL of 908 features is promised for the 1922-23 season by national and state right distributors, according to a survey announced last week by the Film Daily.

National distributors promise 510 which is less by 102 than were released by this group last year. The state right group promise 395 for this year as against actual releases of only 128 last year.

These figures are compiled from a questionnaire sent out; and we judge a number of them to be more promises than actualities. In its total the report is apt to mislead.

We note that the national distributors have in each instance curtailed their previous years releases to a pronounced degree. The number promised by the old line companies is as already announced by them and in accord with mature plans. Also the leading state right distributors have, nearly all, reduced their output this year.

308 feature releases are promised by nineteen state right distributors who, according to the record, did not release any last year. It remains to be seen how many of these promised pictures will be released.

This looks like a big state rights year—bigger perhaps than any previous one but its release policy like that of the national distributors will certainly be fewer and better pictures.

Up to March 1st, 1922 and for the six months previous, the feature release schedule was at the rate of 626 a year. The number will be somewhat less this year in our estimation.

WILLIAM A. BRADY, who is at Bad Kissengen, Germany, at present, returns to London July 11th and will arrive in New York July 26th.

He sends MOTION PICTURE NEWS an interesting article on the German film world taken from the Berlin American. The article states that the Russia-Germany treaty signed during the Genoa conference will probably secure for Germany the vast Russian market unless the American producer is able to compete with the large advantages Germany has already secured. The German trade organs are calling upon the German manufactjures to make strenuous efforts to cinch this big prize. The Russian producer, Mr. Ermolieff, is now in Berlin, where he will probably collaborate with the second greatest German concern—the National Film A. G.

A ten-story building is contemplated in the heart of the Berlin film quarter on the grounds of a big park belonging to Prince Henry of Prussia. Film offices of Berlin will be concentrated in this new building; also a film club will occupy one of the stories.

According to the article, there are about 100 producing firms in Berlin. Exposed films to the value of twenty-six million marks have been imported during the first three months of this year. The value of raw stock imported amounted to one hundred and twenty millions of marks for the same period.

"Danny," the famous European traveller, post cards us on his way to Buda Pesth with Jesse Lasky.

J. D. Williams, general manager for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., visits Jackie Coogan at the United Studios, Hollywood

A NOVEL piece of exploitation—one which gives an inkling to the exhibitor and his patrons what they may expect this coming season from Paramount—is the two reel feature, "A Trip to Paramountown," produced by Jerome Beatty. There has been a deal of thought put upon this effort to acquaint the picture public with the Paramount brand. It has taken a deal of ingenuity to mould it together so that the various episodes, presenting flashes of future productions and intimate glimpses of screen personalities, are told in the shape of a sight seeing tour.

Mitchell Lewis, Ethel Wales and Lucien Littlefield are being conducted through the Hollywood studios. And you are their guest. You see pictures in the making. You see detail everywhere. You are gazing upon production activities with the veil lifted. There is Alice Brady rehearsing for a society story. Over yonder in the open field is Jack Holt displaying his athletic prowess upon a polo pony. It is as if you were aboard a rubberneck wagon and at attention through seeing life in the magic garden of Make-Believe. Out on one of the summer sets May McAvoy is plucking various articles from a "delicatessen tree," preparatory to a tea party in which she is joined by a quartet from the stock company.

Don't imagine that Theodore Roberts is neglected. He lends a comedy touch with his familiar cigar. "The Cowboy and the Lady" is being shot by John Robertson. Here you discover Mary Miles Minter, Tom Moore and Robertson endeavoring to please the continuity clerk and cameraman—the "hard boiled eggs" of production. Agnes Ayres' profile is caught as well as Wanda Hawley's piquant expression as she starts work upon "Burning Sands." There is a big set being used for Betty Compson's picture "To Have and To Hold." She indulges in memories. So does Dorothy Dalton. And here let it be said that some quadruple exposure is employed with astonishing success. None of the stars are forgotten. All are caught by the camera and the spectator: Marion Davies, Thomas Meighan, Anna Q. Nilsson, T. Roy Barnes, Theodore Kosloff, Penrhyn Stranlaws, Wallace Reid, Rodolph Valentino, Conrad Nagel, Julia Faye, Fred Niblo, Nita Naldi, Walter Long, Lilla Lee, Gloria Swanson and Director Sam Woods, David Powell, Leatrice Joy, George Fawcett, the two De Milles and a host of others.

It is a general outline of Paramount history in the making. It is intimate and human and developed with the artistry expended upon a feature. The subject has been well titled with emphasis placed upon the humor. All the technicalities are used. Flash-backs, close-ups, double, triple and quadruple exposure—these come into expression time and again. Paramount has started something. It's an animated 24 sheet of a Circus Maximus. Congratulations are in order for establishing a campaign of advertising absolutely unique in design.

The death of little Bobby Connelly, announced in another column, invites observations as well as sincere tribute to this clever little chap whose untimely "Going West" is mourned by millions of people who knew him on the silver sheet, especially as the boy of "Humoresque" who could "wiggle his ears" and who preferred the music of the violin to that of the cash register.

The thoughts that follow the first regret and pity that one so young and talented should be taken, are:

How kind the Grim Reaper has been to the motion picture industry as a whole.

How revered in the minds of theatre going people, is the memory of those who have gone before—John Bunny, Sidney Drew, Olive Thomas, George Loane Tucker, Harold Lockwood, Robert Harron and others. People still speak of them, even the first named, dead these ten years.

Statesmen die and are forgotten over night. A Rockerfeller pased away and few, even now, so soon afterward, know when or where or of what malady.

Such is the magic of the screen—such is the tribute to that indefinable something—inadequately called personality, which some persons possess that makes their image on the silver sheet a living and loveable thing to those who sit in the theatre.

EXPERIENCED showmen are wondering a lot, these parlous days, over just what it is in pictures that attracts the public right now. It's hard to say. Old signs are failing—and right in New York, too!

There's a lot of guess work. But, it seems to us, Robertson Cole—now Film Booking offices of America—has hit on one sure-fire solution.

Advertising!

They are making pictures and buying pictures that lend themselves to exploitation—high points of exploitation and plenty of 'em.

The public is susceptible to advertising today—as never before. Something is needed—evidently to open the purse-strings. Advertising seems to snap them—every time. Of course, it's got to be clever; it's got to advertise things the public is interested in.

But it pulls—if it's right!

"The Arm of the Law" is a police picture. The Chiefs of Police all over the country are whooping it up. As P. A. Powers says "They made us make it." Certainly looks like a first run surety.

It goes on at the George M. Cohan Theatre and it is advertised right in the eye of Times Square on a stand heretofore reserved for Rotary Club slogans, fund raising campaigns, etc. At that rate the police in other cities will probably give over the city halls.

At any rate, exploitation is now the fundamental R-C production policy. It begins with the story and governs everything. It's a good box office idea.

Erno Rapee, musical director of the Capitol orchestra, sailed for a six weeks' vacation in Europe on the French liner, Paris, Wednesday. Manager S. L. Rothafel and the entire band were on hand to make sure he didn't miss the gangplank.

The information that Harold B. Franklin, so long managing director of Shea's theatre, Buffalo, is to assume what is inferred to be a general management of the Alfred S. Black string of theatres in New England, is news of more than passing mention.

It means among other things a step toward what keen observers of things pertaining to filmdom have long recognized as inevitable—a more intelligent and systematic endeavor to develop the theatres located in the smaller cities and towns—those 80 percenters who have been going it alone with inadequate ability along showmanship lines and too little information as to the needs and desires of their public.

Roger Sullivan, disabled war veteran being rehabilitated by the government, photographing President Harding as the final scene to a motion picture he is producing entitled "Another Chance"

The success of the Southern Enterprises with its circuit of hundreds of small town houses, stretching from the East to the West coast in the South is a most conspicuous example of what can be accomplished by system, a certain amount of expert service from a central headquarters and the proper selection of local managers.

Considering the industrial conditions and the general status of development as compared to other sections, it is safe to assert that no portion of the United States is contributing a better percentage of motion picture admissions than the territory in which the Southern Enterprises is operating. Nor is exploitation practised more consistently in any other part of the country.

We have no advance information as to Harold Franklin's plans but we venture the opinion that inside of a few months another Lem Stewart (Southern Enterprises live wire exploitation director located at Atlanta) will be installed to suggest, encourage, plan and perhaps admonish the house managers of the Black Circuit theatres throughout New England.

We predict success for Mr. Franklin and possess a modest pride in having discovered him years ago, when exploitation of pictures was in its infancy and Mr. Franklin a pioneer exponent and warm friend of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of Motion Picture News.

The review of Harold Lloyd's latest production, "Grandma's Boy," contained in this issue expresses about the ultimate in enthusiasm for a motion picture that can be expected of a critic and ought to satisfy even Joseph Patrick Reddy, the Roach Lot publicist, once a familiar figure in trade paper circles.

According to Exhibitors' Reports in Percentages published monthly in Motion Picture News, "A Sailor Made Man" heads the list for popularity with audiences and as a box office attraction. Before that there were a half dozen shorter comedy productions that paved the way to Lloyd's present popularity. And now another knockout. What is the secret of this young man's success? By all the rules of picture making he is due to flop once in a while. Why this failure to run true to form?

Our opinion is: Lloyd himself, Hal Roach and the latter's ability to surround himself with something besides "Yes Sirs."

If some of the people who are making dramatic subjects, put an equal amount of brains and ability into their productions as the Lloyd releases receive, there would be a lesser number of features that make managers weep in exasperation and send audiences out of the theatres, vowing never to return.

THE National Catholic Welfare Council Bulletin, in its July number under the caption of "A New Era in Motion Picture Management," praises the effort of Will H. Hays in connection with the Motion Picture Industry. The editor, Charles L. McMahon, has accepted membership on the committee of fifteen appointed by Mr. Hays as a result of the conference in New York City on June 22nd of representatives of the National, Civic, Religious, Educational and Welfare organizations of the United States.

Cohen Pledges Cooperation to Women's Clubs

Assures Convention That Theatre Owners Want to Promote Pictures for General Welfare

PRESIDENT SYDNEY S. COHEN, of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, made a most pronounced impression at the bi-ennial convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs at Chatauqua, N. Y., when in a speech he declared that 12,000 Motion Picture Theatre Owners would cooperate with the women's clubs of the country in advancing public programs calculated to promote the moral, material and general welfare of the people of any and all American communities.

The special occasion was "Motion Picture Day" at the convention and the session, which was held in the large amphitheatre was attended by over 2,000 women, representing clubs from about thirty states. Will H. Hays, representing the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and W. W. Hodkinson of the Hodkinson Company, representing the distributors, were also in attendance.

M. J. O'Toole of Scranton, Pa., chairman of the Public Service Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, also spoke on the work of the exhibitors and declared that the theatre owners were ready to cooperate with the women in all matters of public concern and said that he regarded the active participation of women in affairs as one of the redeeming elements of American official life.

Hays told of the moves being made to maintain a high standard of pictures and give to the American people the best that human ingenuity could conceive or art create.

The addresses were pointed and brought out most of the inner elements associated with the production and exhibition of pictures. As is the custom at such conventions, the speakers were interrogated from the floor and many matters of vital concern to the industry brought to the front. The erroneous impression that censorship was essential to good pictures was refuted by Mr. Hays, Mr. O'Toole and Mr. Cohen, and it was plainly pointed out that political censorship of this medium of expression was dangerous to the liberties of the people.

Several other inquiries from the floor brought Mr. Hays and others into action repeatedly.

A Buffalo delegate asked what he was going to do about "filthy pictures." He replied that while there was filth in pictures he was endeavoring to change that and that the place to stop it was at the source right where the pictures were made.

A New Hampshire delegate asked how the ladies in that state could cooperate along the lines indicated with the theatre owners. She said she had already arranged a conference between members of her organization and the exhibitors.

Mr. Hays asked Mr. Cohen to reply to this. Mr. Cohen said that Senator Bean, the president of the New Hampshire Theatre Owners, had advised him of this conference and that they were prepared there to turn over their theatres for the promotion of public service in that state. He said that the theatre owner welcomed constructive criticism and that it frequently happened that much of the objection to picture plays came from those who did not attend the theatres. He advised the women to visit the theatres, see the shows and then present such criticism as in their judgment seemed right to the manager of the theatre and work out with him lines of action which would be mutually satisfactory and advantageous to the community.

Cooperation in Rhode Island with the theatre owners was indicated in a forcible statement made by the leader from that state who said that not one picture found to be objectionable by the Women's Clubs there, had been shown by a theatre owner in any part of the state.

The excellent impression made on the delegates by the addresses of Mr. Hays, Mr. Cohen and Mr. O'Toole on behalf of the Motion Picture Industry, generally was commented upon by the delegates and a series of conferences have been arranged between the theatre owners and representatives of the women's clubs in different states for the purpose of cooperating closely in the discussion of problems.

F. P.-Lasky Buys Out Interest of Alfred S. Black

ANNOUNCEMENT was made on Saturday July 1st, by Alfred S. Black that he and his brother, John A., have sold their remaining one-half interest in the Black New England circuit of theatres to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, to take effect July 3rd, and that in the severance of their partnership, the best of feeling continues.

Mr. Black, in announcing the dissolution of the partnership declared that he had always hoped before he retired from the motion picture business to see 100% cooperation between the various branches of the industry, and that great improvement having already been achieved in cutting "questionable corners" it is only a question of time before such cooperation will be a fact. He further stated it to be his opinion that within a reasonable time not only the exchange manager but the important heads and managers of the exhibiting end of the business will be placed upon a contingent basis as to profits that will, in turn, bring about closer harmony and interest in local communities.

When asked as to his future plans, Mr. Black New England Theatres temporarneeded rest, he would remain with the Black New England Theatres temporarily in an advisory capacity. He expects to devote considerable time to his cement, canning and other varied outside interests and it is also quite likely that he will be interested from time to time in the development of new theatre projects.

Film Incorporations and Capitalization Lower

THERE were 90 less motion picture companies incorporated in New York state during the past six months, than during the same period in 1921. Capitalization of motion picture companies in New York state fell off during the first six months this year a matter of $10,577,-150, from the figures of a similar period a year ago. These startling figures are revealed in a survey of the state's corporation bureau for the first half of this year, as compared with the same six months in 1921.

Not a single month thus far this year equals from a corporation standpoint the same month a year ago. These figures assume an even greater importance in view of the fact that the last six months have witnessed a gain of nearly a thousand companies of all sorts which have incorporated and embarked in general business in New York state. The motion pictures business is the only one which fails to meet last year's figures.

Paramount's Exploitation Dept. Three Years Old

THE Paramount Exploitation Department, established July 10th, 1919, when Claud Saunders and eight assistants went into the field to put over "The Miracle Man," is celebrating its third anniversary.

"Paramount welcomes the advent of new exploitation forces in the field," said Claud Saunders, director of exploitation for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation upon the third birthday of his department.

"We look upon the establishments of exploitation staffs by several other producers with extreme gratification. It seems that justification of the idea that Paramount had when it pioneered in motion picture exploitation.

"We have never held that exploitation was something for one company only. It is bigger than Paramount, bigger than any of us. It is an idea of utmost importance to the industry for it means the salvation of the small exhibitor.

"Paramount's idea was to send a trained showman to these small-rental fellows and help them get the entire amusement-going public. If that public wasn't large enough, the exploiteer's mission was to create brand new patrons.

"While we have done good work it has been impossible to more than scratch the surface. So, instead of resenting the duplications of the work hitherto unique to Paramount, we cheer every time any of our competitors announce an exploitation staff. It means more than the fact that Paramount's idea is vindicated. It means twice-three times as many exhibitors will practice sound showmanship and that means the improvement of the financial condition of the entire industry. For what is motion pictures without these little fellows? They are the bulk of our business."

Crandall Gives Rule For Chain Theatres

HARRY M. CRANDALL, of Washington, D. C., First National Franchise holder, who operates one of the most successful circuits of motion picture houses in the world, has prepared the accompanying article in response to requests from exhibitors in all parts of the United States and Canada, who have asked him to set down a series of "Rules for the Successful Development of a Chain of Theatres." Mr. Crandall began as the owner of a single theatre with a seating capacity of 500. He now controls a dozen theatres of the first class with a seating capacity totalling more than 20,000.

In the first place, it seems to me that definite rules for the successful development of a circuit of theatres cannot possibly be formulated by one exhibitor for another whose activities may be as remote from the writer's as the span of the continent. So much depends upon the human, or perhaps, better said, the personal element and the exhibitors familiarity with the peculiarities of his single or various clienteles that generalities are of little avail.

Acquaintanceship with the community in which it is desired to establish another valuable theatrical holding, it seems to me, is a prime essential. An exhibitor may make a huge success of a theatre in a part of a city with which he is perfectly familiar and an abject failure of another in some more remote section of the same municipality.

We at the present time operate seven houses in as many different downtown and residential sections of Washington, D. C. No two of them react to precisely the same quality of bills, the same methods of publicity and exploitation or the same musical investitures of the pictured subjects. We have had to learn the idiosyncracies of each individual community by endless experimentation, constant effort and unceasing vigilance and thought. Any other exhibitor organization will be confronted by the same problems and the same need of flexibility in policy and viewpoint.

One of my first bits of advice to a theatre owner intent upon increasing his holdings would be to make his executive organization grow with the expansion of his interests. Conduct of a successful circuit is too big a job for one man. The multifarious ramifications of the business of purveying real entertainment to discriminating audiences are too diversified, too complex and too constantly recurrent to be effectively guided by a single mind. Our present executive staff consists of eight specialists, each at the head of a systematized department that takes full charge of a particular line of work connected with the operation of our houses—booking, music, publicity, house conduct, cashiering, auditing, etc.

Another pitfall that should be avoided is the pooling of circuit earnings. Each house in a chain should be made to stand on its own feet and not permitted to camouflage its losses, perhaps, behind the profits of a more prosperous unit in the same circuit. Our system of accounting is probably the most minute and the most completely revelatory of actual status of any ever devised for a similar purpose. It computes individually the minutest costs of operation and every item of income of each separate house on our circuit.

If any house shows a loss, the matter is brought to the attention of the executive staff at one of our semi-weekly sessions where such matters are discussed and the effort of every department is concentrated upon the task of restoring the ailing member to a profitable basis. It is the easiest thing in the world and one of the most dangerous to pool chain earnings and spread the profits of money making houses thinly over the losses of other units and thus deceive the managerial consciousness into a belief that the entire circuit is going like a house afire!

These are only a few of the fundamental principles of chain theatre operation. The booking of pictures, the drilling of an efficient corps of house managers and attaches, the cleanliness of the theatres, the synchronization of music and pictured subject, the scheduling of performances and all of the other numerous details of picture exhibition are matters upon which advice cannot rationally be given for the reason that these considerations represent the outgrowth of personal knowledge of the entertainment requirements of the community being served.

M. P. T. O. A., After Session, Plans Own N. Y. Body

THE following statement was issued by the M. P. T. O. A. relative to the New York situation:

"On account of certain officials and others connected with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York, separating themselves from the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America as a result of some differences of opinion which have existed here for the past few months, Theatre Owners in different sections of New York State have found it advisable to organize themselves into district units affiliated with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

"These Exhibitors are loyal to the National Body and the cause of the Organization generally, and are unwilling to be separated in any way. They have therefore adopted this method as the most feasible and practical way of continuing their affiliation with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

"This situation exists in the Buffalo district, in the Rochester territory and in other portions of the State. Arrangements are now under way at the solicitation of Theatre Owners in New York State and vicinity to form a district body in this territory which will be affiliated with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. This, we believe to be a very practical way to handle the situation here and affords all Theatre Owners who desire to be affiliated with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to continue to enjoy the protection and the advantage this National Organization gives them."

Because of the great extension of the work of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, the National headquarters have been removed to 132-136 West 43rd Street, New York City, from 1482 Broadway.

Reform Body Is Still Stirring Trouble

The Committee of Fifty, an organization composed of representatives of various religious associations of all denominations, meeting Thursday, June 29, passed a resolution calling upon Missouri Senators and representatives in Congress to support the Myers resolution asking for a Congressional investigation into the so-called monopoly of the moving picture industry.

The committee also went on record as favoring national censorship of moving pictures and the enactment of a law that would permit the seizure of prize fight films that are shipped in Interstate Commerce.

The action of the committee followed an address by Rev. Wilbur P. Crafts, superintendent of the International Reform Bureau, who with Rev. H. L. Bowlby of New York, general secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance, has been in St. Louis for some time working up sentiment for the blue law movement.

First National Heads Hold Meeting

Members of the Executive Committee of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., have been holding a regular meeting at the First National offices, No. 8 West 48th street, New York City. The meeting was for the purpose of considering certain new contracts discussing policies of the organization and to arrange for the fall and winter releases, which, it is claimed, will be the most extraordinary in the history of motion pictures.

The members of the Executive Committee are: H. O. Schwalbe, chairman; Robert Lieber, president of Associated First National Pictures (an ex-officio member of the Committee); E. V. Richards, general manager of the Saenger Amusement Co.; A. H. Blank; and Samuel Katz.

Pola Negri Coming for Paramount Special

Jesse L. Lasky Announces Plan for Continental Star to Make Picture Here

POLA NEGRI, noted Continental screen star, is coming to this country next month to make a big special Paramount picture, it was announced yesterday by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Lasky arrived from Europe July 4 on the Majestic, after having spent several weeks visiting authors and film producing centers in England, France, Germany, Spain, Austria, Hungary and Italy.

"Miss Negri is undoubtedly the foremost screen artist of Europe," said Mr. Lasky. "Although her pictures up to this time have been of a historical nature, or have been modern stories made with the limited resources of European producers, her strong personality and magnetism have been apparent to all observers of motion picture acting. Because of this genius she has built up a world-wide following, and when American audiences see her in a powerful story, produced by a capable director, and gowned in the latest Paris creations they will acclaim her as one of the biggest stars of the American screen.

"When I was in London I was approached by a famous dramatist, whose name I am not at liberty to disclose at this time. He told me he had written a story especially for Pola Negri and would like to have me produce it. I took the script and after reading it I was ready to agree with him that he had written a powerful drama, and, unlike many authors, had at once caught the idea of having an international flavor to his story. When he gave me the script he said he was an admirer of Miss Negri's work and, having met her personally, knew that it fitted her peculiar talents.

"A few weeks later I met Miss Negri myself. Up to then I had seen her only on the screen—wearing historical costumes, or cheap, dowdy dresses which suited the characters she happened to be playing. But when I met her in person I was immediately captivated by her charm, her personality and her smartness, and decided on the spot that, if it were possible, I wanted her to make the picture which my English author had written.

"Through arrangements with the Hamilton Theatrical Corporation, to which she is under contract, we plan to have Miss Negri come to New York next month and make this big, special picture at our Long Island studio. As soon as I arrived in New York I started arrangements for one of our best known directors to produce the picture, and the entire resources of the production department will be put at his command to give this story the settings and costuming which it deserves.

"Miss Negri is the first of a number of well known European players whom we plan to bring over here in the near future to augment the personnel of the Paramount Stock Company. It is our intention to bring over two leading character players from France, Spain and England, respectively, and give them places in the stock company, that a more international flavor may be given our pictures."

Another move made by Mr. Lasky to increase the international appeal of American pictures was the establishment of scenario bureaus in London, Paris and Madrid. During his sojourn abroad Mr. Lasky talked to nearly all the principal novelists and dramatists and arranged to have them turn over original scenarios to these bureaus, which will handle the scripts in conjunction with the Paramount editorial department in New York. These scenarios will be produced in America, said Mr. Lasky, as Paramount pictures.

Photoplaywrights Deny Guild Charges

THE Photoplaywrights League of America has taken exception to the "Broadside" issued two weeks ago by the Screen Writers Guild, in which the latter said it had no affiliation with the former body. Wycliffe A. Hill, President and Editor of Photoplaywrights of America has written in part as follows to Frank E. Woods, President of the Screen Writers' Guild:

"There has just come to my attention a published letter of yours addressed to Mr. Will H. Hays, in which you are quoted as 'firing a broadside' at the Photoplaywrights League of America. The published story in question goes on to say that the Screen Writers' Guild is conducting an investigation against 'Scenario Schools.'

"Despite the fact that you and the Screen Writers' Guild have been repeatedly informed that the Photoplaywrights League of America is not a Scenario School, it seems that you persist in referring to it as such for the purpose of casting unfavorable reflection on this organization, which has as much right to exist as does yourself. The Photoplaywrights League of America is a legitimate sales organization and for almost two years has been functioning with the scenario departments of the various studios as such.

"Your statement that the League is a business organization operated for profit is false and you have no right to give publication to such, any more than you have a right to designate this organization as a Scenario School."

Ince Denies

That he has sold his studios at Culver City, Calif.

That he has leased his studios to William Randolph Hearst.

That he has closed his studios.

That he is about to merge his studios with any other producer.

That he will move his production activities East,

Or that he intends to.

Hudson County Theatre Owners Organize

The theatre owners of Hudson County, N. J., have organized. At a first meeting in the Roosevelt theatre more than thirty leading houses of Jersey City, Hoboken, Bayonne and surrounding towns were represented.

Prompted to organize by the success of similar bodies in other key cities, the Jersey showmen gathered together with genuine enthusiasm. In the future, whatever problems may confront an individual member will receive the careful consideration of the entire organization.

The officers chosen by the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of Hudson County are: Chairman, D. Kiserstein; Vice Chairman, H. Harring; Secretary, S. Sobelson; Treasurer, F. H. Mertens; Board of Directors, J. Moody, G. Brennan, A. Ungerfeld, N. Reister, F. H. Mertens.

Virginia Censor Board Effective in August

All local Exchanges, operating in Virginia, also theater owners with photo-play houses in Virginia, were notified at the Board of Trade meeting that The Act of the Virginia General Assembly creating a State Board of Motion Picture Censors, will be effective August 1.

Lists of releases must be filed at the office of The Virginia State Censorship Board in Richmond, for all current film exhibiting in Virginia, which will appear there after August 1, also all matter to appear on and after that date.

Filing such display-lists is tantamount to applying for a permit to exhibit, the permit to be assessed at the rate of fifty cents a reel. After August 1, the Board of Film Censorship will pass all film, permitted to be exhibited within the State of Virginia.

S. J. Stebbins Out of the Rialto Productions

S. J. Stebbins has resigned as vice-president and general manager of Rialto Productions and relinquished all his holding in that corporation to undertake exploitation work on special productions which are to be released by Attractions Distributing Corporation. Mr. Stebbins has had fifteen years' experience in theatre management and exploitation.

Nixon-Nirdlinger Interests Precipitate Philadelphia Theatrical War

Institute Action Claiming Film Board Acts in Restraint of Trade

CHARGING that the Film Board of Trade of Philadelphia is an illegal combination operating in restraint of trade, Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, owner and proprietor of a string of fifteen picture theatres in the Quaker City, has fired the first bomb in what threatens to be a real theatrical war in that city in the shape of a suit in equity filed in the Common Pleas Court.

Hostilities between the theatre owners and the Board have been brewing for some time, with theatre men generally fearful of consequences which might follow any action, according to Mr. Nixon-Nirdlinger, designed to put a stop to the policy of the Board of Trade members to meddle in the affairs of theatre owners, dictate policies and terms and force the exhibitors to virtually meet them on their knees.

The controversy centers around the recent acquisition of the Ambassador theatre at Fifty-sixth street and Baltimore avenue by Nirdlinger and Love from Felt Bros. and involves a transfer of service which the plaintiffs desired from some of their other theatres. The Hoy Reporting Service which the Film Board of Trade uses is a target of the exhibitors' ire.

In a lengthy brief submitted to the court, Nixon-Nirdlinger has introduced correspondence passing between himself and several of the companies. Under date of April 25, F. B. Willis, secretary of the Film Board of Trade wrote Nixon-Nirdlinger of the introduction of the Hoy Reporting Service in this territory, and of some of the principles it intended following.

Nixon-Nirdlinger, under date of June 12, informed Edgar Moss, local manager for American Releasing, of his acquisition of the Ambassador and of his intention not to take over any obligations incurred by the former owners, Felt Bros. In answer to that, Moss wrote back stating that American Releasing intended holding Nixon-Nirdlinger to the letter of the obligations entered upon by the Felts. In this letter Moss pointed out that the Film Board of Trade had notified owners of its intention of holding new owners of theatres by the contracts of the previous proprietors. Moss's last letter had booked a number of productions into the Ambassador. Stating that he intended closing a number of theatres for the summer, Nixon-Nirdlinger alleges he requested a transfer of contracts from one house to another. One concern is alleged to have approved this, and later withdrew permission.

Since open warfare has been declared, the struggle gives every promise of being a long and bitter one and involves more than twenty important producers.

The officers of the Film Board of Trade are Felix Mendelssohn, Gene Marcus, Benjamin Amsterdam and F. B. Willis.

A recent letter sent to theatre owners by the Film Board of Trade, a copy of which is filed with the bill in equity as Exhibit A, told the theatre men that new owners of theatres would "be expected to settle any outstanding claims or complete unfilled contracts."

"Refusal to meet the slightest of their demands," Mr. Nixon-Nirdlinger is quoted as saying, "has heretofore been met with such powerful persecution that theatre owners have been forced to agree to their terms.

"They have threatened not to give me any pictures for the coming year if I refuse to comply with their demands. They have tried to compromise, but it is not my policy to compromise a wrong. We will fight it out, and I'm going after my rights whether or no.

"They have been trying to dictate the policies and prices and everything else connected with the operation of theatres in the city for so long a time that the persecution is unbearable and has become greater than the theatre owners can stand, and I am determined to fight it to the end."

The defendants named in the complaint are:

Film Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa.; American Releasing Corp., Associated First National Pictures, De Luxe Film Co., Electric Theatre Supply Co., Famous Players-Lasky Corp., Goldwyn Distributing Corp., Hodkinson Corp., Interstate Film Co., Masterpiece Film Attractions, Metro Film Corp., Pathe Exchange, Inc., Robertson-Cole Distributing Corp., Royal Pictures, Inc., Select Pictures Corp., Twentieth Century Film Co., Inc., Vitagraph, Inc., Wid Gunning, Inc., Associated Exhibitors, Inc., Felix Mendelssohn, Gene Marcus, Benjamin Amsterdam, F. B. Willis, Edgar Moss, William Heenan, Oscar Neufeld, Charles Goodman, William E. Smith, Frank W. Gebhart, Jules Levy, Samuel Rosen, Robert Lynch, Charles Henshel, John Flynn, David Segal, Max Milder, John Bethell, C. J. Powell, themselves and all others having the same interests as members of the Film Board of Trade.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Pennsylvania, in commenting on the action, issued the following statement under signature of President John S. Evans:

"The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, through an appointed committee acting for the entire body of exhibitors, have steadfastly refused to consider the application of the Hoy System with its rulings, knowing that it is not fair and contrary to all rules of equity as well as against the laws of our Commonwealth. They, desiring to set themselves up as a tribunal above our courts and government.

"The climax was reached when the Ambassador theatre, Philadelphia, brought suit against the local Film Club and each one of the members separately, to restrain them from enforcing conditions and have made charges against them in restraint of trade and against the anti-trust laws, and the matter, besides being placed in the lower courts has been called to the attention of the Federal Trade Commission."

THE sincerity of the really big and far-seeing producer in aiming toward the much talked of bigger-and-better picture could not, in our opinion, be better exemplified than in the production "One Clear Call," the First National release shown recently at the Strand theatre, New York.

For sheer 100% entertainment, I can remember no rival since "The Miracle Man." Action, suspense, pathos, are admirably blended. The direction of John M. Stahl is masterly.

The much abused term "all star cast" is not maligned here. Consider: Milton Sills, Claire Windsor, Henry B. Walthall (and what an actor he proves to be in this), Irene Rich, Joseph Dowling, Shannon Day, and every one of the others in the big cast. With such a story, continuity, cast, direction and photography, one cannot but congratulate Louis B. Mayer, the producer, for the sincerity and honesty he has displayed in sponsoring the picture, and applauding the result obtained.

GEORGE D. GOULD.

Missouri Law to Place Screen with Press

A NEW state constitution, which, in all probability, will be the first in America to place the screen and the press on the same basis, is being framed at Jefferson City, Mo., by the Missouri Constitutional Convention.

A. A. Speer, president of the First National Bank of Jefferson City, and a delegate to the convention, is the father of the proposal to liberate the motion picture industry from the shackles of censorship. Such men as Charles D. Morris, editor and publisher of the St. Joseph Gazette, are delegates to the convention who have announced themselves as opposed to censorship. There will be opposition, no doubt, but with such a powerful array of leading citizens, who are broad-minded enough to see into the future, it is difficult to predict a defeat for the anti-censorship proposal.

Although no exact date for the consideration of the proposal has been set, it is believed that it will be considered by the convention now assembled within the next week or so.

Cleveland Exhibitors Threaten to Split

Insurgents Make Motion to Separate from Parent Organization; Lack of Official Harmony the Cause

A BOMB shell was thrown into Ohio motion picture circles last Monday, when, at a special meeting of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, a motion was made to split Ohio in two, and form two separate state exhibitor organizations, one to cover the northern part of the state, and another to cover the southern part of the state.

This is the result of lack of harmony between the officials of the Cleveland Exhibitors' League and the officials of the M. P. T. O. A. of Ohio, due to a difference of opinion as to organization methods.

Cleveland has refused to join the M. P. T. O. A. of Ohio. Many Cleveland exhibitors have expressed themselves as being out of sympathy with the present state organization. On the other hand, many are ardent supporters of the present state organization.

The meeting last Monday was lively. Discussion ran riot. The plan for a division of the state and the formation of two state organizations was presented in the form of a motion and was argued for and against for almost two hours. To bring the discussion to an end, a motion was made to table the original motion. It lost by two votes. A motion to adjourn quickly followed and passed unanimously.

Martin G. Smith, president of the M. P. T. O. A. of Ohio and Sam Pullock, state organizer, were both present at the meeting. Neither voted. Smith addressed the meeting however, and made a plea for the present state and national organizations.

More special exhibitor meetings are expected to follow.

This proposition, emanating from the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League comes as a sudden blow. With the M. P. T. O. A. of Ohio, Ohio has, for the first time in the history of the business, worked together. Until the state organization was formed in Toledo last fall, Ohio has always been divided from Columbus north and from Columbus south. The M. P. T. O. A. of Ohio promised to bring about harmony of interests.

Exhibitors in Cleveland seem to be about equally divided at the present writing. Many favor the Northern Ohio organization plan. Many are satisfied with the present organization.

The special meeting last Monday was called at the signed request of several prominent local exhibitors who stated that they wanted to know where the Cleveland exhibitors stand in regard to local, state and national affairs.

Special exhibitor meetings are being called right along. It won't be long before it is known what stand Ohio exhibitors will take, whether they will ask for a division of the state with sectional organizations or whether they will support the present organization.

Cleveland Exhibs Propose Arbitration Plan

Board of Trade and Exhibitors Will Consider Problems of Film Service

THE Film Board of Trade of Cleveland early in the year issued a set of rules and regulations to govern the terms by which motion picture exhibitors were to be served with film product.

These terms proved, in part, to be irksome to the exhibitors. An effort was made to have a committee of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League meet with a committee of the Film Board of Trade of Cleveland for the purpose of ironing out the difficulties between the two branches of the motion picture industry. The motion to have the respective committees meet for a conference was tabled at a meeting of the Film Board of Trade. Later, however, the motion was revived and culminated in a letter received by the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League by Secretary H. W. Christman of the Film Board of Trade. This letter indicates the willingness on the part of the Film Board of Trade to consider a working agreement which shall be submitted by the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

M. B. Horwitz, chairman of the committee of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, believes that his colleagues have drafted a thoroughly equitable agreement, excerpts from which follow:

It is mutually agreed between the F. I. L. M. Club of Cleveland, an organization of exchange managers, and the Cleveland Exhibitors' League of Cleveland, an organization of exhibitors, that, in order to minimize to the lowest possible degree the number of differences between distributors and exhibitors in the city of Cleveland, that a joint Arbitration Board shall be created to hear and determine disputes between exchanges who are members of the F. I. L. M. Club of Cleveland and exhibitors who are members in good standing of the Cleveland Exhibitors' League.

The Joint Arbitration Board shall be composed of seven, three members to be appointed by the Cleveland Exhibitors' League and three members and a chairman by the F. I. L. M. Club of Cleveland.

All complaints against either exhibitors or distributors must be made in writing to the secretaries of either board.

The right of the home office or office of the exchange to accept or reject any application for a contract or contracts within twenty-one days, shall not be abridged or denied, but in either case the exhibitor shall be notified within the time specified, unless the play date of any individual or group of pictures on application or contract is within twenty-one days of date, and in that event, the exchange must accept or reject the application of contract at least seven days in advance of specified play date.

The terms of a written contract shall be binding on all parties as to protection and as to price.

Requests by any exhibitor for a change in play date must be made in writing and mailed at least fourteen days in advance, in which case the exhibitor agrees to play the picture within fourteen days of the original play date.

The exchange must furnish at least fourteen days' notice to the exhibitor of a change in play date, in which case the exhibitor may re-book the picture within fourteen days, if he has open time, and if not, at his option, cancel the picture.

Any involuntary breach of a contract with respect to one picture in a contract for several pictures, shall not be deemed to constitute a breach of the entire contract.

The Joint Board of Arbitration shall not deem it a breach of contract for an exchange to fail to deliver a motion picture to any exhibitor in the event said exhibitor has failed to comply with the demands of that exchange made pursuant to the terms of its contract and for additional security, not to exceed the sum of $500.00 to insure the safe return of its film.

The exchange shall leave an exact copy of the application with the exhibitor at the time it is signed.

No film shall be held by the exhibitor beyond play date as per contract.

No exchange shall serve non-theatrical enterprises with film for exhibition purposes anywhere, except it be in a recognized motion picture theatre, complying with the local and state codes.

This agreement shall be binding on all parties for a period of three months from date hereof subject to renewal from time to time as parties hereto agree.

Mastbaum Appointment Lauded

FOLLOWING his election on June 20th to membership in the Board of Directors of the Sesqui-Centennial Exhibition Association which will oversee the mammoth exhibition which will take place in Philadelphia in 1926, Jules E. Mastbaum has been overwhelmed with congratulations by theatrical and picture people of the country.

To the general public the appointment of Mr. Mastbaum to the directorate of the Sesqui-Centennial means that nothing will be left undone to speed up the plans and start work on this tremendous undertaking. That is the consensus of opinion of all who know Mr. Mastbaum and are aware of his active personality and indefatigable energy which will not permit him to serve in any undertaking in a strictly "honorary" capacity.

Syndicate Takes Over Cleveland Allen

At last the cloud of secrecy that has been enveloping the million dollar Allen theatre of Cleveland has been lifted with the announcement that it has been taken over by a syndicate known as the Euclid-Fourteenth Cleveland Theatre Company. A new lease has been recorded showing the transfer of the theatre under a fifteen-year lease from the Allen Cleveland Theatre Company to the Euclid-Fourteenth Cleveland Theatre Company. The rental is reported to be around $3,000,000 for the period, or the largest sum ever involved in a short-term lease in Cleveland.

Just who comprises the Euclid-Fourteenth Cleveland Theatre Company has not been made known, although it is generally agreed that the Loew interests are the leading factors in the company. The rumor to this effect is based on the knowledge that the transaction was handled through the offices of the Joseph Laronge Company, which has also handled the promotion of other local Loew interests.

First National Winners Back from Coast

First National's "$1-A-Week-Men"—the exhibitors from different parts of the country who were declared winners of the exploitation contest—are back at their respective houses after a trip to the studios at Los Angeles and Hollywood.

While on the coast the prize winners were entertained by city officials of Los Angeles and by producers and stars of the picture industry. Among the events at which they were honored guests were a trip to Catalina on the private yacht of Thomas H. Ince, dinners by Richard Walton Tully and Guy Bates Post, and a dinner-dance by Mack Sennett.

Those who made the trip were: Alfred Gottesman, of Shenandoah, Pa.; Ben Davis, of Norwich, N. Y.; Frank Steffy, of Seattle, Wash.; A. G. Stolte, of Des Moines, Iowa; Nick McMahon, of Ironton, Ohio; O. K. Mason, of Wichita, Kan.; Joe Burton, of Toccoa, Ga., and Ralph Lieber, of Indianapolis.

Creditors Extend Time to Allen Theatres

At a general meeting of creditors of Allen Theatres, Limited, Toronto, a decision was reached to grant a general extension of time to the company and a committee of creditors, under the direction of G. T. Clarkson, assignee and trustee of Toronto, was authorized to make provision for proportionate payments to creditors in due time.

The decision to arrange an extension was reached after the creditors had considered two important offers, it is declared. One offer was from the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Limited, Toronto, operating a great rival chain of moving picture theatres across Canada. This offer, which was made through N. L. Nathanson, managing director, was for $1,050,000 for all assets of Allen Theatres, Limited. It was ascertained that total liabilities of Allen Theatres, Limited, amounted to $1,200,000, it is stated, and it was claimed that the Nathanson offer would give the creditors about 75c. on the dollar.

Another offer was made by Associated First National Pictures of New York. This came in the form of a proposal to provide $100,000 in cash immediately, the money to be placed at the disposal of the Allens to help them through present difficulties.

Fire Damages Grauman's Theatre in L. A.

The stage of Grauman's theatre, Third and Broadway, Los Angeles, was gutted by fire at 5:30 last Monday while an audience was in the house. Defective wiring caused the drapes to catch during a musical act. The house manager assured the thousand patrons in the house that there was no danger, as the asbestos curtain was lowered. Few people attempted to leave the theatre.

George Ormston was badly burned on the arm. The damage may exceed $35,000, as the greatest loss was to the pipe organ. The instrument being installed in the new Grauman Hollywood theatre will be used to replace the damaged one. It was estimated the house would be reopened Friday.

Jacobs Resigns; Will Become Producer

Arthur H. Jacobs, who, for the past year has been the General Manager of Preferred Pictures, Inc., the producers of the Katherine MacDonald attractions for Associated First National, and who, recently, has been more directly associated with the production of "Rich Men's Wives," the first of the series of B. P. Schulberg Special Productions which is now being filmed under the direction of Gasnier, has resigned to enter the motion picture producing field for himself. Mr. Jacobs' resignation will take effect upon the completion of the production of "Rich Men's Wives."

Late Wire Briefs from Coast

IRVING CUMMINGS has begun production of "Broad Daylight," from the original by Harvey Gates. Lois Wilson, borrowed from Lasky, and Jack Mulhall are the principals.

Arthur F. Beck and Leah Baird Company have sailed for South America.

Douglas Fairbanks will complete "Robin Hood" in four weeks.

Jack Pickford is back from the east and is completing "Garrison's Finish." Madge Bellamy is playing opposite the lead and Arthur Rosson is directing.

Ward Lascelles has completed "Affinities," by Mary Roberts Rhinehart and featuring Colleen Moore and John Bowers.

15 New Companies Formed in New York Last Week

Companies entering the motion picture business in New York State showed a slight increase during the past week, when fifteen corporations filed the necessary papers in the secretary of state's office. The total amount of capitalization represented reached $566,000.

These companies, with their directors and amount of capitalization, included the Oswego-Strand Corporation, $5,000; Schine-Oswego Corporation, $5,000, and the Oswego-Arpheum Corporation, $5,000, all located in Syracuse, and having as directors Edward M. Byrne, N. E. Timmons, William H. O'Brien, Jr., of Syracuse; A and P Amusement Corporation, $15,000, M. C. Ryan, M. E. Hanley, New York; J. M. Treutlein, Elmhurst, L. I.; W-B Film Exchange, $100,000, J. F. Lenigan, M. M. Hayward and Arthur Sachs, New York; Artistic Film Co., $6,000, William Devery, Brooklyn; Charles K. Diamond, Alexander and Samuel Werner, New York; Albion Productions, $500, Dondon O'Brien, Jacob Elliott, Frank Johnson, New York City.

Ohio Tendency Toward Summer Closing

A detailed canvass of motion picture theatres of northern Ohio up to June 24 shows the increasing tendency to close during the hot weeks. The figures are as follows:

Theatres open 7 days a week	181
Theatres open 2-3 days a week	278
Theatres closed for the summer	97
Total	556

It was estimated that more would close after July 4.

Tom Boland, Oklahoma City, on Rotating Committee

Tom H. Boland of the Empress theatre, Oklahoma City, and original First National franchise holder, has succeeded John J. McGuirk as a member of the First National Rotating Committee and will serve for two weeks in that capacity. The Rotating Committee is part of a plan of having original First National franchise holders visit the New York offices of First National and take part in its management.

Mr. Boland has been an exhibitor since the days of the one and two reel features. This was thirteen years ago. Mr. Boland opened the first one thousand seat house in the southwest, built especially for motion pictures—The Empress theatre at Oklahoma City.

"In those days," he said, "we had single reelers and two reelers only. Even in those crude times for our wonderful industry, an exhibitor with ordinary good judgment could see the marvelous future in store for motion pictures."

From the Empress, Mr. Boland became interested in several theatres in Oklahoma City and he is now a director of the Midwest Enterprise Corporation. As to what he thought of the big box-office attractions for the present year, he said:

"In our part of the country we consider 'Smilin' Through' a masterpiece. 'One Clear Call' is another great picture, and so is 'Tol'able David.'"

Uplift Worker Doubts Censorship

"It is the opinion of my wife, a motion picture censor in Illinois, as well as of myself, that it is doubtful if censorship of the movies will ever be effective."

This is a declaration made by Allen D. Albert, noted publicist, in the course of an address delivered from a Chautauqua platform at Cedar Point, O., Lake Erie shore summering place, according to information received by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., from one of its correspondents.

Albert, former newspaper editor, is one of the leading moral uplift workers in Illinois and a member of various organizations striving for higher standards of morality.

Prizma Opens Offices in Hollywood

Carroll H. Dunning, Vice-President, Prizma, Incorporated, producers of Prizma color pictures, has completed arrangements for opening a Hollywood office to take care of the increasing demands for Prizma color titles, insertions, prologues and special scenes.

The new office is located at the Fine Arts Studios, 4500 Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood and is in charge of Captain George E. Stone, one of Prizma's most successful color photographers.

Dr. Dan B. Brummit, of Chicago, editor of the Epworth Herald, official organ of the 750,000 members of the Epworth League, a Methodist Church organization, has made pointed answer to his critics who found fault recently because the Epworth Herald advertised motion pictures.

Dr. Brummit bases his reply on the assertion that millions of church people go to the movies every week, and will continue to go, no matter what is said and done and by whom. He also took occasion to declare that the Church, instead of attacking motion pictures, should make use of them for educative, recreative and evangelical purposes.

Dr. Brummit's approval of the photoplay has received editorial recognition from the Ashland, Ohio, Times-Gazette.

Grievance Committee for Maryland

Establishment of a standing grievance committee and the ironing out of what threatened to be open warfare in the organization as the outcome of an alleged "booking combine" marked a special meeting of the Exhibitors' League of Maryland on June 29, which is expected to bring about a new lease of life to the league. The meeting was held behind closed doors.

The grievance committee will be selected at a meeting of the directors of the league to be held at an early date. Its purpose will be to hear all complaints concerning members of the league and disputes which may arise in the organization.

Thompson Named for Jersey Assembly

J. J. Thompson, Jr., New York representative for George Kleine, pioneer in the motion picture industry, has been nominated for the New Jersey State Assembly on the Republican ticket. Thompson who resides in Bloomfield is one of the nominees from Essex County which comprises Newark, Montclair and other representative cities.

Ohio Exhibitor Wins Sunday Opening

J. Stuart Cangney, manager of the Temple theatre, at Bryant, Ohio, has won out in his suit for Sunday movies, and henceforth there will be motion pictures regularly every Sunday at the Temple theatre.

Cangney was arrested several months ago for keeping open on Sunday. The ministers of Bryant rose up in wrath and began forming anti-Sunday movie organizations. They got signatures from Bryant citizens decrying the Sunday movie. Cangney demanded a jury trial. The trial came off the first week in June. The jury disagreed. This week the second trial came off. Eighty jurors were impanelled before a jury could be called. Finally the necessary twelve people were gathered together. Of the twelve three were women, the first time that women have ever served on a jury in Bryant. And after a short deliberation, following the testimony, the jury returned a verdict of not guilty. So that shows which way the wind is blowing in Bryant, Ohio, and now the Temple theatre is running Sunday shows and doing big business, in spite of the signatures the ministers collected on their clean-up tour of the town.

Masonic Lodge Work is Shown in Pictures

The Masonic Lodge of New York has entered on a plan to have produced for them a series of pictures that will be distributed through the country showing the work that has been done, and is being done in their various homes, the centre of which are in Utica, New York.

The first picture showing the entire dedication services of the new Soldiers' and Sailors' Memorial Hospital has been completed and is now being shown in various lodges, and has proven most interesting.

At the present time Leon D. Britton is producing a six-reeler that from all indications and reports will be interesting to thousands of people who have never realized the work that is being done by the Lodges at their Utica headquarters.

Virginia Exhibitors to Hear Hays

Will H. Hays, supreme ruler of the Motion Picture Industry, will be the principal speaker at the Virginia Exhibitors annual convention, which will be held at Ocean View, Va., during the week beginning Monday, July 10th. A large number of Cinema stars have also been invited, including Mae Murray, Anita Stewart,, Richard Barthelmess, Alice Brady, Monte Blue, Mrs. Rodolpho Valentino, Betty Blythe, Glenn Hunter, Mabel Ballin, Hugo Ballin, Hope Hampton, George Walsh, Johnny Hines, Bernard Granville, Alice Lake, Lucille Lee, Jane and Katherine Lee and Grace D'Armond.

The convention opens Tuesday, July 11, and will last three days. There will be a big movie ball at the Ocean View pavilion

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Woman Who Walked Alone—

Big advance advertising helped put the picture over. A pretty good production, but not the kind that is popular. Fair attendance. (Middle West.)

A very good entertainment. Receipts were satisfactory. (Middle West.)

Across the Continent—
Patrons liked Wallie Reid and Theodore Roberts in this one. None had cause for complaint. Drew very well. (Middle West.)

Fine array of stars and speedy picture make this a winner. Played to fine business. (Middle West.)

Over the Border—
Melodrama with good acting. Pleased our audiences. (Middle West.)

Box office value and picture both fair. (West.)

Our Leading Citizen—
A good summer film which drew well. (Middle West.)

A crackerjack show with the biggest drawing power of any recent picture. Jammed at every performance. (Middle West.)

Fair picture which brought fair returns. (West.)

The Man From Home—
Despite warm weather, business was very satisfactory. Settings a big feature of this one. Well liked by patrons. (East.)

Fair picture. Business was fair. (East.)

For the Defense—
Good picture with excellent action but only pulled fair business. (Middle West.)

While Satan Sleeps—
Jack Holt has an unusual role which pleased our patrons. Good box office attraction. Business excellent. (Middle West.)

Just Around the Corner—
Fair. Lack of business attributed to three things: star not well known; title not striking enough; and people do not seek to weep. One "Over the Hill" is enough for awhile. (Middle West.)

Attractive copy showing how the Walnut, Cincinnati, offered "Over the Border"

North of the Rio Grande—
Beautiful photography, good direction and sincere acting. An unusually entertaining melodrama with more drama than most have. Good business. (Middle West.)

Love's Boomerang—
It takes a stronger picture than this to draw them in these days. Business fair. (East.)

The Bachelor Daddy—
Repeat picture. Business fair considering this factor. (East.)

The Ordeal—
Very good picture. Fair business. (East.)

The Crimson Challenge—
Well acted. Star well liked. Not extra business. (East.)

Three Live Ghosts—
Good comedy-drama. Business bad. (East.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Sonny—
Good drawing card. Played to full houses all week. (Middle West.)

One of the best pictures here in a long time. Business excellent except at end of week when weather affected it. (East.)

The Rosary—
Good picture and average box office value. (Middle West.)

The Seventh Day—
Satisfactory business. Nothing large on second run. (Middle West.)

Smilin' Thru—
Pleased most everyone. Could have done better business. (Middle West.)

One Clear Call—
Fair program picture. Business good.

The Silent Call—
Strongheart, the wonder dog, made a big hit with patrons. Despite warm weather went across excellently. (Middle West.)

Gas, Oil and Water—
Charlie Ray puts this one across with a bang. Should go big anywhere, any kind of weather. (Middle West.)

The Deuce of Spades—
Very, very well received. (Middle West.)

GOLDWYN

The Glorious Fool—
Very good picture. (Middle West.)

Grand Larceny—
Fair picture on time worn theme. Picture which depended upon comedy and small features to maintain average of bill. Two popular in a limp story. (Middle West.)

Yellow Men and Gold—
Fine picture with good business. (West.)

The Grim Comedian—
Mediocre entertainment. Slim business. (Middle West.)

SELZNICK

Reckless Youth—
Picture very pleasing. Plenty of pep in it. People liked it but business off. (East.)

The Prophet's Paradise—
One of the worst "frosts" seen here. Bad picture. Bad business. Picture abruptly withdrawn Wednesday morning because of complaints of patrons and "Reported Missing" switched in as stop-gap. (East.)

De Luxe Annie—
Pretty melodramatic and make-up was not so complimentary then as now but it drew many who used to remember when Eugene and Norma played together. Business satisfactory. (Middle West.)

Reported Missing—
Gave us the best week we have had in seven or eight weeks. Not normal business but better than usual in hot weather. (Middle West.)

FOX

Arabian Love—
Attracted average receipts. Story nothing extra. Warm weather hurt business. (East.)

Connecticut Yankee—
Fair business on return engagement. (West.)

Chasing the Moon—
The title of this one was its biggest asset as a drawing card. Good crowds for a week's run. (Middle West.)

Up and Going—
Very good picture. Good business. (East.)

Little Miss Smiles—
Mediocre picture. Business bad. (East.)

Money to Burn—
Fair Eastern, fair business. Takes something wonderful to make much of an impression so this will do as well as any for this season. (Middle West.)

PATHE

Don't Doubt Your Wife—
Inferior picture. Business indifferent. (East.)

Nanook of the North—
Picture is good and different from the rest, but will not stand up alone. Had to put on a double bill. (East.)

The Real Adventure—
Weather unusually hot, but the attendance held up well. Good box office returns. (Middle West.)

AMERICAN RELEASING

My Old Kentucky Home—
Picture pleased the audiences. Drew well in connection with the races. (Middle West.)

Bluebeard, Jr.—

METRO

Fascination—
Mae Murray's popularity here always assures a good attendance. A good week's business. (Middle West.)

Don't Write Letters—
Nice little comedy. Business good. Star growing in popularity. Generally liked. (Middle West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Iron Trail—
Good picture for the story. Locale and theme did not please our audience. Business fair. (East.)

UNIVERSAL

The Trap—
Exciting food for warm weather, but our patrons like lots of spice and highly flavored entertainment. Business better than it has been since warm weather set in. (Middle West.)

VITAGRAPH

Too Much Business—
Business close to capacity every evening and matinees fair. A fair bit of entertainment. (East.)

STATE RIGHTS

Watch Him Step—
Mediocre picture. Only fair business. Picture "stunts" of Talmadge generally regarded as imitation of Douglas Fairbanks. (East.)

His Nibs—
Fairly entertaining with business about as usual. (West.)

Stolen Moments—
Feature which Valentino fans like. Did exceptionally good business. (Middle West.)

Where Is My Wondering Boy Tonight?—
Picture mediocre. Some liked it others didn't. Business good on it. (East.)

Heart of a Texan—

"The Man from Home," at the Granada, San Francisco, and the ad copy used to announce the attraction.

Lobby display for "Reported Missing," arranged for the recent showing at Gordon's Olympia theatre, Boston

"Reported Missing" Given Ballyhoo Exploitation at Boston

An exploitation campaign for "Reported Missing" has just been put over by the Select office at Boston and Resident Manager Hookialo of Gordon's Olympia, one of the big picture houses of the city. Among other things, a float was prepared for use in the streets. A boat which might have been used by Owen Moore in his hectic voyages shown in the picture was mounted on a big truck, drawn by a pair of horses.

For photographic purposes at least Joe Kelley, shipper in the Boston exchange, was made up to impersonate Owen Moore in his character of Richard Boyd and Fred Corneau, poster clerk at the exchange, agreed to don burnt cork and look like Tom Wilson. Lobby decorations of a unique nature were also originated for the engagement. They are best explained by the accompanying cut.

Chaplin Imitators Compete at Alhambra, Cal.

IT fairly rained Chaplins when Manager Lewis played "Pay Day" at the Alhambra theatre, Alhambra, Calif. They were there in cutaway coats and in rags, with mustaches and clean shaven, with canes or with bicycles.

Manager Butler used an old stunt on a wholesale scale and with a new angle. He invited impersonators to try their skill and awarded prizes to the best exponents of the art of make-up; but he also had them parade for three nights steadily, during the entire run of the picture. The awards were made the final night, being limited to youngsters of from 8 to 17 years of age. As a result of his stunt the astute manager had 31 live wire boosters for his show for three consecutive days.

Novelty Montreal Ad. Used During "Four Horsemen" Showing

Manager H. M. Thomas of the Capitol Theatre, Montreal, Quebec, offered a unique newspaper advertising display in local newspapers during the two weeks' presentation of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" at this theatre. In a large three-column space, Manager Thomas listed statements or interviews by the heads of each department of the theatre. He quoted the cashiers, the doorman, captain of the ushers, the conductor of the orchestra, assistant manager, R. G. Darby, treasurer, and finally himself. For instance, Thomas quoted the cashiers as saying that they were going to write a song entitled "How Many?" because "120,000 people have seen 'The Four Horsemen' here and we're expecting 200,000 more."

O'Grady, the ticket-taker, exclaimed: "I'm a veteran at this job and I'm getting gray, but I never saw such big attendances daily as are coming to see 'The Four Horsemen.'"

Madden, captain of ushers, declares: "We find ourselves talking in our sleep—'Sorry, no seats left, madam.' We'd like to whisper into everybody's ear these words: 'Come to the 12 o'clock show.'"

Conductor Shea of the orchestra says: "Every time I turn around I see a veritable sea of faces—the greatest audiences a conductor ever had the pleasure of catering to."

Treasurer Darby remarks: "The picture cost a terrible lot of money and to come out on the right side of the ledger, at popular prices, we must secure capacity houses at each performance."

In conclusion, Manager Thomas emphasizes the advisability of attendance at early shows and the coming at the start of a performance.

The advertisement not only was interesting but it brought out several important details. It also had the effect of boosting team-work among the employes of the theatre.

Butler Exhibitor Effects Advantageous Tie-ups

The Lyric Theatre of Butler, Pa., and a local hardware store tied up to present each groom of the month with a round-edge safety-razor and each bride with a rolling pin as part of the exploitation for "Is Matrimony a Failure?" The safety-razor was being demonstrated in a corner drug store window and the Lyric got a good display there. This window had a demonstrator who naturally drew crowds.

This was all part of the exploitation arranged by Bill Robson, Pittsburgh Exploiteer, who also repeated his Pittsburgh stunt of tying up with the marriage license bureau at the court house. He put a sign up, stating that during the showing of the film each bride and groom of the month would be admitted free to the theatre upon presentation of their marriage license.

Robson also tied up with the Buick Agency who loaned a brand new limousine which they dressed up for a wedding party with old shoes, rice, white ribbons, etc., and a couple who looked as though they had just been married. They paraded the streets before and during the run.

Rolling pins were tied all around the marquee of the theatre with white ribbon festoons and a of the theatre with white ribbon festoons and a ing pin souvenirs.

To top it off a man dressed as a farmer went around painting display windows which were given for tie-ups. He drew a crowd—not with his paint brush but by his antics.

Here is a picture showing the lobby display on "Ten Nights in the Barroom," used recently by Thomas G. Coleman, manager of the Strand theatre, Memphis, Tenn.

Lobby decorations for "The Iron Trail" designed and arranged by Manager Robert Whitson of the California theatre, San Diego, Cal.

Radio Window Serves as "Invisible Power" Exploitation

A timely tie-up for the exploitation of "The Invisible Power," at Ascher's Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, was obtained by Ralph A. Wettstein, with the city's biggest electrical goods store. The entire window was given over to display of radio sets and supplies. Back of the display of radio receiving and broadcasting sets was a three-panel screen-like affair which carried the ad of the attraction and the theatre and the store's own advertisement.

The central panel was twice as large as the two side panels and at its top was a painting depicting a young woman listening to a radio message while forked lightning played back of her. Underneath this was printed in large white type, "What is the Invisible Power? Radio. We carry the largest radio stock."

The side panels carried the name of the theatre in large white type followed by "Now showing, 'The Invisible Power.'" One panel gave the cast, the other a Goldwyn ad.

H. B. Vincent, manager, and M. F. Estes, exploiteer, designed this lobby display on "Foolish Wives" for the recent showing at the Phillips theatre, Orlando, Fla.

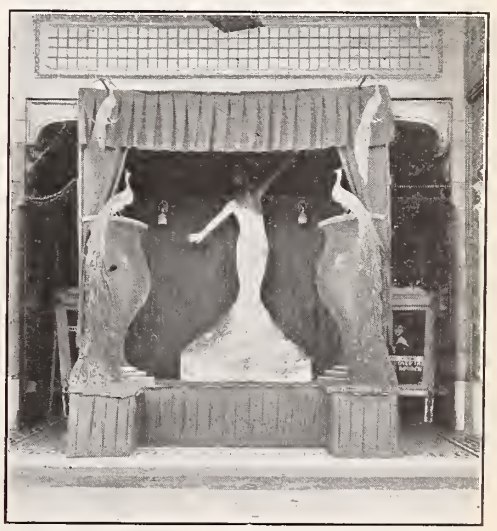
Feminine Fire Fighters Help Exploit "Nero"

AN exploitation stunt found its way into the columns of New York's daily press last week in connection with the pre-release Broadway engagement of "Nero."

There is a woman's fire department at Hillsdale, N. J., a few miles from New York, and invitations were extended to the entire force to witness "the burning of Rome" in the big picture. When the department, comprised of a corps of nine young women, arrived in the neighborhood of the theatre, they donned fire-fighting hats and marched to the Lyric.

Attractive window display on "Fool's First" advertising this attraction at the Hope theatre, Dallas, Texas

Shea's Hipp Uses Ballyhoo for "Silent Call"



When Manager Vincent McFaul put on "The Silent Call," at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, he used a fine street ballyhoo in the form of a magnificent police dog to attract attention to the picture. The dog was led through the down-town streets by a boy dressed in a bright red uniform. On the dog was a sign reading—"Strongheart, The Wonder Dog in 'The Silent Call,'—Shea's Hippodrome." The stunt attracted much attention.

Whitson's "Iron Trail" Lobby Lends Atmosphere For Picture

Manager Robert Whitson of the California Theatre in San Diego, Cal., prepared a special lobby for the week's showing of "The Iron Trail." Besides a model of a locomotive at one side of the ticket booth, there was, on the other side, a miniature reproduction of a mountain railroad scene, including a bridge, ravine, signals, water tank and other features, together with a tiny train. The ticket booth was specially decorated with greenery to lend to the general effect. A liberal use of stills and quarter sheets added to the display, which proved a great success in stopping the passer-by.

Brockman Uses Ballyhoo on "Straight From Paris"

Manager Brockman, of the R & R Pope Theatre, McKinney, Texas, exploited "Straight from Paris" by a ballyhoo and window tie-up. A girl usher served as a ballyhoo, lavishly dressed and carrying a suitcase labelled with the name of the picture.

"Peacock Alley" lobby front designed by Manager F. J. Miller of the Modjeska theatre, Augusta, Ga.

Lobby display on "Reported Missing" originated by Manager H. G. Griffin of the Pheil theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla.

Two Papers Put Over Same Stunt in Same Town

As a rule, when a newspaper puts over a contest for a theatre it generally demands exclusive rights, but not so in Frederick, Md., when "Beyond the Rocks" played there.

Manager Bob Decker of Opera House and the Empire theatre and Leslie Whelan, Paramount exploiter, sold the Gloria Swanson resemblance contest to both the Post and News.

Both papers saw the news value in such a contest and didn't handle it as an advertising stunt. With every newspaper reader in town thus covered there was little chance for it to flop.

Interest ran high and five prominent citizens acted as judges. The picture of the winner was published on the front pages of both sheets.

Down on the Farm Idea Suggested by "Way Down East" Lobby

An attractive lobby and a live ballyhoo created fine business on "Way Down East" for Manager Ollie Brownlee, of the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, Okla. The usual cornstalks and pumpkins were used lavishly and an extra kick was provided by the ballyhoo—live geese were tied on the wagon, connected with the banner, which intimated that anyone who didn't see the picture was a goose! Straw and leaves, big gourds, red apples on forked sticks added to the display.

Spanish Setting Lobby Display for "A Game Chicken"

MANAGER WILLIS W. GRIST, Crescent theatre, Temple, Texas, used a Spanish setting as a lobby display for a "A Game Chicken." The lighting effect was red and yellow, and red and yellow crepe paper was used over head.

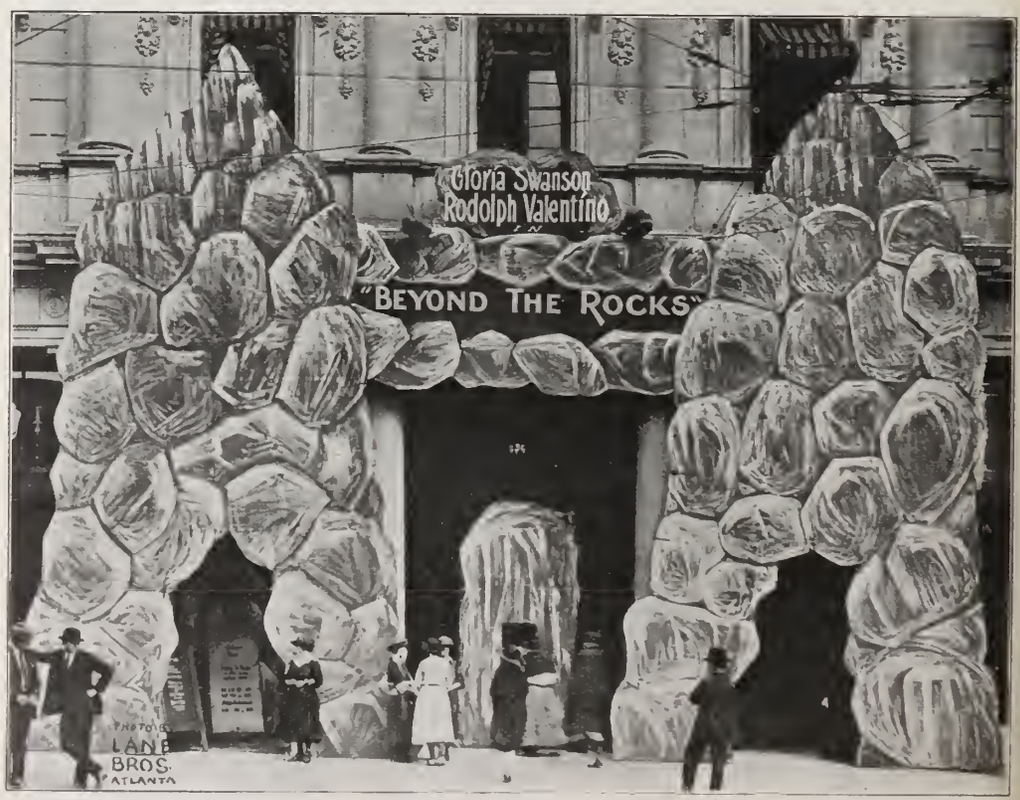
A large red rooster made by local sign painter was placed in center of the lobby with a cut out of Bebe Daniels in her dancing costume.

Eight stores in the town gave their windows for displays on the picture.

Rea's Love and Doughnuts Wash Line Stunt

GEORGE REA, who broke all records for exploiting "My Boy," has established another precedent by stringing "Love and Doughnuts" across the wash line in front of his theatre. A dicker was arranged with the village baker and the wash line became a matter of reality. A cutout of Billy Bevan with the ostrich was in the property room. Rea used this, cut out Billy and inserted Ben Turpin, with his bag of doughnuts; on top of the ostrich was a doughnut for a boutonnier. The baker did a big doughnut business and Rea cashed in on "Love and Doughnuts."

Arabian Knight Boosts "One Arabian Night"



ONE ARABIAN knight was used by Manager Valdez of the Royal theatre, Laredo, Texas, to boost "One Aragian Night." The knight of the Near East, clad in picturesque garb of the desert sands, paraded the streets with the signs that proclaimed him One Arabian Knight.

Red Lined Extra Stunt Used on "Saturday Night"

Newspaper extras on "Saturday Night" were used by Manager Tunstall of the Rialto theatre, Chickasha, Okla. He secured 300 of the regular afternoon edition in advance, on which was printed in red ink "Extra" on both corners and in big red letters at the top "Warning! Saturday Night Comes on Monday"—see Page 6—"that being the theatre section. His newsboys were first on the streets and the "extras" were grabbed quickly, many thinking it was a Ku Klux Klan threat! The stunt cost nothing as the papers cost only two cents each and enough were sold to pay this and the newsboys, though the few not sold were given away uptown.

Paterson Chamber of Commerce Gives "Smilin' Through" a Boost

Through the good offices of Jack Fuld, First National exploiteer for New Jersey, the Regent Theatre of Paterson, N. J., enlisted the support of the Rotary Club, the Kiwanis Club and the Paterson Chamber of Commerce for its run of "Smilin' Through." The Chamber of Commerce even issued a special letter to its members, urging their co-operation in the "Smilin' Through" movement for better business in 1922 and urged the use of this slogan in all advertising done by its members.

This lobby display on "Beyond the Rocks" is the work of Manager De Sales Harrison of the Howard theatre, Atlanta, Ga.

Karf Plays Up Ghost Idea on "Three Live Ghosts"

Ghosts at every turn greeted Okmulgee, Okla., when Manager Karf, of the Hippodrome theatre, showed "Three Live Ghosts." The ticket girl and all ushers were in ghost costumes and a triple ballyhoo was used day and night scattered thousands of heralds. Dimmed blue lights gave a weird atmosphere in the lobby and under the marquee. Black and white was the lobby scheme, in streamers, panels and mats. A window next to the theatre was used for a dimmed color ghost window of cut-outs kept shimmying gently by an electric fan at slow speed. The ballyhoo was used at night for an hour in front under a blue light, the three being placed close together silent and motionless.

Mabel Turns Somersault in Merrill Theatre Lobby

For the showing of "Head Over Heels" at Ascher's Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, Manager Ralph Wettstein arranged a novelty lobby display above the entrance doors leading from the lobby of the theatre to the auditorium, as explained by the accompanying cut.

Blue cloth hangings were used to represent a sky and white, painted cut-out effects were placed at the top of the display space.

At the bottom were cut-out buildings showing the New York sky-line with a cut-out figure of Mabel Normand, heels up, head down, turning a somersault.

On each side of Miss Normand was a cloud, one with "Coming" painted on it and the other "Week of June 4th."

The display aroused much comment and was a good business builder for the picture.

"Head Over Heels" lobby display arranged by the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee

Newman's Diplomacy Good for Front Page Publicity

FRANK L. NEWMAN, owner of the Newman theatres, Kansas City, last week proved himself a diplomat as well as a showman. The advertising department of the Newman theatre, in exploiting "Turn to the Right," placed several cardboard signs bearing inscriptions "Turn to the Right" at the entrance to driveways of gasoline filling stations and various other places along boulevards. The head of the park board ordered the signs removed, asserting they were in violation of the city ordinance. Mr. Newman, according to authentic advice, had just grounds for a complaint, but instead he chose to soothe the ire of the city official, which resulted in a front page story in the Kansas City Star, won the commendation of the public in general and some splendid free advertising.

Mr. Newman wrote a letter to the Park Commissioner asserting that his publicity department had been overzealous and proclaiming his civic pride, etc. He also worked in some institutional advertising for the theatres. The letter was published along with the Kansas City Star's story on the incident.

"A Doll's House" ballyhoo used by the Strand theatre, Wichita Falls, Texas

Day Builds a Doll's House for "A Doll's House"

When F. W. Day, manager of the Strand theatre, Wichita Falls, Kans., booked "A Doll's House," he went right out to get the business. At the entrance to his lobby he had built a real doll's house, constructed to scale, and carrying out every detail of a modern bungalow. The miniature house was built of wood, and contained parlor, bedroom, kitchen and bath, was electrically lighted, had an electric stove in the kitchen, and was furnished complete from piano to bathtub. Mr. Day writes that the lobby display was the talk of his city all during the run of the picture.

Buster and Jackie Duck Into Their Barrels Every Nine Seconds

Thomas C. Grindley, who combines the duties of projectionist and exploiteer at the Liberty theatre, Astoria, Ore., has come through with another stunt that is well worth description.

Manager Danz had booked "My Boy" and "The Playhouse" on the same bill and Exploiteer Grindley was called upon to originate a mechanical lobby display that would arouse the natives.

What his inventive genius evolved is well explained by the accompanying cut. When Jackie Coogan stuck his head up from out of his respective barrel, Buster Keaton ducked his and vice versa. The whole mechanical arrangement was of Mr. Grindley's invention and included some home made cams and shafts hitched to a small motor. Buster and Jackie ducked into their barrels every nine seconds, regular and on time for three days, the length of the run.

Ballyhoo for "World's Champion" Goes Well at New Orleans

Manager Wyan of the Liberty theatre, New Orleans, La., found a ballyhoo effective on "The World's Champion." A truck was covered all around with banners reading "See Battling Wallace Reid at the Liberty tonight" and a band hidden inside attracted the attention of all, after the old method of heralding a prize fight.

Mechanical lobby display for "My Boy" and "The Playhouse" originated by Thomas C. Grindley of the Liberty theatre, Astoria, Ore.

Two of the recent lobby displays ("The Speed Girl"—left; "Prisoners of Love"—right) arranged by Manager O'Donnell of the Best theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

"Bachelor Daddy" Prologue Pleases Baltimore Fans

Since "The Bachelor Daddy" offered such opportunity for a pleasant prologue, George A. McDermit, of the Century theatre, Baltimore, tickled his audiences last week with a musical prologue in which Justin Lowrie, one of the regular singers at the house, represented the title character.

Mr. McDermit got five little girls from a fancy dancing class conducted by Thomas J. Tobin in Baltimore. These children, allowed to perform under a permit direct from Washington, since Baltimore has particularly rigid child labor laws, put across a group of dances and then Mr. Lowrie sang "The Bachelor Daddy."

As a consequence both the theatre and the dancing class got some neat advertising, for in motion picture sections of all papers the stunt was mentioned and the Tobin "dancing children" got notice.

Spokane Twins Impersonate Gish Sisters

TWIN sisters were employed by Clemmer and Lambach, managers of the Clemmer theatre, Spokane, to help exploit "Orphans of the Storm."

The idea is credited to H. S. Clemmer, and the two sisters, dressed in costumes similar to those worn by the Gish sisters in the picture, were driven in a phaeton through the streets of Spokane all during the day both before and during the run of the picture. Both the driver and the footman were dressed in costumes similar to those seen in the film. The sisters made daily trips to the different department stores and places of business throughout the city, having luncheon at the different cafes.

The stunt attracted much attention.

Ballyhoo Used to Exploit "Cameron of the Royal Mounted"

Manager R. P. Whitefield, of the Queen theatre, Abilene, Tex., used a ballyhoo to sell "Cameron of the Royal Mounted" to his patrons.

He rented a horse and dressed one of his ushers in the Canadian Mounted Police outfit, the blue trousers, striped red, and the red coat and large military hat.

The man rode about town and from time to time blew a bugle. A tie-up with a circus playing Abilene during the run was effected, the boy on horseback riding in the parade.

Colorful Lobby Display Aids "Camille" Engagement

A colorful lobby display was one of the features of the exploitation campaign which Manager Frank C. Strozier of the Odeon theatre, Savannah, Ga., used during his engagement of "Camille."

To give the lobby a more compact and cheerful appearance a "ceiling" of solid green cloth was put in. This green cloth was also draped around the box office and down the sides and back of the lobby. On either side of the lobby a decorative panel of compo-board with a cut-out of the star in the center against the background of green cloth was arranged. These panels occupied the entire sides of the lobby. The panels were made with strips of compo-board 12 inches wide, decorated in green and gold.

In the back of the lobby were four smaller panels decorated in the same colors. Each panel had a red heart in the center with the title across it in gold.

Immediately in front of the box office were placed a flower box and two baskets. These contained lilies in full bloom.

A large red heart with the title in gold was suspended under the marquee.

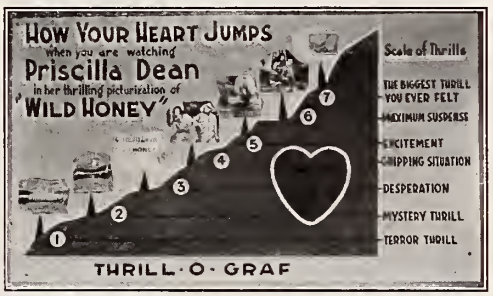
Howard Theatre, Atlanta, Presents Prologue on "Reported Missing"

A most complete exploitation campaign was put over by Manager De Sales Harrison of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, for "Reported Missing."

10,000 heralds were printed on pink paper by a local newspaper well known for its "pink" edition and these were distributed in every part of town, late in the afternoon. The heralds were printed in the form of a newspaper with large type heading "Owen Moore Reported Missing."

On each of the columns in front of the theatre were strung large life preservers with an inset picture of some scene from the photoplay. The box office was made to represent a ship cabin. A huge banner was painted to represent blue and green water with a cut out of a sea gull attached as if flying over the water. Owen Moore in "Reported Missing" was painted across the banner. Still boards in cartoon fashion were made so as to emphasize the comic side of the picture.



A prologue heralded as "Chinese Episode" was a Chinese setting with an enormous figure of Buddha painted in green and bronze. In the foreground was a handsomely draped throne on which sat the emperor. Excerpts from "East is West" were sung by a girl dressed as a white slave (soprano) while the emperor (tenor) joined in later.

Barbisan' "Pay Day" Window Stops Akron Fans

C. A. BARBIAN of the Waldorf theatre, Akron, O., secured what he alleges was the original suit of clothes worn by Charles Chaplin in making "Pay Day" and used them in a window tie-up with a local clothing store in such a manner that the crowds gazed before the display.

Mixing Up Names Provides Interest in "The Good Provider"

The Valentine Theatre of Canton, O., got good value out of their full page of cooperative ads by mixing the letters in the firms' names so they were unintelligible. Tickets were offered to persons able to re-arrange the letters to spell the name of the firm.

A clew to the identity of the merchant was furnished by printing the slogan beside each jumble of letters.

For instance:

MOC AEHTNC TLSDEIBOLO NO—The Automobile We Sell Has Been One of the Most Popular for 24 years.

The answer to this was "The Canton Oldsmobile Co."

"Rosary" Prologue Adds to New Orleans Presentation

A classy prologue was presented by Manager Chadick of the Strand Theatre, New Orleans, La. with his showing of "The Rosary" recently. A corner of a cathedral was reproduced on the stage, by use of a painted drop, clever stained glass windows, religious fittings, candles, etc.—the whole dimly lighted. The house soprano entered dressed as a Sister and stood silhouetted against a graceful arched window, thrown in relief by a light behind it. A narrow shaft of light was thrown on her by an upper flood. She sang "The Rosary" softly, supplemented on the last verse by a quartette hidden in the wings. Manager Chadick received many splendid comments on the effort.

"Fool's Paradise" Exploited by Novelty Postcard

Manager Robinson of the Palace Theatre, Fort Smith, Ark., used an unusual postcard campaign on "Fool's Paradise." The card explained all about the production and in the bottom corner of each was pasted a tiny color still, 2 x 3, which was cut from the heralds supplied on the picture.

She Kidded the Public, But They Didn't Get Her Goat

W. L. Hill, publicity manager for Universal's Chicago exchange, arranged an effective and amusing ballyhoo to exploit "Foolish Wives" when that feature played the Orpheum Theatre, Champagne, Ill. An exceptionally attractive young girl, carrying a shepherdess' crook and accompanied by a young nanny-goat whose blanket was captioned "Stop Kiddin'; I am a Foolish Wife," worked the main streets of the town and the college campus.

She handed out visiting cards to the college students and boys and girls of the town. These cards won a lot of laughs and publicity.

Wheeling Sign Painter Performs as Ballyhoo Artist

WHEELING, W. Va., boasts of a sign painter who is as much a comedian as he is an artist. He acts as a ballyhoo at the same time he paints his signs.

The Virginia Theatre put him to work during the run of "Is Matrimony a Failure?" He dressed like a farmer and when he had gathered a crowd he stopped at a drug store window, got out his paint and brushes and wrote tie-up lines on the window.

In addition to the window work he gave chalk talks in the lobby of the theatre. The management gave him a blackboard to draw illustrations advertising the picture.

Schmidt Adds Another Lobby Front to His Achievements

Manager George Schmidt of the Strand, Atlanta, added another notable lobby to his already large list of notable lobbies in exploiting "Footfalls."

In the center of the lobby was placed a safe with the heavy iron door hanging from the bottom hinge and that dangerously broken. This safe was made from wood but the impression was so near exact that it was almost unnoticeable.

In front of this was a table containing an odd assortment of things guaranteed to catch any passing spectator's attention. A large sign standing on top of the safe asking "Can you solve the mystery. Here are the clues" was the first thing to catch attention. On the table in front of this you found a dirty soiled and bloody silk shirt, loud in design, on which lay a card saying that this shirt was found near the place of the murder. Another place was a pistol with a similar explanation. Strewn at random on the table and in the safe were bunches of papers, some with the bands broken which held them together, and some not. Everything in the lobby—or rather on the table—savored of scandal, mystery and murder.

Novelty Cards For "Wild Honey" Go Well at Pittsburgh

One of the exploitation stunts which R. J. La Voise, publicity director for the Cameraphone theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., used to put over "Wild Honey" was to send a girl about the city to leave cards purporting to be those of Priscilla Dean on which was written a message signed "Priscilla" and alleging that Miss Dean had called but found the occupant of the house not at home. The cards tied up with the showing by announcing that the caller would see "you at the Cameraphone."

The cards were delivered at every fourth door and caused considerable comment.

Dresses Up Auto Truck As "Come On Over" Ballyhoo

Dr. I. L. De Hass of the Palace theatre, Hillsboro, O., who is a dentist by profession but an exhibitor on the side, believes in exploiting a photoplay for all it is worth.

Dr. De Hass usually contrives to get a new angle to his exploitation features. For "Come On Over" he put a small tent, something like a circus tent, on an automobile truck, put a band of eight pieces inside the tent, and sent the truck through every street in Hillsboro.

Pennants hung down from the top of the tent. Some had stars on them, others crescents and others various designs. Flags fluttered from the radiator to the tent.

Schade Weighs His Patrons Before Okaying Them

George Schade, owner and manager of the theatre bearing his name at Sandusky, O., made effective use of a weighing machine in connection with the novelty picture "How to Grow Thin."

Scales were set in front of the theatre, with a professional weigher, who worked on the excursion boats in summertime, doing the weighing. Men over 225 pounds and women over 200 were admitted free.

Did they crowd around the machine? Ask Schade. He'll tell you.

Local Store Cooperates with Mitchell on "The Cradle"

FOR the play dates on "The Cradle" a local store co-operated with Manager Charles Mitchell of the Queen Theatre, Dallas, Tex., in a neat window display and attractive lobby decorations.

In the lobby was a "kiddie koop" with a finely dressed baby sized doll installed. All sorts of baby toys were arranged about the lobby. The window display consisted of baby buggies, bassinets, dolls, swings, etc., with plenty of insert cards and scene stills. The cost was barely a dollar and the result excellent.

Novelty lobby display arranged by R. R. Russell, exploitation representative for Loew's Palace theatre, Memphis, Tenn.

Proper Environment Created by Oriental Lobby Front

Manager Brooks of the Royal Theatre, Little Rock, Ark., created the proper environment for his showing of "Shame" by placing in his lobby striking cut-outs from some of the scenes from the picture. Over each door entering the theatre were large signs carrying the title of the picture and across the front of the lobby was a fifteen foot banner displaying Chinese characters and lighting. Around the marquise hung Oriental lanterns.

Title of "Turn to Right" Basis of Whitfield's Campaign

Manager Ray Whitfield of the Queen Theatre, Abilene, Texas, was permitted by the local gas and electric company to build in miniature in their most prominent window, a rural scene as taken from the picture. There were cut-outs of the mother, also plenty of cards reading Turn to the Right, and particularly novel was the tiny home illuminated by electricity. A sign over this small house read—"Don't Be Old Fashioned—Turn to the Right Method of Lighting—Have Your Home Wired and Use Electricity."

In the lobby Manager Whitfield placed an old torn up automobile with a sign which read: "This Car Failed to Turn to the Right—See the Results." On all corners there were signs directing the traffic to Turn to the Right.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE

Carson and Castor, operating as the Fine Arts Film and Publicity Company, have taken offices at 738 South Wabash Avenue. The first release is "Up In Mary's Attic," for which they have purchased the Illinois rights.

Mike Gerrib, of the Eagle Theatre, Westville, Illinois, and owner of a string of houses in Central Illinois, has leased the Opera House at Hoopeston, from William McFerrin.

G. T. Dembow, Philadelphia manager for Fox, motored into Chicago this week with his wife, and is spending part of his vacation in the Windy City.

A special trade showing of "The Storm," Universal's splendid feature, which is making great success on Broadway, brought out a crowd of representative exhibitors which filled both the projection rooms at Universal's exchange. The opinion of those who saw this feature was that it is one of the cleanest and most interesting photodramas of the year and has never been surpassed in spectacular features. Preceding the showing a buffet luncheon was served with Messrs. Stern, Lesserman and Sampson and the entire Universal sales force acting as hosts.

Edward O. Blackburn, of the Rothacker Enterprises, has returned to Chicago headquarters after a sojourn at the Rothacker-Aller Laboratories. While in the West he visited various First National exchanges. Edward H. Seifert, assistant secretary of the Chicago organization, is doing the Horace Greeley for a month. He's going to look up all friends on the West Coast—and find some new ones.

A. E. Features in Big Demand in Detroit

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS features are in heavy demand in Detroit. During the week of June 19th, Florence Vidor in "The Real Adventure," played John H. Kunsky's Adams Theatre, first run, while the same star in "Woman, Wake Up" was the attraction at Bert William's La Salle Gardens, second run.

During the week of June 25th, "When the Devil Drives," with Leah Baird, was the feature at Kunsky's Madison Theatre, first run, and on July 2nd "Lady Godiva" opened a first-run week's engagement at the Washington.

Frank J. Paskert has been appointed auditor of Universal's Chicago exchange to fill the vacancy made by the departure of A. Plattsman to assume his duties as European auditor. Mr. Paskert, for the past two and one-half years, has been auditor of Universal's Cleveland office.

R. A. Healy, of the Monogram and Casino Theatres, 35th and Halsted Street, has purchased the Marion Theatre from Sam Rabinowitz. Mr. Healy, who now controls the theatres in this immediate neighborhood, will completely remodel and enlarge the Marion.

Ben Beadell, who has been seeking the illusive muskalonge in the lakes of Northern Wisconsin, returned to Chicago long enough to circulate around film row and then went back to join his family at the summer resort where he will remain until the middle of August. Immediately on his return to Chicago, he will announce a new connection, which, he states, will be of considerable interest to the trade.

Louis Frank has taken over the Tulane Theatre at 62nd and Halsted Streets and will continue to operate it as a high class motion picture house.

Ira D. Howard, of the Isis Theatre, Winnemac, Indiana, has gone to Northern Michigan for a brief vacation, during which he hopes to cure a case of hay fever. During his absence his wife is conducting his theatre.

The Igles and Highlands party have arrived safely in Chicago after their Ford Sedan trip to New York City and back. At Wheeling, West Virginia, Walter Highlands was deserted by the rest of the party, who took the railroad home, while he piloted bus alone for the rest of the distance. The excellence of the eastern soft shelled crabs and the difficulties of mountain driving are the principal topics of the returned travellers.

The Roosevelt reopened under the Balaban & Katz banner Saturday, with D. W. Griffith's "Orphans Of The Storm," as its big feature, under the new management. The house had been closed for three days and completely renovated and redeeorated. Among other improvements, which will appeal to the public, was the moving of the screen back a few feet, which will correct the distortion of pictures for those sitting in the side seats. The house, as previously announced, is operating as an exclusive picture theatre, presentations and other acts being eliminated, and special stress being laid on the quality of the features and the musical presentation. The new scale of prices is 39 cents in the morning until 1 P. M. 50 cents afternoons and evenings; and 60 cents on Saturday evening and Sunday. All the prices are inclusive of war tax.

A party of Louisville Shriners, headed by Lee L. Goldberg, partner of Col. Levey in the Louisville First National Exchange, last week stormed the Rothacker Chicago laboratory. The pilgrims were on the last leg of their journey home after attending the shriners convention in San Francisco. Mr. Goldberg wired Watterson R. Rothacker in advance to expect 150 visitors and before the day was over about that many had seen how First National prints are made.

Louis Laemmle is scheduled to depart for his Summer vacation on July 8th, and will enjoy the cooling lake breezes of a Michigan summer resort for two or three weeks.

"The Storm," one of the greatest feature pictures ever put out by Universal, has been booked into the Chicago for the week of July 17th and will open at the Randolph Theatre for an indefinite run, on July 30th. Special exploitation and large advertising appropriations will mark the premier showings of this picture in the loop.

The Glen Theatre, on Armitage Avenue, has been sold to Manager Brotman, of the Park Theatre, by Harold Hill, who is the son of the late Henry Hill, who, for many years, operated the Glen.

H. Lieberthal, popular manager of Brunhild & Young's Emmet Theatre, celebrated his silver wedding anniversary last week, and received many handsome gifts, but the one he valued most was a chest of silver which came with the best wishes of Brunhild & Young. Mr. Lieberthal has been in the motion picture business for twelve years and formerly owned and operated the Colleen Theatre, now the New Lyric.

Illustrating the exploitation stunt for "A Connecticut Yankee," pulled by Manager A. B. Morrison, of the Palace theatre, Memphis, Tenn.

L. M. Rubens is again at home after an extended foreign tour, which lasted six months, and took him through the principal European countries and to Palestine and Egypt. He is looking hale and hearty and has interesting stories to tell of his experiences, but is glad to be back in the good old U. S. A., and particularly Joliet, once more.

Harry Weiss has resigned as president and is retiring from active connection with Superior Screen Service, which he organized some two years ago. Wallace Meyer, who has been manager of the firm, will continue in the same capacity. After a week fishing in Northern Wisconsin, Mr. Weiss expects to return to Chicago and says he will then announce his new film affiliations.

Ted Leberthan is now a member of the exploitation department of the Balaban & Katz organization, which is headed by William K. Hollander. Mr. Leberthan is well known among motion picture men, having formerly been publicity director for Charles Ray.

Robert A. Pottinger is planning to erect a motion picture theatre at the corner of Elston and Keystone Avenues. The house, it is reported will cost approximately two hundred thousand dollars.

"Nanook of the North" Highly Rated

"Exceptional" is the rating given "Nanook of the North" by the National Board of Review. Pathe reports remarkable expressions of appreciation forwarded by exhibitors following the public reception of Explorer Flaherty's screen epic of the natives of the frozen Arctics. The following telegram from S. Barrett McCormick, the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, is quoted:

"We have just closed one week's engagement of 'Nanook of the North' and do not want to lose this opportunity of telling you of its splendid success. I have never presented a picture of any nature that pleased so large a percentage of the audience. It is without doubt the most fascinating and entertaining film in years, and lends itself admirably to productive exploitation. Sincere congratulations.

Metro Scenario Writers Picked for Pictures

HOLDING up the high standard which already has been established with the new series of productions now under way way at the Metro Studios in Hollywood, five new stories have been purchased by Metro, all of which now are being adapted for the screen by prominent writers.

Under the new arrangement at the Metro studies, there will be no scenario staff. Instead, writers of the foremost rank will be engaged to prepare continuities according to their special qualifications.

Among those who now are working on stories for future Metro productions or just have completed adaptations are, J. G. Hawks, Marion Fairfax, Bernard McConville, Mary O'Hara, Lloyd E. Sheldon, Edith Kennedy and Rex Taylor.

Three of the newly purchased stories will serve as starring vehicles for Viola Dana; the other two are for pictures in which Billie Dove will appear.

Huge Broadway Sign for R-C Picture

Occupying the most advantageous advertising spot in the entire city of New York, a huge, hand-painted stand is now publicizing "In the Name of the Law" which will be presented by R-C Pictures on July 9th, at the George M. Cohan theatre. The stand is at the corner of Forty-third Street and Broadway.

Nat G. Rothstein, who is responsible for this big "exploitation scoop," points out that this same result may be obtained by live showmen in other cities. It is part of the plan of R-C Pictures to prove to the industry that "In the Name of the Law," an Emory Johnson production with an all-star cast, is one of the most exploitable productions of the season.

200 Extras in "Jack and the Beanstalk"

To lend color to Century's latest Fairy tale "Jack and the Beanstalk" over two hundred men, women and children were used. These extras take part in scenes of the city of the giant and the village where Jack spends his early youth. Six enormous sets were constructed for the giant's castle and other oversized scenes. These were made under the direction of Tom O'Neill, the technical director.

Fox Production Elaborate

"A Fool There Was" is Elaborately Staged in All Massive Details

ELABORATION of detail has always marked the William Fox super-specials directed by Emmett J. Flynn, and this characteristic has been more than emphasized in "A Fool There Was," which was recently completed at the Fox West Coast studios in Hollywood and will be released during the season of 1922-23, according to the Fox offices.

Aside from its dramatic value, the new Fox super-feature has many points of vital interest, especially to those who admire beautiful homes and expressive interior decorations. At a cost of approximately $15,000, the library, dining room, living room, grand stairway and nursery of a millionaire's home have been built, it is said by Fox officials.

Director Flynn and Sibley made a journey from Hollywood to New York, to see and to make photographs of the Ritz-Carleton restaurant and main saloon of the ocean liner "Olympic."

Another expensive "set" in "A Fool There Was" is a reproduction of the picturesque Grand Canal in Venice. The scenes will disclose the famed Adriatic city on a night when one of its wondrous and colorful fetes is in progress.

All of this, added to the cost of one of the greatest all-star casts assembled in recent years, including Miss Estelle Taylor, Lewis Stone, Irene Rich, Miss Marjorie Daw, Mahlon Hamilton, Wallace McDonald, William V. Mong, little Muriel Frances Dana, will complete a total that already has made the Fox bookkeepers use long rows of ciphers to complete the cost sheets.

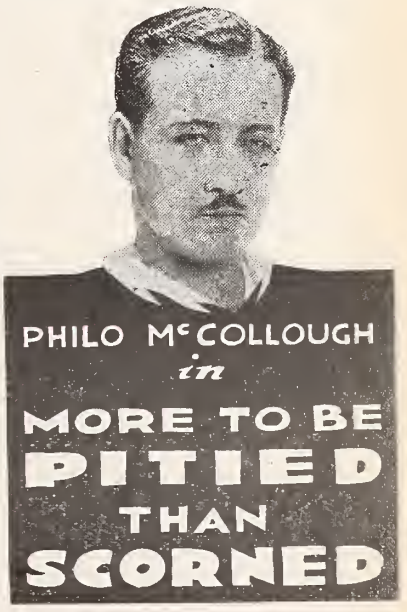
Lloyd Picture Has Record

"Grandma's Boy" Sets Continuous Run Mark for a Comedy Feature

FOR the second time within five months, Harold Lloyd has smashed the World's record for the continuous run of a comedy feature. The best previous figure—one which he himself had hung up, was surpassed Sunday, July 2nd, when the Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors attraction, "Grandma's Bay," entered the eighth week of its premiere in Dr. Breckwedel's Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles.

The Lloyd comedy, "Never Weaken," played the Symphony last year and remained 44 days, setting a new attendance for that house. Beginning December 31st and continuing until 11 o'clock of the night of February 18th, "A Sailor-Made Man" had a continuous run in the same theatre of 50 days, during which 367 performances were given. This run was terminated only because of a previous booking contract entered into by the Symphony management before the start of this engagement.

Even so, "A Sailor-Made Man" set a new world's record for a feature comedy, which was not to be threatened until Harold Lloyd came along with his current attraction, "Grandma's Boy." Not only has this offering, Lloyd's first of five part length, already exceeded the previous high water mark, but it is still going strong, and no predictions are being made as to when this record run will end.



Braves Vesuvius' Crater to Secure Views

SENSATIONAL shots of the interior of Vesuvius' crater during the most violent eruption since the disaster of 1906 are shown for the first time in International News Reel No. 52, released through Universal, July .1, 1922. Umberto Romagnoli, staff cameraman, obtained several hundred feet of spectacular scenes within the mouth of the volcano as it spouted forth molten lava, burning stones and sulphurous gases. Of the party of seven, including three experienced mountain guides, two were overcome and had to abandon the journey.

Other unusual subjects included in International News reel No. 52 are scenes of the Civil War in Ireland, the burning of big ships of the U. S. Emergency Fleet, and the Portland, Ore., Rose Festival.

Betty Compson's own production, "Always the Woman," from a story by Perley Poore Sheehan, will be next week's attraction at the Capitol Theatre, New York. Miss Compson stars in the production and has a cast of famous screen players in her support, notably Emory Johnson, Macey Harlan, Gerald Pring, Doris Pawn and Richard Rosson. The picture was directed by Arthur Rosson. Goldwyn is releasing it.

Scenes Being Shot on "If Winter Comes"

Dispatches from England received at the New York headquarters of Fox Film Corporation this week state that the company of players appointed for the production of "If Winter Comes," are now in Canterbury shooting scenes for the big special that will be an adaptation from the A. S. M. Hutchinson Novel.

Work was started under the supervision of William Fox and Julius Steger, director general of production of the eastern studios of the organization. Fox has been in England for several weeks conferring with the author of this much-talked-of book on many points of interest in conjunction with the proposed screening. Mr. Steger joined Mr. Fox two weeks ago and will procced with the latter to Rome, to confer with Director J. Gordon Edwards, who recently completed "Nero" and is about the film "The Sheperd King," another Fox special for 1922-23.

Johnnie Walker Film for Early Release

"My Dad," a Clifford Smith production, featuring the new R-C star, Johnnie Walker, has been scheduled for early release by the Film Booking Offices of America. This Northwest production, which will serve to introduce Walker in a new type of role, is announced by the P. F. B. O., to be admirably suited for summer programs. Its story is that of a young man of a Canadian trading post who risks his life to clear the name of his father from a crime of which he is innocent.

Walker is supported by Ruth Clifford in the leading feminine role. The picture was directed by Cliff Smith.

Small Town Atmosphere in Fox Picture

"The Town That Forgot God," another super-special which Fox Film Corporation announces for release during the season of 1922-23, possesses a universal appeal in its silent delineation of the small American city and its folk is the claim made by the Fox office. The production deals entirely with the provincial community, and the cast is one selected from the best group of small town character-types on the stage.

Bunny Grauer, who is rapidly becoming the foremost juvenile actor of the screen, is cast in the leading role.

Educational Tale on Harding Program

The latest of Educational's Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce, "The One Man Reunion," which is running in the Capitol Theatre in New York this week, was selected as the principal short subject on a special program for President Harding in Marion.

"The One Man Reunion" is the latest of the Wilderness Tales to be classed as an exceptional picture and reviewed as such in the National Board of Review publication Exceptional Photoplays.

Hamilton Theatrical Corporation's "The Greatest Truth." A Paramount picture

Current Paramount Issues

"For the Defense" and UFA Production Scheduled for July 9 Release

ETHEL CLAYTON in "For the Defense" and the UFA production, "The Greatest Truth," are scheduled by Paramount for release July 9.

Elmer Rice wrote the stage play "For the Defense," from which the picture was adapted by Beulah Marie Dix. Paul Powell directed. This is a drama of the halls of justice, with the district attorney in love with the girl who believes that perhaps in a hypnotic condition, she is guilty of the murder of a Hindu hypnotist who has treated her and become infatuated with her. Miss Clayton plays the part of the girl who has come under this Hindu physician's influence. The climax comes in the courtroom scene, where the judge faces the unique dilemma of having two women before him clamoring to be adjudged guilty of the same crime when it is obvious that both have perfect alibis.

Vernon Steele, formerly leading man in several of Elsie Ferguson's pictures, plays opposite Miss Clayton in the role of the district attorney. Others conspicuous in the support are Zasu Pitts, Bertram Grassby, Mayme Kelso, Sylvia Ashton and Mabel Van Buren.

The UFA production, "The Greatest Truth," is presented by the Hamilton Theatrical Corporation. It is a story of a woman of the present day who, in order to understand the importance of always telling the truth, is transported back to the era of the Roman Empire at the beginning of Christianity and shown the awful consequences that resulted from a lie told by a woman. The settings are said to be lavish and spectacular. Mia May heads the cast.

"Salome" Wins High Praise

Guests at Private New York Showing Approve Latest of Nazimova Pictures

NAZIMOVA in "Salome" was seen on the screen of the Town Hall, in New York, Wednesday evening by members of the National Board of Review and their guests, and by especially invited personages celebrated in the artistic and social world of the city.

The photoplay, following exactly neither the original legend of Salome nor Oscar Wilde's interpretive revision of it, yet admittedly inspired by both, was pronounced, judging from the freely expressed informal comment upon it by members of the audience, to be the most splendidly effective picture in which Nazimova has yet appeared, and it was generally predicted that "Salome" will be one of the outstanding triumphs of the year on the screen.

"To me," said Nazimova, "it has always been inconceivable that an historical figure so enduring should have been regarded as without a spiritual side, for the spiritual alone endures. Physical prowess in a man, sheer pagan beauty in a woman, bring a fame only ephemeral and inspire no legend. The character of Samson would be dull but for the tragic drama of his life; Sapho was more than an adept siren. And so, for all that there is no hard and fast data proving that Salome was more than a creature of beauty and fire and hate, she must have been.

"But for that, we should have found no reason for doing Salome."

So absorbing has Nazimova found her role of Salome on the screen that she intends, it is understood, dramatizing the story for the stage in time for an appearance in New York next season.

Robt. Sherwood in Tribute to Pathe News

Robert E. Sherwood in the latest issue of "Life," June 29, leads his page of motion picture reviews with the following tribute to Pathe News:

"The most rabid critics of the movies always make one reservation in condemning them; they admit their fondness for the news reels. They find more drama in a picture of a Six-Masted Schooner Driven Ashore in a Record Gale, than in all the Griffith Masterpieces; they derive more interest from Morvich Wins the Turf Classic as Thousands Cheer!—The Finish in Slow Motion! than from any of De Mille's eposés of the shallow aristocracy.

"I can see what they mean. To my mind, there has never been a film so impressive or so inexpressibly stirring as the Pathe News pictures of the ceremonies at the Lincoln Memorial on Decoration Day."

Chaplin's "Dog's Life" Again Winner

Since Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life" a First National Attraction, was shown at the New York and Brooklyn Strand Theatres a few weeks ago, it has created as many inquiries as to its general release dates as any of the new comedies now being distributed by First National.

The Keith, Proctor and Moss houses, beginning Monday, July 10th, will show it in their respective houses. The date set by the Exchange for general release is Saturday, July 24th, when this apparently greatest of all Chaplin revivals will go to the trade with a greater percentage of engagements than has perhaps ever been credited a Chaplin reissue heretofore.

Claire Windsor Signs Long Contract

Claire Windsor has been placed under a long-term contract by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. So pleased was the producing firm with Miss Windsor's acting in "Grand Larceny," "Brothers Under the Skin," the latter of which was but recently completed, and in "Broken Chains," the $10,000 prize winning scenario, in which she is now appearing, that it was decided to offer her the contract. The company wanted her for a member of its stock organization.

Miss Windsor has risen from an extra to the dignity of a long-term Goldwyn contract to play leads in the short period of three years.

Bathing Beauty Opposite Rawlinson

Harriet Hammond, another famous bathing beauty, has been engaged to play in Universal pictures. She will be leading woman for Herbert Rawlinson, who has just started his new Universal production. "Confidence," from an original story by Bernard Hyman. Harry Pollard is directing it.

Brilliant Cast Is Chosen for "Clarence"

A William De Mille production of Booth Tarkington's play "Clarence," which was a success for the New York season of 1919-20, adapted to the screen by Clara Beranger, has already been announced by Famous Players-Lasky. A brilliant cast, headed by Wallace Reid, Agnes Ayres and May McAvoy, has now been assigned to the production.

Mr. Reid, in the title role, that of the saxaphone-playing ex-soldier, continues under William C. de Mille's direction. Miss Ayres will have the sympathetic role of Violet Pinney, the governess in the Wheeler household, and Miss McAvoy will be Cora Wheeler, the flippant flapper. Kathlyn Williams will be Mrs. Henry Wheeler. Adolphe Menjou is cast as Hubert Stem and Edward Martindel, Bertram Johns, Robert Agnew, Dorothy Gordon and Maym Kelso complete the cast.

Selznick Reviving "Her Only Way"

The series of Norma and Constance Talmadge revivals that Selznick has been sending to the screen, is drawing to a close. Two of Norma's formerly successful pictures, "Her Only Way" and "The New Moon" are still to be reissued with "Happiness a la Mode" starring Constance Talmadge, still to come. This last named attraction is set for distribution July 30.

"Her Only Way," to star Norma Talmadge in reissue, is set for release July 20. Sidney Franklin directed. In Miss Talmadge's support is Eugene O'Brien.

House Peters Engaged for "Capt. Blackbird"

Goldwyn announces that it has obtained the services of House Peters to act the title role in its production of Carey Wilson's original scenario, "Captain Blackbird," which will be R. A. Walsh's initial production for the firm. The cast thus far announced includes House Peters, Antonio Moreno, George Siegmann, William V. Mong and Rosemary Theby.

"Hurricane's Gal" First National Release

DOROTHY PHILLIPS in "Hurricane's Gal," an exciting story of the high seas, adapted and directed by Allen Holubar, is the First National Attraction scheduled for release the week of July 17. This picture is said to show Miss Phillips at her best. She is surrounded by notable players, among them Robert Ellis, Wallace Beery, Gertrude Astor, James O. Barrows and France Raymond.

Under the capable direction of Allen Holubar, together with the splendid acting of the star and supporting company, "Hurricane's Gal" can be promised as a picture of startling effects and stirring story.

Universal's Summer List

Four Features Included in Strong Array of Mid-Season Attractions

UNIVERSAL has a strong list of attractions lined up for midsummer release. These pictures include four pictures of unusual quality, made by stars which have great box office value.

In order of release, they are: "Trimmed," starring Hoot Gibson, released July 3; "The Trouper," starring Gladys Walton, set for release July 17; "Afraid to Fight," starring Frank Mayo, to be released July 24, and "The Loaded Door," another Hoot Gibson special, set for release, August 14.

"Trimmed" has just been hailed by critics as Hoot Gibson's best picture to date. It is from a story by Hapsburg Liebe, and was directed by Harry Pollard, director of "The Leather Pushers" series. In "Trimmed" Pollard has injected much of the inimitable humor which marks "The Leather Pushers." Patsy Ruth Miller is leading woman for Hoot Gibson in "Trimmed."

"The Trouper," is an entertaining picture of Gladys Walton as the "slavey" in a barn-storming theatrical company. It was written and adapted to the screen by A. P. Younger. Harry B. Harris directed it. In the cast are Jack Perrin, Thomas Holding, Kathleen O'Connor, Roscoe Carns, Mary Philbin and others.

"Afraid to Fight," is such a good Mayo picture that Loew's New York Theatre begged for a pre-release showing, and fianally was permitted to show it during the past week. It is from a story by Leet Renick Brown, adapted to the screen by Charles Sarver, and directed by William Worthington. Lillian Rich is the leading woman.

"The Loaded Door" will be another fast riding western starring Hoot Gibson and directed by Harry Pollard. It is adapted by George Hively from "The Cherub of Seven Bar," a story by Ralph Cummins. Gertrude Olmstead will be seen in the chief supporting role. Others in the cast are Noble Johnson, Joe Harris, Charles Newton, Charles A. Smith and Vic Potel.

New Moore Picture Ready

"Love Is An Awful Thing" Title for Successor to "Reported Missing"

FROM United Studios, Hollywood, where Owen Moore has been producing for Myron Selznick the successor to "Reported Missing," comes word that the new issue has been completed and is in process of cutting, editing and titling. Victor Heerman, who wrote and directed the feature, is personally supervising the work of completing Moore's next one.

The title decided upon is "Love Is An Awful Thing," which, in itself, clearly indicates the whimsical nature of the plot. In the early announcements this attraction was referred to as "A Previous Engagement," but the title finally decided upon as its release caption has been chosen because it completely fulfills a mission of forecasting the character of the story.

In Moore's support will be Mrs. Moore, known to the screen as Kathryn Perry, and Marjorie Daw, as leading woman. This subject marks the return to the screen of Miss Perry for the first time since she became Mrs. Moore. Miss Daw is expected to prove a great asset to the advertising merits of the new attraction because of hersonal popularity with the public.

Paramount to Open Up Office in Tokio

Paramount Pictures are to be distributed in Japan in the near future through offices owned and operated by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as a part of its world-wide chain of distributing agencies. Tom D. Cochrane, for a number of years the representative of the Universal Film Company in Japan, will be general manager of the new company, which is to be known as Famous-Lasky Paramount Films, Ltd.

Offices will be opened in Tokio early in August and the distribution of some of the latest Paramount productions will be begun as quickly as the organization can be completed. Assisting Mr. Cochrane will be R. E. MacIntyre, special representative in the service department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who will act as supervisor of organization.

Mr. Cochrane and Mr. MacIntyre will sail from Vancouver on July 13th to take up their new duties.

Ex-Service Men Guests at Universal Showing

More than one-hundred ex-service disabled men of the U. S. Public Health Service Hospital at 47th Street and Drexel Boulevard, Chicago, Ill., were guests of Universal's Chicago Exchange at a special showing of "Afraid to Fight," Frank Mayo's current Universal Attraction, projected in one of the rooms of the hospital through the courtesy of Herman Stern, exchange manager.

The story proved particularly appropriate to the war veterans as it narrates the experiences of a returned soldier, struggling to save his destitute home. When the hero finally comes into his own, the applause of the disabled men surpassed anything he had ever heard, says Mr. Stern. "Their joy and enthusiasm over the story should have been witnessed by men from other distributing companies and there could be little doubt the boys would have more consideration extended them by film companies," he says.

Ruth Roland

Most Thrilling Drama, Staged in Scenes of Marvellous Beauty—

"The Timber Queen" is the high-water mark of serial achievement.

It is packed with thrills; it is produced like the finest feature; it has a great box-office star; it has a fine cast with Bruce Gordon; and most of it was "shot" in the most beautiful country imaginable, the timbered mountains of the West.

If you knew as much about the excellence of this serial as we do, you wouldn't rest until you had it clinched for your house!

in "The Timber Queen"

See the house go over the cliff; the sensational fight on the wings of the aeroplane; the runaway freight car; the fight between Ruth and the wild Argentine bull; the reckless train chase; the burning ship; the death-trap in the sawmill; and hundreds of other sensational scenes!

Ingram Coming to N. Y. to Make Picture

The first week in July will find Rex Ingram, director of "The Prisoner of Zenda" and earlier big Metro pictures, in the east, according to reports this week from the company's studios in Hollywood.

With him Ingram will bring the first print of the new photoplay, which will follow his screen version of Anthony Hope's novel. The title of the most recent Ingram production has not yet been made public, and it may be withheld until the director arrives in New York for conference with the officials of the Metro home office.

Before he left the Coast Ingram finished entirely his cutting and titling of the unnamed picture, and will prepare at once for production in the east of a photodrama of Victor Hugo's "Toilers of the Sea." Studio work on this will be done in New York; and exteriors staked along the Atlantic coast, probably in Maine.

Elaine Hammerstein Resting on Coast

Elaine Hammerstein is having opportunity to rest and see California since she completed her latest Selznick release, "Under Oath." George Archainbaud, who directed "Evidence," as well as her new picture, is busy with scenarist Edward Montague on the production which is next to be screened at the United Studios in Hollywood where the Selznick production force are now located.

"Under Oath" is to be made ready for release July 10 with Niles Welch and Mahlon Hamilton, each with supporting roles of equal importance. This work was a special engagement for Hamilton, but Welch has long been established as Miss Hammerstein's regular leading man.

Rowland Lee Directing William Russell

Rowland V. Lee is directing William Russell in his new picture, "Mixed Faces," just started at the Fox Hollywood studio. It is an adaptation by Paul Schofield of the novel by Roy Norton.

"Timber Queen" Pleases

Exhibitors Enthuse Over Prospects of Serial Starring Ruth Roland

EXHIBITORS who expressed enthusiastic impressions of "The Timber Queen following its first screening at branch exchanges, reports Pathe, have demonstrated in the most practical way their faith in the drawing power of the latest completed serial starring Ruth Roland—with a volume of advance bookings unprecedented in the history of the "House of Serials."

In proof of this statement Pathe furnishes lists of theatres of twenty-one circuits and many other first run houses which had booked "The Timber Queen" first run up to three weeks prior to release date—July 16th. The circuits referred to are as follows:

New York City—Consolidated, Fox, Brecher; Chicago—Lubliner and Trinz, Ascher Brothers, Schoenstadt; Atlanta—Lynch Enterprises, Southern Ent.; Dallas—Foy, Southern Ent.; Philadelphia and Eastern Pennsylvania—Stanley, Chamberlain; New Bedford, Mass.—Allen; Scranton and Eastern Pennsylvania— Comerford; El Paso—International; St. Louis—Koplar; New Orleans and South—Saenger; New Orleans, La.—Sobel, Richards and Shear; Charlotte, N. C.—Southern Ent.; Honolulu, T. H.—Consolidated Am. Co.; New York—M. & S. Circuit.

In presenting the following list of theatres throughout the United States which had made first run bookings of "The Timber Queen" so far in advance, Pathe says that all signs point to double, or even treble, this number on the date of release:

New York City—Sunset, Peerless, 5th avenue; Peerless, 3rd avenue; Colonial, 5th avenue; Roosevelt, Odeon, 145th street; Lincoln, 135th street; York Casino, Keith's Madison, Bohemian Annex, Palace, Essex street; Fox's Star, Bennison, Hub, Clinton, Royal, Sunshine. F.B.O. Companies at Work

De Haven, Gloria Joy, and Frank Gerson Units Busy on New Comedies

SHORT subject production at the R-C studios is now well under way, and the Film Booking Offices will be assured of a plentiful supply of comedies well ahead of its release schedule during the coming season. Carter de Haven has already completed the first two of his two reel domestic comedies and is now nearing the completion of his third, which has been tentatively titled, "Entertaining the Boss." With him is appearing Flora de Haven, completing the comedy team which has proved itself one of the most popular on the stage and screen. Mal St. Clair is directing.

Gloria Joy, the pretty young fourteen-year-old actress, has started the production of the first of her series which Sherwood MacDonald will direct, and which will occupy an important place on the F. B. O. short subject program in the fall. Her young beau is Glen Gordon and Gordon Sackville and Dixie Lamont complete the cast. This comedy has been given the title of "Sweet Thirteen" and shows the fun that fills the life of fourteen-year-old romancers.

The Frank Gerson Pictures Corporation is just as active with the production of Plum Center Comedies, which star the veteran character comedian, Dan Mason. Three of these rustic comedies have been finished and old "Pop Tuttle," Mason's character name in the series, is cutting capers in the fourth.

The release schedule of these short subjects will be announced by the Film Booking Offices in the near future. F. B. O. believes that it will be able to offer the exhibitor a varied high-class short subject program. Plum Center comedies will be hilarious, rapid-fire stories with a lovable character; Gloria Joy comedies will be wholesome and novel pictures of childhood fun and adventure; and the De Haven series will show the domestic troubles of newlyweds in a delightful entertaining fashion. With these comedies will be the two single reel subjects, Hy Mayer Travelaughs and Starland Revue, which are now being released.

Stars Develop Under Mary Pickford

Few stars have given as many actors and actresses opportunities to ascend to screen stardom as has Mary Pickford. The late Harold Lockwood became a star overnight as a result of serving as Miss Pickford's leading man in the first filming of "Tess of the Storm Country," nine years ago, and, now in the elaborated new production of this history-making picture, for United Artists release, Lloyd Hughes, enacting this same character, bids fair to emerge a full-fledged star in his own right.

There is also a strong possibility of Gloria Hope, who is in this same cast, achieving a like stellar position. She is playing the important part of Teola Graves opposite Miss Pickford's characterization of the heroine, Tessibel Skinner, and it is said Miss Hope's opportunities for winning high honors are numerous.

"The Isle of Zorda" Is Popular

Among current pictures which outstrip in proved box office value the most hopeful anticipations of their distribution, Pathe's special feature, "The Isle of Zorda," is declared by Pathe to loom bigger and bigger. This picturization of Jules Verne's novel, "Mathias Sandorf," which began its appeal to American audiences with moderately profitable results shows indications of duplicating the phenomenal record made abroad—in Paris, for example where it enjoyed a first run in more than one hundred theatres and continued to crowd one of them at each performance for a whole year.

New Paramount Manager at Kansas City

S. R. Kent announced last week the appointment of Benjamin Blotcky as manager of Paramount's Kansas City exchange. The position has been temporarily vacant for several weeks.

Ruth Roland Serial is Pathe Release

ANNOUNCEMENT comes from the Pathe Exchange, Inc., that the short subject features scheduled for release the week of July 16th will be augmented by "The Log Jam," the first episode of Ruth Roland's new Pathe serial, "The Timber Queen."

"Ten Minutes to Live" is the fifteenth and last episode of "Go-Get-'Em Hutch," the Pathe serial produced by George B. Seitz starring Charles Hutchison.

"Todd of the Times" presents Frank Keenan in the latest Pathe Playlet, re-edited from a former feature success.

"The Dumb-Bell" is the title of the latest Hal Roach comedy featuring "Snub" Pollard.

Much Research Work for "Manslaughter"

In spite of the fact that there were no photographers to record the dress and customs of the day when the barbarians overthrew ancient Rome, Cecil B. DeMille has produced, it is said, a historically faithful reproduction of this important event in the world's history for his latest Paramount picture, "Manslaughter."

The episode in question is a brief historical cutback, but it vividly depicts the arrival of the barbarian hordes within the gates of the capital of the Roman Empire.

Weeks of research work on the part of the director, by Jeanie Macpherson, scenarist of the story; by Paul Iribe, art director of DeMille productions, and the studio research department, preceded the actual filming of the scenes.

New Arliss Picture Is Near Completion

All photographic work on "The Silent Voice," the new George Arliss picture being produced by Distinctive Productions Inc., for fall release by United Artists Corporation, has been completed, and Henry M. Hobart is now busily at work assembling, cutting and titling this new Arliss starring vehicle in which Ann Forrest and Effie Shannon play the leading feminine roles.

"The Silent Voice" will be presented in about six reels and is declared by those who have seen "rush" prints at the studio to be a "real" photoplay in all that this term may imply and to give Mr. Arliss full scope for all his inimitable powers of screen artistry.

"Over the Border" Is in Production

Jerome Storm is beginning "Over the Border" with Jack Gilbert, the Fox Star. In the cast are Estelle Taylor, George Siegman, and Jack McDonald. The picture is being made at the Fox Hollywood Studio.

Mayer Plans Big Pictures

Options on Stage Hit and 3 Novels; Stahl Starts "The Dangerous Age"

"DURING the coming summer and fall months franchise holders can look forward to a series of superb attractions from the studios of Louis B. Mayer, one of First National's earliest producers, announces a statement from the First National headquarters. 'One Clear Call,' his latest John M. Stahl Production, is now playing to capacity houses in the key cities while his last two Anita Stewart pictures, 'The Woman He Married' and 'Rose O' the Sea,' directed by Fred Niblo, are attracting attention everywhere as offerings of great merit and fine quality.

"With 'One Clear Call,' termed by critics the screen classic of the year, as the forerunner of his coming releases, Mr. Mayer has set a standard that would be difficult to maintain for one without his long experience as a producer and showman," continues the First National statement.

"His John M. Stahl Productions have in the past kept pace with the best box-office magnets, and according to plans now in effect, Mr. Stahl's future pictures will be staged on an even greater and more elaborate scale than ever before. Both the director and producer are concentrating their efforts on two main points—that the stories be of sure-fire interest and that the exhibitors get on the screen the full value of the money spent in production."

While on his recent trip to New York, Mr. Mayer obtained options on a big dramatic play and three strong novels so as to be prepared with the right kind of material for First National specials when Mr. Stahl is ready to start on his next production. He has also contracted with J. G. Hawks, for three years editor and supervisor of productions at Goldwyn, to serve as managing editor of his studio and has enlarged his technical staff and stage facilities to be sure that every advantage in the way of production facilities be given to his pictures.

Mr. Stahl has just started on the filming of "The Dangerous Age" with Lewis Stone heading the all-star cast. There is promised in this picture heart interest with plenty of action, good, clean comedy and a few melodramatic thrills to keep things traveling in high.

"Mermaid Week" on B'way

Five Mermaid Comedies Shown by Broadway Houses Week of July 2

WITHOUT any advance campaign, or even intention of making it such, the week of July 2 is "Mermaid Comedy Week" on New York's Broadway.

A record that has never been approached before has been set by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., with the booking of five different pictures of the Mermaid Comedy series. One of the five Mermaid's plays in two theatres, making six houses showing pictures from this one brand simultaneously.

Four of the pictures included in this Broadway booking record are Jack White productions. They are "Rapid Fire," "Spooks!" "Danger" and "Step This Way." The fifth picture, "Rolling Stones," features Lloyd Hamilton and is one of the last of the Mermaid Comedies which will feature this rapidly climbing comedian, who is now engaged in making the first of a series of six special comedies for Educational under his own name.

"Rapid Fire" is on the program at the Capitol Theatre, which is also showing another Educational Picture, "The One Man Reunion," the latest release of the series of Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce. The Strand Theatre is running "Spooks!" much of the action in which is laid in a "set" that duplicates the famous old Eden Musee, one of the landmarks of New York City in its time. "Danger" has been at the Criterion for a week and is held over another week. The Rivoli has "Step This Way." The Hamilton picture, "Rolling Stones," is running at both Loew's State and Loew's New York Roof.

It was considered decidedly unusual when a feature comedy made by one of the most famous and popular comedy stars ran in four or five theatres on Broadway at the same time. This new record of five comedies of the same brand playing first run in six houses at the same time has never been approached.

The man responsible for four of the five pictures in this record booking, Jack White, is the youngest producing director in the industry. Starting in a minor position at the Sennett studio only a few years ago, his rise in the production field has been meteoric. He is endowed with a remarkably creative mind when it comes to constructing laughable comedy situations.

Prize Poster Contest for "Nero"

THAT "Nero," the William Fox master special, to be released during the season of 1922-23, may be the best "papered" picture in the country, a prize poster contest, to be judged by some of the foremost artists and art critics in the country, has been arranged by Mr. Fox. Prizes will be awarded to the amount of $500.00.

To the artist submitting the best poster, the film producer has offered a prize of $250.00. The second prize will be $100.00; third, $75.00, fourth, $50.00 and fifth $25.00. The drawings may be submitted in black and white or in color. The committee selected to judge the merits of the submitted drawings will be Charles Dana Gibson, Alfred Cheney Johnston, Walter J. Moore, J. P. Muller and William A. Page.

Coast Report Enthuses Over "Sonny"

Enthusiastic reports as to the success of Richard Barthelmess in "Sonny" are being received daily at the offices of Associated First National Pictures, Inc. One of the recent messages of praise came in the following telegram from A. M. Bowles, General Manager for the Turner and Dahnken.

"Richard Barthelmess in 'Sonny' opened our Tivoli Theatre, San Francisco, last Sunday and is giving better satisfaction and proving a bigger box office attraction than 'Tol'able David.' The enthusiastic praise accorded the picture by our patrons, together with the daily increase in box office receipts has resulted in our decision to hold 'Sonny' for a second week."

Herman Comedy Titled "Just Dogs"

Al Herman's all-animal comedy finished recently after many weeks of work has been changed to "Just Dogs" from "The Flapper." This is one of the animal pictures for which Herman has been engaged by Century.

Universal Announces Product for Full Year

ANNOUNCEMENT has just been made from the Universal general offices of the entire fall product of the company, comprising Jewel's Universal Attractions, and the large line of short reel subjects which is augmented considerably by special releases this year.

This announcement shows that the Universal year begins on August 21st. It also shows that the company is preparing to release during the year 12 Jewel productions, 45 Universal Attractions divided into groups of 9, short subjects number 280 and at least six serials. The company feels that its position for this fall is particularly fortunate in that a large part of its product is either entirely finished and in the hands of exchanges, or in process of work at Universal City, where more companies, according to the statistics of the Chamber of Commerce, are at work than in the studios of any other company, operating in California.

In view of the inclusion of a portion of August in the new year, Universal has listed "Foolish Wives" as its August Jewel release. "Foolish Wives" has already played pre-release bookings at various arrangements with the largest houses in the different territories, and is just now coming into its own as a releasing opportunity for the great majority of moving picture theatres.

The September Jewel release is "The Storm," which has already played a remarkable week at the Capitol Theatre in New York and which opened for a run at the Central on July 2nd. At the Capitol the "Storm" is said to have done the biggest business that any picture ever played to in June, and brought forth some of the most remarkable criticisms from New York newspapers ever written for a moving picture. Although this is the September release, prints of "The Storm" are in all the exchanges for inspection by exhibitors and in some cases pre-release bookings outside of New York have also been arranged.

The October Jewel release is "Human Hearts," also starring House Peters, with a cast which includes George Hackathorne, Mary Philbin, Edith Hallor, Gertrude Claire, and Russell Simpson. This picture was directed by King Baggot from Hal Reid's well-known melodrama. Prints of this picture are also in the exchanges for inspection, although its release date is the 1st of October.

The fourth Jewel picture is Priscilla Dean's "Under Two Flags," released in November. This Jewel is completed at Universal City under the direction of Tod Browning, with a cast which includes James Kirkwood, Stuart Holmes, John Davidson and Ethel Grey Terry. "Under Two Flags" is the famous international romance by the immortal Ouida, and has been filmed with infinite detail and some of the most costly sets which have ever been built at Universal City.

The fifth, or December, release, will bring "The Kentucky Derby" to the screen. This is the title given to Charles T. Dazey's famous stage melodrama, "The Suburban Handicap." The title was changed to "The Kentucky Derby" because King Baggot, who directed it, saw an opportunity to cash in on the famous race which was won by Morvich at Churchill Downs this year. The entire company was transported to Louisville and the famous Kentucky track for real Blue-Grass State atmosphere. Reginald Denny, Lillian Rich, Kingsley Benedict, Emmett King, Lionel Belmore and Gertrude Olmstead comprise the cast. Kingsley Benedict, who plays the juvenile part, played the same role in the premiere of "The Suburban Handicap" twenty years ago in Chicago.

The January Jewel will be Booth Tarkington's famous novel, "The Flirt." In it will be featured Wileen Percy, Helen Jerome Eddy, Buddie Messenger, Lydia Knott, Edward Hearn, Harold Goodwin, Nel Craig, Tom Kennedy, George Nichols, Lloyd Whitlock, Bert Roach, Dorothea Wolbert, William Welsh and John Cossar. It is under the direction of Hobart Henley.

"Bitter-Sweet" is the title of the Lon Chaney Jewel which will be released in February. "Bitter-Sweet" is a story of the Chinese underworld of San Francisco, written by William Dudley Pelley. In Chaney's support Universal has cast its newest star, Virginia Valli; Jack Mower, William Welsh, Henry Barrows, Harry Devere, and John Beck. It is under the direction of Lambert Hillyer.

Priscilla Dean's second Jewel of the year will be released in March under the title of "The Flame of Life." This is an adaptation of Frances Hodgson Burnett's novel, "That Lass O' Lowries." This production was directed by Hobart Henley and the cast includes Robert Ellis, Wallace Beery, Beatrice Burnham and Katherine McGuire.

The Jewels for the next four months have not been definitely assigned as to their release dates, but they include Erich von Stroheim's picture of Viennese life, entitled "Merry-Go-Round"; a film version of George Barr McCutcheon's "Castle Craneycrow" which will be made in Europe by Edward Laemmle with Harry Myers as star, and under the releasing title of "The Prisoner"; Jack London's story, "The Abysmal Brute" and William Hurlbut's play, "Trimmed in Scarlet" for Priscilla Dean.

The sets for "Merry-Go-Round" have been almost completed at Universal City, and the cast is very largely selected. Erich von Stroheim will not appear in the picture. Among those who are expected to appear, however, are Mary Philbin, Maude George, Cesare Gravina, Dale Fuller and Al. Edmundson. Immense quanities of actual uniforms and accoutrements have been purchased in Vienna have arrived at Universal City, together with Emperor Franz Josef's carriage, which was secured after three months' negotiations with the Vienna authorities.

Instead of the method of release in force for the last year, Universal will offer this year its Universal attractions in blocks of nine. The first nine of these pictures will be called "The Winning Nine" and subsequent blocks will have appropriate designations. In the nine pictures will be included two each of four stars and one attraction with all-star cast recruited from the best players available on the Coast at the time the subject is started. It may happen, as in the "Winning Nine," that there will be two of these all-star productions, instead of two star pictures. The Universal Attractions will be released one each week, with a total of 45 for the year. The stars appearing in Universal Attractions are Herbert Rawlinson, Gladys Walton, Hoot Gibson and Frank Mayo. The Winning nine comprises the following subjects, starting with the week of August 21st:

1. Herbert Rawlinson in "Don't Shoot," a film version of George Bronson Howard's original story, "Hands Up," directed by Jack Conway. In the cast are Edna Murphy, Wade Boteler and George Fisher, Duke R. Lee and Fred Kelsey.

2. "Paid Back," with an all-star cast which includes Gladys Brockwell, Mahlon Hamilton, Stuart Holmes and Kate Price. Directed by Irving Cummings.

3. Gladys Walton in "Top O' the Morning," Anne Caldwell's famous Broadway play of the same name, directed by Edward Laemmle with a cast which includes Harry Myers, William Welsh, Harry Carter, Ethel Shannon and Richard Cummings.

4. Hoot Gibson in "The Galloping Kid," by Wm. H. Hamby, directed by Nat Ross, with a cast which includes Edna Murphy, Lionel Belmore and Percy Challenger.

5. Frank Mayo in "Caught Bluffing," by Jack Bechdolt, directed by Lambert Hillyer with a cast which includes Wallace McDonald, Edna Murphy, Jack Curtis and Ruth Royce.

6. Herbert Rawlinson in "Confidence," by Bernard Hyman, directed by Harry A. Pollard, with a cast which includes Harriett Hammond, the bathing beauty; William Robert Daly, Hal Cooley, John Steppling, Otto Hoffman.

7. An all-star production of "The Long Chance," by Peter B. Kyne. Directed by Jack Conway. The cast includes Henry B. Walthall, Marjorie Daw, and Ralph Graves.

8. Gladys Walton in "The Girl Who Ran Wild," adapted from Bret Harte's "M'Liss," directed by Rupert Julian, with a cast which includes Vernon Steel, Joseph Dowling and William Burress.

9. Hoot Gibson in "A Lone Hand," by Ralph Cummins. Cast and director have not been chosen yet.

Although Universal is announcing definitely only two serials for fall, it will undoubtedly release at least six. The reason for this is a conviction on the part of the company that serials like any other moving picture product should be filmed in their natural length, rather than in an arbitrary selling footage. With the pathway blazed for historical and educational serials and a definite and honorable place established for the serial, which in the old-fashioned form was the target of all kinds of criticism and abuse of the industry, the Universal has added a new link in the chain by which it is opening new serial markets and adding new friends.

The first serial for fall is "In the Days of Buffalo Bill," already completed and in the hands of exchanges. This serial features Art Acord in the fictitious character of a scout who accompanies Buffalo Bill on many of his famous exploits in the most picturesque and exciting time of American history, a period covered between the years of 1860 and 1870.

The second Universal serial of the year is "The Radio King," capitalizing the tremendous craze for radio which has captured the country during the last three months. Roy Stewart plays the leading role and in his support are Al Smith, Sidney Bracey, Louise Lorraine, Clark Comstock, Ernest Butterworth, Jr. "The Radio King" is being directed by Robert F. Hill.

Among the novelties promised among the 280 short subjects for the year are six more of the popular "Leather Pushers" stories, six special Universal Century Comedies featuring Baby Peggy, a series of Jack London's Fish Patrol Stories, a Lumber Jack series, and a series of International News Novelties called "The Mirror."

The first Universal-Jewel-Colliers Series of "The Leather Pushers" was found so astonishingly satisfactory to exhibitors that it is planned to film another series of these delightful H. C. Witwer stories. The new Leather Pushers' series will start on January first and will be released in two reel rounds as before, two weeks apart.

One of the most rapid rises to stardom ever recorded is that of Baby Peggy. She has now reached a point where she is demanded as a big attraction star. To satisfy this demand, it has been decided to star the three year old actress in a series of six super Century Comedies to be known as Baby Peggy Special Universal Century Comedies.

Fifty-two two-reel action dramas are scheduled to be sold during the year. These will not necessarily be westerns but they will all be out of door stories and full of action.

New York Papers Praise "Starland Revue"

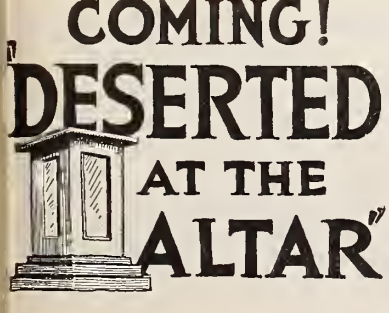
NEW YORK newspapers and the trade press have aided greatly in disseminating information and popularizing "Starland Revue," the new one reel feature of the stage and its stars, produced by Jack Cohn, and released through Film Booking Offices of America, formerly Robertson-Cole.

"These revues make very diverting entertainment for a motion picture program," writes Helen Pollock, in a recent review. Another reviewer in the Telegraph remarks that the back-stage shots of theatrical people shown in "Starland Revue" are always interesting and well chosen.

Picture Shows Growth of Manhattan

Charles Urban has prepared for the Kineto Company a picture of comparative growth in Manhattan. He calls it "Old New York."

It is like an illustrated lecture or a ride on a sight seeing bus.



The photographer starts down at the Battery, showing first views of Fort Clinton in the days when Manhattan was "New Amsterdam" and then the 1922 comparison.

Then "Old New York" works its way uptown, showing first the views of long ago and then the same locations as they appear today.

Irving Lesser Opens New Offices

Irving M. Lesser, general manager of the Western Pictures Exploitation Company announces that he has opened offices in the Loew State Building, New York City. The home offices of the company remain in Los Angeles.

Lesser will continue in the representation of the Jackie Coogan productions and the West Coast Theatres, Inc.

Davidson-Kranz Join Force

New Organization Announces Five Subjects for Sale to Independents

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of the formation of the Davidson-Kranz, Inc., with headquarters in the Loew Building, New York City. George M. Davidson and Charles Kranz are the heads of the new organization. Five productions are announced by the new company. Several months have been spent on getting these subjects into shape before offering to the independent exchanges, it is declared. These subjects are as follows:

"The Northwoods' Vengeance," written and directed by Caryl S. Fleming, is described to be a virile story of the Northwoods.

"Two-and-a-Half Musketeers" is a most ridiculous, farcical, clever burlesque on Dumas' world-renowned drama, "The Three Musketeers." This little gem has been reduced to three reels, making a riot of humorous incidents a-tumbling over each other.

"No Parents to Guide 'Em" is taken from Brenda's famous novel, depicting in all its tragedy, the life of the submerged tenth in England; showing the indomitable pluck of a twelve year old boy who acts as father and mother to his smaller brother. This picture may be likened to Dickens at his best; tears and laughs are intermingled in its intense exposition of humanity and humaneness.

"Love or Money" is a most gorgeous production, showing the triumph of love between a clean-cut American composer abroad and an American girl, the latter being unhappily married to a scoundrelly count.

Mr. Davidson, who has held responsible executive positions with leading distributing organizations, is particularly adapted to fill the post of "works manager," where the primary requisite is the initial cost of a production in comparison with its booking valuation.

Mr. Kranz has acted as city salesman, road salesman, district manager, exchange supervisor, etc., for the General, Mutual, Goldwyn and other leading film companies, and needs no introduction to the owners of independent exchanges in this country.

Associated with Mr. Davidson and Mr. Kranz is Bennett J. Brandon, formerly manager of the Foreign Sales Departments of the Mutual Film Corporation and Arrow Film Corporation, and for the past year has been an independent broker in the foreign rights field. Mr. Brandon will have charge of the foreign sales.

Russell Completes Pictures

Five Five-Reel Features Will Be Ready for Distribution in Fall

FIVE five-reel features have been completed during the past four months for Fall release by Russels Productions, of Chicago, according to W. D. Russell, who states this is his answer when asked how he regards the moving picture outlook for the Fall and Winter of 1922 and 1923.

The Russell Studios at Hollywood, California, under the supervision of Bernard D. Russell, are the scene of continuous action, as three units are working, and as fast as one photoplay is completed they promptly start on the next.

Russells Productions, at present, are preparing for a great splash for the Fall season, which will begin in August, and the company heads predict that the approaching year will be the greatest and most successful one in Russells Productions' history, as no expense will be spared to produce money-making independent pictures.

The first of the five features, "Boomerang Justice," is a semi-western and society drama, and has George Larkin as the star.

The next of the series is "Bulldog Courage." Bessie Love co-starred in it with George Larkin.

Then followed "The Barriers Of Folly." Eva Novak plays the feminine lead and George Larkin heads the cast. Wilfred Lucas, Lillian West and other well known screen artists display considerable ability in their supporting roles.

The greatest and most important feature to date by the Russells is "Saved By Radio." In this photoplay are such prominent actors as Harry Northrup, Minna Redman, Wilson Hummel, Jacquelin Logan, William Gould, Andrew Arbuckle, Monte Collins, Frank Whitson and George Larkin.

Preparing Campaign On Polo Serial

ANNOUNCEMENT comes this week from the offices of the Commonwealth Film Corporation that the preparation of a big campaign is now under way to put over the Eddie Polo serial "Cap'n Kidd."

Commonwealth holds distribution rights on the serial in the New York State and Northern New Jersey territory, and according to word from Sam Zierler, President of that company, the publicity and exploitation forces of his company are at present concentrating on the preparation of material designed to send the serial over the top and help exhibitors throughout the territory.

"Your Best Friend" Is Boston Favorite

"Your Best Friend," the Harry Rapf production starring Vera Gordon and distributed by the Warner Brothers, has broken the precedent of the Gordon circuit, Boston, according to an announcement. The significance attached to the statement is that never in the history of the circuit has a feature been booked as a second run in a first run house. The Olympia of that city will show the picture, following its run at the Tremont-Temple.

Fully ninety per cent of the entire country has been sold, according to Harry M. Warner. While many of the exchanges handling the picture have not as yet released it, due to the uncertainty of business conditions in their respective territories, the bookings to date are said to reveal that Miss Gordon has enjoyed considerable popularity wherever the feature has been shown.

British Executive Here for Pictures

Smith has brought several new productions with him and while in New York will negotiate for the British and Continental rights to a number of American features and two reel comedies.

Stone Coming to Confer With Di Lorenzo

JOE DI LORENZO, president of Di Lorenzo, Inc., in receipt of a wire this week from Roy Stone of Frederick Herbst Productions, stating that the latter is making a special trip from the coast to confer with Di Lorenzo on production plans for the future "Big Boy" Williams series.

Di Lorenzo has just drawn up an exhaustive report on state right conditions gained from his coast to coast tour in behalf of the new "Big Boy" Williams series.

This report will have great bearing on future plans for the Frederick Herbst Productions and it is intimated that due to the healthy aspect of Di Lorenzo's findings, Stone will carry back with him on his return to the Coast a decision to make the future "Williams" stories bigger than they ever have been.

Schulberg Is Pleased with Production

"Rich Men's Wives" is the first of a series of special productions B. P. Schulberg has arranged to make, for release by the newly formed Al. Lichtman Distributing Corporation.

Naturally, Schulberg wants to put his best celluloid foot forward in his initial work and after witnessing the results of the first few days' acting of House Peters, Claire Windsor, Little Richard Headrick, Rosemary Theby, Myrtle Stedman and the others of the all-star cast, he yesterday wired to Lichtman, in New York:

"After having been engaged in the production of pictures for ten or more years, I think I know what a genuinely first-class screen offering is. I want to assure you that I have every reason to be proud of 'Rich Men's Wives.' It is splendidly played, the story is powerful in its human simplicity and Gasnier has never directed with such skill and sympathetic understanding."

Big Production Promised for "Torchy's Feud"

The manner in which the C. C. Burr staff at the Glendale Studios has taken hold of its work in "Torchy's Feud," gives promise of a production of exceedingly great merit. The latest Johnny Hines vehicle has for it's locale the backwoods district of Kentucky. It was necessary to build entirely new props and settings that would effectively portray the locale desired.

The interior sets used this week consisted of a mountaineer's lodge, a huge barn, including stalls, hay racks and troughs, for the horses; the interior of a pullman car wherein Torchy meets up with a revenue officer and proceeds to win his bankroll; the interiors of a southern estate with it's many rambling rooms, and a lodge beautifully decorated with trophies of the hunt.

"School Days" Exploitation

Many Novel Stunts Help Make Barry Picture a Big Success in Omaha

OUTSIDE of one big circuit booking in New York, the Warner Brothers production, Gus Edwards' "School Days," starring Wesley Barry, is said to have been booked in over fifty per cent of the theatres in the territory.

One of the biggest exploitation compaigns that has been accorded to exhibitors in Omaha was recently put over by Harold Horne, of the Supreme Picture, during and prior to the showing of "School Days" at the Sun Theatre. Nate Frudenfeld, director of the World Realty Chain of theatres, also assisted in putting over the campaign.

The outstanding feature was the securing of 500 window displays with the Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company. The Loose-Wiles concern put out a Wesley Barry School Days cookie, and they furnished a staff of men to help put the picture over. For a street ballyhoo six big trucks were paraded through the main streets of the city—all carrying big signs announcing the attraction.

Tie-ups were also made with local merchants by building special school rooms in windows with desks and school bells and blackboards. Horne and Frudenfeld also landed a tie-up with a local bank whereby the institution offered a free ticket to every kid who started a bank account of a dollar or more. It is reported the bank opened up 1,200 new kid accounts.

Cohn Predicts Big Season

THE outlook for the coming season is big, and especially so for Independents, judging from activities and plans under way at the West Coast production centres, and there is every cause for producers, distributors, and exhibitors to look forward to the new season with deepest confidence.

That is the statement issued this week by Harry Cohn, who makes his headquarters in the West, and who came East two weeks ago for a short stay, to bring to New York the print of C. B. C.'s newest feature "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned."

Not only has Cohn made a close study of Coast conditions during the past few months, but, on his way East, he stopped off at several of the principal intermediate cities with a view to sounding out exhibitors and exchange men on the outlook, and their wants.

"On the Coast," says Cohn, "while several of the studios are not working at present, there is in this no cause for alarm, but rather for congratulation, most of the producers having seen the wisdom of adopting the short-year production plan and outlining their production schedules—both in number of pictures made and in time consumed in making them, to avoid the carrying on of expensive organizations during the Summer."

C. B. C.'s own production schedule is a large one, and Mr. Cohn, who supervises the company's production details, will shortly return to the Coast to keep everything running smoothly. There are now under way under the company's auspices, two series of two-reel comedies—the new Percy and Ferdie Hallroom Comedies, and Sunrise Comedies—and production plans are rapidly being lined up and actual work will soon be begun on "Only a Shop Girl," second of C. B. C.'s series of big feature offerings, "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned," the first picture of the series, being in almost final form.

Foreign Deal Closed by Producers Security

THE Producers Security Corporation announces a big foreign contract having been consummated this week whereby Cinematographer Harry of Paris, France, secured the rights for "The Great Alone," and "The Isle of Doubt," special features for France, Belgium and Switzerland.

"The Great Alone," is Isadore Bernstein's late feature starring Monroe Salisbury, which is being distributed in United States and Canada by American Releasing Corp.

"The Isle of Doubt" is a Syracuse Motion Pictures Co., product starring Wyndham Standing supported by George Fawcett and Dorothy Mackaill. Last week the Producers Security Corporation, placed "The Isle of Doubt" with Playgoers Pictures Corp., for distribution in United States and Canada.

American Unit Working Hard in Holland

Cable advices from Holland to the Producers Security Corporation state that the big American Unit, starring Evelyn Greeley, and Carlyle Blackwell in several superfeatures, is hard at work on the first production and will make several important announcements soon.

The American stars were sent to Europe to film these serial productions on the exact locale of the stories. The company is in charge of Oscar Apfel, the American director who gained fame in directing "Auction of Souls," and "Ten Nights in A Bar Room."

Distribution rights are in the hands of the Producers Security Corporation.

Newspapers Are Quizzed on C. B. C. Picture

That "More To Be Pitied Than Scorned" is admirably suited to special newspaper exploitation, and that such a campaign will sweep the country when C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's big feature is released, is being proved daily at that company's office.

The company is employing the unusual and far-seeing method of sounding out newspapers, submitting to them ideas for tie-ups, asking for opinions and ideas on these suggestions, and whether or not the paper will be interested in any angle of straight news stuff or special or "sob-stuff."

Klein Sells Burlesque on "Musketeers"

Edward L. Klein Company, importers and exporters of motion pictures, announce the sale of the American rights to "The Two And A Half Musketeers," a clever burlesque-comedy on "The Three Musketeers," which will be released on the Independent market by Davidson-Kranz, Inc., New York.

Third Warner Picture in Production

CLIFFORD S. ELFELT, president of Metropolitan Productions, has completed the filming of the second of the Western series starring J. B. Warner, and is now on the third production. At its conclusion, Elfelt will make a flying trip East to confer with Franklyn E. Backer of East Coast Productions, the organization which is now successfully marketing the Warner starring series. This series got away to a good start with "Big Stakes." Elinor Fair, former leading woman for Earle Williams, played opposite Warner, the star, and every other member of the cast was selected not only for acting ability but for typifying the character desired. New York, probably the most difficult territory to close on the average State Right western, was one of the first important divisions closed on "Big Stakes." Elfelt directed this production himself, and is continuing to direct the series.

Equity Manager Is Due Back from Europe

Louis Baum, general manager of Equity Pictures, will arrive in New York on the Olympic on Tuesday, July 11th, after a two months trip throughout Europe. Baum's trip combined business with pleasure and it is probable that he will have many important announcements to make to the trade upon his return.

The Equity general manager will immediately devote all his efforts to "What's Wrong With the Women," Daniel Carson Goodman's production, which will be Equity's big Fall release on the independent market. This picture has just been cut and edited by Mr. Goodman himself and was screened for Equity officials this week. It is from a story by Mr. Goodman and is interpreted by an all-star cast including Wilton Lackaye, Barbara Castleton, Rod La Rocque, Hedda Hopper, Constance Bennett, Huntley Gordon, Julia Swayne Gordon, Paul McAllister and Montagu Love.

Phil Goldsone Assembles Fine Talent

Phil Goldsone has assembled one of the biggest casts of the year for an independent production and in addition has engaged a staff of production experts for his special production of the famous old melodrama "Deserted At The Altar." The cast includes Bessie Love, who has just fininshed playing the ingenue lead in the Fox special "The Village Blacksmith." Tully Marshall who has been featured for the past ten years in support of the leading stars of the industry. Eulalie Jensen remembered for her work in support of Norma Talmadge in the "Passion Flower." Frankie Lee, who stands among the foremost child actors of the screen; William Scott and Wade Boteler.

Johnny Hines and Flora Finch in "Torchy's Hold Up," his latest for Charles Burr

Gladys Walton Has Narrow Escape

Gladys Walton, Universal star, had a miraculous escape from death when a stage coach she was driving, turned turtle at Seven Oaks, Calif., where a Universal company was on location. Vernon Steel, popular leading man, was badly hurt about the head and hands, and Wilfred North and 'Baldy' Belmont so seriously injured that they were forced to retire from the cast.

The accident occurred while the unit was filming "The Girl Who Ran Wild," an adaptation of Bret Harte's M'Liss, under the direction of Rupert Julian. Joseph Dowling will replace North, and William Burress will take the role of Belmont. It will be necessary to refilm many of the scenes.

Barbara La Marr Signs as Metro Starr

Barbara La Marr, the beautiful brunette who has come into fame in the motion picture world during the past year, has been placed under contract by Metro. She will enact the leading feminine role in the Metro-S-L Production of "Quincy Adams Sawyer," which Clarence Bedger will direct.

Miss La Marr has been with Metro for the past six months. She played a prominent part in Rex Ingram's production of "The Prisoner of Zenda" for Metro and later was selected for the leading feminine role in his latest photoplay.

Leah Baird Film Still Scoring in Chicago

The Associated Exhibitors' feature, "When the Devil Drives," with Leah Baird, continues to make a hit in Chicago. It entered the third week of its run at Sig Faller's Bijou Dream Theatre, June 24th, and two days later opened an engagement at Jones, Linnick & Schafer's Rose. Thus, at the end of that week, "When the Devil Drives" had run nearly four weeks in the loop district, and for several days it had been the feature at each of two houses in that neighborhood simultaneously.

Commonwealth Offers New Productions

Samuel Zierler, president of Commonwealth Film Corporation, this week announced some of the new productions his sales staff is starting to talk over with exhibitors. All of the productions are scheduled for Autumn release.

At the head of the list comes the new Clara Kimball Young series.

The first Clara Kimball Young production is "The Hands of Nara," Elliott Dexter plays the leading male role. There are four other Clara Kimball Young pictures coming during the year.

Another picture away up on the Commonwealth list is "The Man Beyond," with Houdini in the starrole.

Johnny Hines is back again in the Commonwealth fold in two feature comedies. The first scheduled for release is "Go Get 'Em Gallagher."

Roy Stewart appears on the Commonwealth roster in three productions. Two of them are Peter B. Kyne productions, "Back to Yellow Jacket" and "A Motion to Adjourn." These will be released in October and November respectively. For September release Roy Stewart and Louise Lovely are co-starred in "Life's Greatest Question."

"Chain Lightnin'," a racing drama with Ann Little; "Headin' North," a Pete Morrison Western and "Big Stakes," a J. B. Warner production, are other Commonwealth features.

Eddie Polo in "Cap'n Kidd," his newest serial, heads the Commonwealth list of serial offerings.

Eddie Lyons joins the Zierler banner with his new series of twelve two-reel comedies.

The Prizma series in natural-color, the Burlingame Adventures educationals, are also on the list of short subjects offered by Commonwealth.

Southern Houses Book Polo Serial

ONE of the biggest bookings ever recorded by First National Pictures of Charlotte is that just made through that company on "Cap'n Kidd," Eddie Polo's first Independent serial.

First National has just announced to Star Special Corporation, which holds world distribution rights on "Cap'n Kidd," the booking of the serial to eighteen houses over the Southern Enterprise circuit.

The Alpha Theatre in Atlanta started its first run on "Cap'n Kidd" this week and reports that the showing was a great success.

W. E. Drumbar, manager of the Majestic, Knoxville, built a special lobby display for the opening episode when it played his theatre last week ,transforming his whole lobby into the rigging of a sailing vessel on the high seas, inviting every passerby to join "Cap'n Kidd" and his pirate band on a voyage of daring adventure.

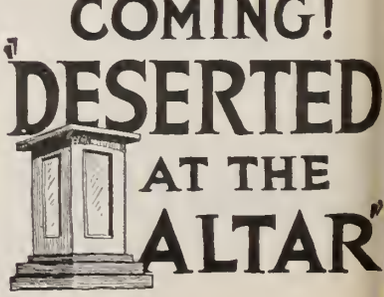
Warner's Entire Output Bought in Canada

The entire output of the Warner Brothers for the coming season has been purchased by Arthur Cohen and N. J. Nathanson, of the Regal Film, Ltd, Canada, according to Harry M. Warner.

Cohen and Nathanson have bought "Your Best Friend," the Harry Rapf production starring Vera Gordon, and the seven other features announced by the Warner Brothers for fall release. These include "A Dangerous Adventure," with Grace Darmond; "Rags to Riches," featuring Wesley Barry; "Brass," Charles G. Norris' novel of marriage and divorce; "Little Heroes of the Street," with Wesley Barry; "The Beautiful and Damned." F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel; "Little Church Around the Corner," adapted from the stage play of the same name, and "Main Street," the novel by Sinclair Lewis.



Hallroom Boys Make Hit As Features

Hallroom Boys Comedies were featured in some of the biggest first-class theatres in the Pennsylvania territory this week, according to word just received from Joe Lefko, of the Pittsburg Federated office.

"Beware of Blondes," the comedy burlesque on the present-day spiritualistic craze, scored a hit at the Capitol Theatre, McKeesport, according to Lefko.

At the Nemo, Johnstown, "Game Birds" also went over big.

"Breaking Into Jail" was featured at the Majestic, Butler.

Live News from Correspondents

CANADA

All exhibitors and film exchange managers of Winnipeg, Manitoba, are diligently planning for the first annual moving picture trade picnic for local executives and employes, with their families. The event is to take the form of an excursion to Winnipeg Beach on Thursday, July 13. Theatres will be manned with the smallest possible staffs for the day so that a maximum number can enjoy the outing.

Moving picture men of Winnipeg, Mantoba, have once more taken up the agitation against travelling carnival companies. The local theatre men have organized a committee which is preparing to wait on the Winnipeg City Council and also on the authorities in other municipalities of Manitoba to ask for a ban on carnivals and small circuses which are permitted to operate for a week at a time in the various centers. The arguments advanced are that the carnivals take much money out of a community, that the fee which they pay does not come anywhere near the taxes which theatres provide, and that the moral tone of carnivals is not always the best.

Tom Davies, special representative in Western Canada of Associated First National, has returned to Winnipeg after a four months' business trip through his territory. During his tour of inspection, Mr. Davies covered practically every city and town from Fort William, Ontario, to the Pacific Coast.

The Rex theatre, Winnipeg, is undergoing extensive improvements. In fact, a new orchestra floor is being constructed, a new brick front is under way, a new lobby has been built and a "screen stage" is being installed and a handsome marquee is being built over the entrance. Outside of these changes it is the same old Rex. Oh, yes! There is another change—a new owner, Mr. J. Weiner.

George A. Falkner, who assumed the management of the Vancouver office for the Regal Films, Limited, has been transferred as manager to the Toronto branch.

A new Kiwanis Club has been organized at Pembroke, Ontario, with Will Rowland holding down the classification of theatre manager in the new club, Rowland being the manager of the local moving picture theatre. Another member is Ed. Moxley, proprietor of a local hotel, who is the son of J. T. Moxley, manager of the Russel theatre at Ottawa.

A big ball was held in the Chateau Laurier, Ottawa, Ontario, on June 22 to mark the shooting of the final scenes of "The Man from Glengarry" under the direction of Ernest Shipman and the Ottawa Film Productions, Limited. The magnificent ball room was filled with a gay and festive crowd which included all those who had taken part in the making of the picture, officers and directors of the company, local theatre men and many local citizens, wives and daughters.

Preparations are already being made for the production of "Glengarry School Days" by the Ottawa Film Productions, Limited. Announcement has been made that Hector Carruthers of Ottawa is no longer secretary-treasurer of the Ottawa Film Productions, Limited, having resigned. Robert Stead, the Canadian author, is also off the board of directors of the company, having dropped out voluntarily.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

In the presence of President Harding, General Pershing, Secretary Weeks, and other notables, the Fifth and Sixth Regiments of Marines reproduced Pickett's charge at Gettysburg as the feature of an elaborate July 4th program on the site of the famous battlefield. Some twenty news-reel cameramen motored from Washington to Gettysburg to make motion pictures of the event.

Herndon Edmunds of Select Pictures Corporation has gone back to his first love, Paramount, and is serving the same trade with his old firm.

George E. Lenehan of United Artists Corporation has been at work in the territory including Baltimore on two different trips the past week.

William H. Moore, general manager of the Moore Theatre Corporation, has just returned from a three weeks' extended motor tour of the Atlantic coastal regions between Washington, Atlantic City, Philadelphia, Harrisburg and other points.

Edwin G. Dietz, local representative for Edited Pictures System, Incorporated, of 1115 Connecticut avenue, expects to return to New York next week, on the arrival of a new man to handle the Washington interests of the System which handles non-theatrical pictures for churches and schools as well as short comedies, etc.

Mr. Webster, of the Webster Electric Corporation, distributers for one of the projector machines, was another tourist the past week.

Loew's Palace this week exhibited a rather novel picture styled "A Trip Thru Filmland." It featured the Tidal Basin (Washington's) bathing beach beauty bathing suit contest the past week as a special attraction. Manager Beatus is still away on his vacation at Atlantic City.

Joe Young, formerly with Federated Film Exchange has joined the staff of Select Pictures, selling to the portion of this region formerly handled by Herndon Edmunds.

Loew's management announces the personal appearance, commencing Sunday, July 16, of Miriam Battista, 8-year-old star of Fannie Hurst's "Humoresque." Miss Battista will appear in connection with the showing of "The Man From Home," at the Columbia theatre.

ST. LOUIS

The Associated Press, with the assistance of the National Film Publicity Company, St. Louis, succeeded in obtaining some exclusive pictures of the mine war riot zone near Herrin, Ill., where nineteen strikebreakers were massacred by a mob of 2,000 men and boys, Thursday, June 22. The pictures were taken from an aeroplane by Cameraman J. V. Phillips of the National Film Publicity Co.

The Hoy Reporting Service opened its St. Louis office Monday, July 3. Miss Schofield, secretary of the St. Louis Film Board of Trade, is manager of the reporting bureau.

Samuel Werner of the United Film Service plans a trip to New York shortly to purchase features for his fall program. Werner, who holds the local Federated franchise, is the dean of the St. Louis film men and has handled some of the big productions put out.

Jacob Sprecht, 56 years old, of Caseyville, Ill., part owner of the Monroe Airdome, California avenue and Chippewa street, was murdered by bandits about midnight, July 1.

Neighbors who were attracted to the airdome found Sprecht lying in a pool of blood, a bullet wound in his right eye. He was rushed to the City Hospital where he died two hours later.

Sprecht acted as night watchman at the airdome. The police believe he was shot when he attempted to prevent four men from taking a trunk from the theatre. The murderers abandoned a stolen Ford automobile in the alley in the rear of the airdome after shooting Sprecht.

Fox's Array of Specials for 1922-23

A CHOICE array of special productions are announced by Fox Film Corporation for release during the season of 1922-23. The series include big photoplays of varied themes and settings, which are the results of the intensive combination of effort and wide resource of the entire Fox organization. William Fox himself has personally supervised each picture, and the direction has been in the hands of the most capable directors. Mr. Fox is at this moment in England conferring with the author of "If Winter Comes," the H. S. M. Hutchinson novel, with a view of adapting the book for the screen in the form of an additional member to his already enlarged array of specials.

Each of this interesting list of dramas will be backed by a unique and unusually substantial publicity and advertising campaign. Every conceivable angle of exploitation value in each production has been carefully and judiciously discussed, and the suggestions which are afforded the exhibitor are the results, not of one man, but of the composite ideas of the whole group. All posters, heralds, press books and other forms of papers have been similarly planned. Because of this thorough campaigning, the showman is being offered not merely theoretical exploitation and advertising suggestions, but concrete ideas which are based on experience and which have been studied from every standpoint and approved by the entire publicity staff.

Heading the procession of these master photoplays is the most talked of film on Broadway, "Nero." For the first time in the annals of American journalistic criticism, New York newspaper critics and trade paper reviewers were unanimous in their enthusiastic praise of this Fox special. Showing at the Lyric Theatre continuously since May 22, "Nero" has attracted record audiences despite the summer weather and the advanced admissions which are being charged.

The appeal which this special will have can be measured to a large extent by written testimonials sent to the offices of William Fox during the past month by members of the clergy, social leaders, business men and educators who have witnessed the pre-release showings at the Lyric. Hundreds of letters praising not only the artistic value and historical interest of this giant spectacle but its great influence for good, have found their way through the mails to Mr. Fox. Especially are clergymen of all denominations unlimited in their approval of the methods by which the great religious theme of the story was handled. Dealing essentially with a Christian plot element, the photodrama at no time over-emphasizes religion to the disadvantage of the universal moral it attempts to depict.

Following closely the popularity of this production is "Silver Wings," the Fox special, now entering the eighth week of a pre-release engagement at the Apollo Theatre, New York City, where it has been playing to excellent summer business.

"Silver Wings" features Mary Carr who won international fame in her portrayal of the mother in "Over the Hill," said by capable judges to have been the best contribution to the silent drama during 1921. The new feature play neither attempts to speak a moral nor offers a solution to the wide-spread problem of the modern home, yet skillfully tells a story of the tribulations of the American household in the face of the irreverence of the spoiled son. Mary Carr again essays the part of the mother and, in the words of noted critics, she again scores superbly.

"Silver Wings" was directed by Jack Ford and Edwin Carewe. Other well-known actors in the cast are Joseph Striker, Jane Thomas, and Percy Helton.

The next on the Fox program of specials is "Monte Christo" produced under the direction of Emmett J. Flynn. The picture is an adaptation of the masterpiece of the immortal Alexandre Dumas. Thousands have been spent in an effort to make this production an exact screen translation of the work of fiction, and as a result reviewers of all the national trade papers have acclaimed it as the finest photoplay of its kind.

John Gilbert is the featured player in this story of love, adventure and revenge during the days of the great Napoleon.

"The Fast Mail" is the fourth of the series for the coming season. It is an adaptation from the famous stage melodrama of that name which has entertained thousands of theatre-goers for many years. Lincoln J. Carter is the author of the story and will attend the Broadway premiere of the production at the Strand Theatre, New York City.

Following the engagement of the Carter melodrama, the Strand will show "A Fool There Was," another member of the Fox list for 1922-23. "The Fast Mail" was directed by Bernard Durning and represents in thrills the consummate effort of the entire Fox Studio organization.

In the screen adaptation, Charles Jones, who is cast in the leading role, carries the audience with him through a series of hair-raising events, including a hazardous steeplechase in which many riders are thrown and injured, a fight on the stairway of a burning hotel, a leap into a fire net from the fifth floor of a building, a jump from a hand-car to a speeding mail train and then to the tonneau of a racing automobile, and finally a leap from one steamboat to the deck of another a moment prior to an explosion which wrecks the former.

"A Fool There Was," with Lewis Stone and Estelle Taylor as the modern vampire and directed by Emmett J. Flynn, is the next special on the list. It is the adaptation of the play written by Emerson Porter Browne, inspired by Rudyard Kipling's famous poem, "The Vampire."

The picture is marked by an unusual attention to the detail of the original script, and considerable energy and expense were devoted to the erection of massive sets for the filming.

The picture boasts one of the finest all-star casts assembled in years, including such eminent players in the world of pictures as Irene Rich, who plays "the fool's" wife; Miss Marjorie Daw, the wife's sister; Mahlon Hamilton, "the fool's" friend; Wallace McDonald, one of the vampire's victims; William V. Mong, cast as "the fool's" butler; and little Muriel Frances Dana, aged four, as "the fool's" kiddie.

The next on the 1922-23 program is "Lights of New York," directed by Charles J. Brabin who filmed "While New York Sleeps." The new production covers a new type of photoplay and is made up of two separate episodes. Leading its cast is Marc McDermott, the noted veteran of the silent drama.

Harry Milliarde, who directed "Over the Hill," also directed "My Friend, The Devil," another special, the scenario of which was prepared by Paul H. Sloane. The picture was adapted from the famous French novel, "Dr. Rameau," by Georges Ohnet, which deals with atheism.

Charles Richman, the celebrated actor of the spoken stage, was selected to fill the requirements of the difficult role of Dr. Rameau.

"A Little Child Shall Lead Them," another special, is a dramatic masterpiece produced under the direction of J. Searle Dawley. This is not only a play which tugs at the human heart, it is a play of human hearts.

Another special for the coming season directed by Harry Milliarde is "The Town That Forgot God," the screen story of a small community whose blindness to its own iniquities brings the wrath of God upon it in the form of a devastating flood. Bunny Grauer has the leading part of a young orphan upon whom the community practices its neglect and its many cruelties. "The Town That Forgot God" is the work of an anonymous author, Mr. X., whose identity still remains unrevealed.

Other specials in preparation are "The Shepherd King" by Wright Lorimer, which is being staged by J. Gordon Edwards in Egypt and Palestine, and "If Winter Comes," the A. S. M. Hutchinson novel.

Release dates for the first eight pictures mentioned are "The Fast Mail," August 20; "Silver Wings," August 27; "Monte Christo," September 3; "A Fool There Was," September 10; "Nero," September 17; "Lights of New York," October 8; "A Little Child Shall Lead Them," October 15; and "My Friend, The Devil," November 19.

Great Expense for One "Monte Cristo" Scene

FOX FILM CORPORATION issues through its auditing department an interesting statement in which the figures are given of the cost of constructing and photographing the immense ball room scene in "Monte Cristo." The total expense incidental to the one scene is said to have been $183,100.

The actual cost of the mechanical construction, exclusive of tapestries, rugs, candelabra, sconces and bric-a-brac generally was $15,380. A great marble and onyx staircase, leading into the ballroom and down which Monte Cristo makes his first public appearance in Paris society, cost $5,120.

"Dressed," as studio folk designate a scene ready for shooting, which included furniture, painting, curtains, bronzes and specially painted murals, the set represented an actual monetary value of $130,300. Added to this initial cost comes the costumes of 100 "extras" garbed in the graceful and beautiful gowns of the Empire period, representing an outlay of about $21,600. The latter were in fabrics of panne velvet, brocades and satins, and expensive furs played an important part in the trimmings. Clothes of the men, made of equally expensive material, added another $10,700.

Eva Novak Marries Camera Man

Eva Novak, the charming blonde, who has been leading woman in many Fox pictures, particularly those in which Tom Mix starred, has "gone and done it." Eva and William Richard Reed, a cameraman, slipped off quietly to Riverside, California, last week and were married. To the license clerk, the bride gave her name as Barbara Eva Novak, age 23, and St. Louis, Missouri, as her birthplace. Mr. Reed bashfully admitted he was 26 years old and that he was born in Illinois.

Fox Pictures Shown All Over the Globe

REACHING out like giant antennae through the purlieus of space, William Fox productions cover the four corners of the habitable globe. First in the field at home, the endorsement of millions of American movie "fans" has been ratified by enthusiastic audiences in Europe, South America and the Far East, where Fox pictures, from the trivial laughter-rocking comedies to the mammoth spectacles such as "Nero" and "The Queen of Sheba," have been shown for years with ever increasing favor.

In the United Kingdom, Fox Film Company, Limited, with head offices at 13 Berners Street, London, W. I., directs the work of the branches in Liverpool, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Leeds, Birmingham, Cardiff, in Wales, Glasgow, Scotland and Dublin, Ireland.

Fox Film Corporation, Ltd., of Canada has its head offices in Toronto, Ontario, with branch bureaus in Montreal, St. John, N. B., Calgary, Alberta, Vancouver, B. C., and Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Sydney is the seat of the Fox Film Corporation (Australasia), Ltd., while in Melbourne, Victoria and Brisbane branch offices are also maintained. From Wellington New Zealand exhibitors are looked after by a Fox office in that city.

Continental and Central Europe is covered from the Paris office of Fox Film Societe Anonyme. Bureaus are maintained in Lille, Bordeaux, Lyon, Marseilles and Strasbourg, Brussels, Algiers in Africa and Geneva, Switzerland.

In South America Fox Film de la Argentina has its chief office in Buenos Aires, with a branch in Rosario and another in Montevideo, Uruguay.

The head office of Fox Film Co., Brazil, is in Rio de Janeiro, while a second office has been flourishing in Sao Paulo.

At present negotiations are under way for the incorporation of a company in Germany and in the Scandinavian countries. As a preliminary, offices have been opened in Berlin and Copenhagen.

In the Balkan States, Egypt, Palestine Syria; and in the Far East, Japan, China, Siam, Federated Malay States, Dutch East Indies and the Straits Settlements Fox pictures, which enjoy a wide and increasing popularity, are distributed through established agencies.

Fox Making Pictures from Famous Novels

FROM the indications of last year and the announcements for the immediate future it is apparent that William Fox looms as one of the heaviest buyers of the motion picture fiction in the market.

Among the purchased material for 1922 may be mentioned "Free Range Lanning," by George Owan Baxter. This western story instantly placed him among the biggest royalty-earning authors of the country.

"Alcatraz," by Max Brand. This story is unique in that it is about a wild horse of the western plains. The exclusive picture rights were bought for this by Mr. Fox for Tom Mix, and his famous horse Tony.

"Shadow of the East," by E. M. Hull, author of "The Sheik." The enormous popularity of "The Sheik" a book that broke all records for book selling is so recent that the shrewd business instinct of Mr. Fox in buying this book from her pen is obvious.

"Truxton King," by George Barr McCutcheon. The novels of George Barr McCutcheon have for years steadily maintained a prominent position among the best sellers of each year. His novels have a power of fascinating the reading and amusement-seeking public that no writer seems to be able to duplicate.

"The Splendid Outcast," by Geo. Gibbs. George Gibbs has the unique distinction of being a very successful artist and illustrater as well as a writer of best selling fiction. His stories are eagerly sought by the book publishers who realize the hold he has upon public affection.

"Mixed Faces," by Roy Norton. For years Roy Norton has traveled all over the world and his novels are noted for their extraordinary and dashing plots of adventure and love.

"The Fanner," by Kenneth Perkins. A delightful story that was instantly assigned to Tom Mix.

"One Way Trail," by Ridgwell Cullum. A thrilling western story that has proven its success with heavy revenue for the book publishers.

"Trooper O'Neill," by George Goodchild. A thrilling story of the lands adjoining the Arctic Circle.

"Dr. Rameau," the famous French novel by George Ohnet. The novel will appear on the screen under the title of "My Friend the Devil." It was directed by Harry Millarde—who is at present in England, producing "If Winter Comes."

"A Self-Made Man," by George Horace Lorimer. This author is the editor of the Saturday Evening Post and one of the widest read authors in the United States.

Striking Posters for Wm. Fox Specials

Wm. Fox Offers Strong Exploitation Aids

WITH a view of giving the exhibitor the best possible aid for exploitation purposes, Fox Film Corporation has prepared for the season of 1922-23 one of the greatest lines of posters and newspaper aids ever offered in conjunction with a season's picture schedule.

For "Nero," which has played to capacity audiences at the Lyric Theatre, Broadway, a number of excellent lithographs are offered to the exhibitor. There are two styles of striking 24 sheet stands; one, a pictorial depicting the Roman despot and his numerous paramours; and a combination pictorial and block letter poster of peculiarly pleasing and attractive effect. Two six-sheets, three three-sheets, three one-sheets and two half-sheet cards have been designed along the same artistic lines. Each of these are decorated with portraits and full size figures of the women who figured in the career of the Roman tyrant.

Throughout the series of posters used for this picture the "Vampire" theme has been emphasized. One of the 24 sheet stands depicts the Vampire scattering roses at the feet of the "Fool" and hissing the world famous expression, "Kiss me, my fool." A beautiful reproduction of the typical "Vampire" has been made in a four colored six sheet.

In all the posters for "The Fast Mail" the speed theme has been judiciously exploited. The slogan, "Speed Counts" has been used in an eye-catching 24 sheet, and is carried extensively through the advertising. The 24 sheet is especially attractive, depicting all forms of speed from a race horse to an aeroplane. One of the six sheets has a similar layout. Another six shows the front of a powerful locomotive in such realistic fashion that the engine seems to be rolling towards the spectator.

"Silver Wings," which has also enjoyed a summer run at a Broadway Theatre, will have the same careful preparation of advertising aids. The 24 sheet stand for this picture is especially attractive. It is a spread rainbow with head pictures of Mary Carr, who is featured in the picture, and the two men who enact the roles of her sons. The poster carries a strong message of home and mother love. This theme has been carried throughout the paper.

An elaborate lobby and pictorial display has also been prepared in connection with the presentation of "Monte Cristo." On a striking 24-sheet stand a picture of Edmund Dantes, with his arms outstretched, and the immortal words, "The World is Mine," for caption, is the picture idea.

On the other big specials already announced for release, an unusual variety of posters and other exploitation aids have been prepared with the same careful consideration given each subject. Special books have been prepared for the exhibitors to be used in connection with the presentation of William Farnum and Tom Mix. These books contain live newspaper stories, striking ads and elaborate scene cuts. In addition, an attractive series of posters has been prepared to be used in connection with these stars. An artistic slide, a de luxe two-colored exhibitors' campaign book with press sheet and exhibitors' aids, star, scene and ad cuts and mats, a circus herald, and a complete music score have been arranged for each production.

National Publicity Campaign for Fox Films

BACKED up by the most elaborate and far-reaching publicity and exploitation campaign in the history of motion pictures, the Fox Film Corporation product will go to the exhibitors next season with a broadside of advertising that will cover the country from Coast to Coast.

In the first place Fox is using a special list of newspapers in the key cities of the United States. These are supplied with stories of the Fox activities and its output, personality stories of the stars, star portraits, and scenes from the big specials. This is followed up each week with the same line of publicity to seventeen hundred newspapers throughout the United States, which are not only receiving the publicity matter, but are using it, as a check-up on press clippings.

In fact, the Fox out-put for next season contains so much human interest matter in the way of the stories themselves, big novels, famous players in the casts, interesting personalities, etc., that hundreds of letters are received at the Fox Office monthly from editors who seek copy for their motion picture columns.

Following up the newspaper campaign the Fox office again scores for the exhibitor with its campaign of personality matter in the "fan" magazines. There is not a big special that is being put out by Fox for next season, there is not a prominent player in the Fox pictures, that has not or is not now being thoroughly exploited through the medium of the "fan" magazines, both weekly and monthly.

In the newspapers hundreds of columns have appeared since the first of the year concerning the Fox pictures and players. Page after page has also appeared in the magazines with double and single page layouts of such productions as "Nero," "Monte Cristo," "A Fool There Was," etc., all of which creates a psychological effect and subsequent talk that will have its box office reaction when the pictures are shown in the towns and cities throughout the country.

While this publicity was started even before the first of last January, and has been growing steadily ever since it is just now that the department having this in charge is concentrating on its broadside for the opening of the season. It is being done largely through the newspapers, with their many millions of circulation and the motion picture "fan" magazines, whose circulation reaches seven figures.

"Silver Wings" Offers Exploitation

"Silver Wings," first of the list of Fox special productions for the season 1922-23 to receive its world premiere on Broadway, New York, where it is showing for an indefinite pre-release run, offers the exhibitor, by virtue of its universally appealing and elaborately developed theme, many opportunities for effective exploitation, according to the Fox office. The picture is now in the eighth week of its engagement at the Apollo theatre.

Fine Array of Fox Comedies for 1922-23

FOX Film Corporation announces a schedule of two-reel comedies for the season of 1922-23 which is unequalled in the history of the screen's fun-making art. The group is comprised of six distinct series including the comedies of Lupino Lane, the latest acquisition to the Fox constellation, Clyde Cook, Al St. John, the Lee Kidds, Sunshine Comedies, and Mutt and Jeff Cartoons.

Lupino Lane, who has been producing at the West Coast Fox Studios under the direction of Jack Blystone, will be first seen in a series of three two-reelers which promise unique situations in their unraveling. The titles of the comedian's first group are "The Reporter," which will be released August 20, "My Hero," and "The Pirate."

Clyde Cook offers a good series of productions headed by three following two-reel specials, "The Eskimo," "The Ghost Buster," and "The Arab." The famous Austran smile-provoker who beguiled Broadway audiences at the Hippodrome a short time ago has attained new standards of excellence in his latest picture for William Fox. Directed by Slim Summerville, "The Eskimo" will give the world a stitch in the side because it shows the excentric comedian at his best. August 27 has been set as release day for "The Eskimo."

"All Wet" is the title of the first of the series of comedies starring Al St. John, the funny fellow who has won a place in the hearts of picture "fans" with his unfailing drollery. This will be released to the exhibitor September 3, and will be followed shortly by "The City Chap." The comic actor both wrote and directed the production which heads his list of offerings.

The Lee Kids, Jane and Katherine, will be seen in a program of laughable two-reelers which will enhance their popularity. The first of their series is "Pair of Aces," which is to be released August 20. The second is "Kids and Skids," for which September 3 has been named as release date.

Sunshine Comedies will be better than ever, the first three to be released during the coming season, with the date of release, are "Splitting Hairs," August 20; "Puppy Love," September 3; and "Six Cylinder Bronco," September 17. The finest Mutt and Jeff Cartoons ever made will figure on the schedule for the new season.

Fox Assembling Strong Supporting Casts

WITH a view of building up casts worthy of the stars and special productions, players who have been starred or featured, screen favorites and names widely known in the motion picture world for their drawing power and talent, have been signed to support the stars and to appear in the big specials.

Bessie Love is the latest star to be engaged. Miss Love, who has appeared at the head of various big pictures in stellar roles, has been signed to play opposite John Gilbert in "St. Elmo." Nigel De Brullier, famous character actor, is another well known actor who will appear in this picture.

Another new screen favorite engaged is Ethel Grey Terry, who will support Dustin Farnum in his first picture of the coming season, "Oathbound." Maurice Flynn is also in the cast. Still another leading woman who will appear with Dustin Farnum is Doris Pawn remembered for her work in "Shame" and other big productions.

Renee Adoree will support William Russell in "Mixed Faces," and "A Self Made Man," and plays a prominent role in "Mone Cristo," which will be one of the big Fox specials. Ruth Renick is another well known leading woman who will play leads for Russell.

Shirley Mason will have an array of talent in her pictures. Alan Forets will be her leading man in "The Little Teacher," and the heavy will Earl Metcalf, who has been featured in big productions. Kate Price, well known character actress, is also in the cast. In other pictures Miss Mason will have John Herron as her leading man.

Tom Mix has two leading women engaged up to date. They are the youthful actresses, Patsy Ruth Miller and Claire Adams, featured in many productions. With Mix in "Just Tony" will appear Frank Campeau.

Charles Jones will have the support of Beatrice Burnham. Her first picture with Jones will be "Trooper O'Neil." Helen Ferguson has been engaged to play leads in other Jones pictures, and will also be seen in leading roles with William Russell. Wallace McDonald, former featured player and leading man, will support Shirley Mason in "The Unexpected Wife," and plays an important role in "A Fool There Was."

Eileen Percy, who plays the feminine lead in "The Fast Mail," will support Charles Jones. Estelle Taylor will play in leading roles.

Three B'way Houses Showing Fox Pictures

IN ORDER to show the exhibitors what its big specials can do Fox Film Corporation has arranged for Broadway pre-release runs of its leading productions which will have a general release throughout the country with the opening of the new season. To carry out this plan three theatres have been engaged, the Lyric, the Apollo and the Forty-fourth Street, with the probability of a fourth theatre before the close of the summer.

New York in summer-time is the playground of the United States. It is estimated there are a million transient visitors from over the country every day. Ninety percent of them are there for recreation.

Naturally they want to see the best advertised pictures and that means the Fox presentation showing on Broadway. Each picture opening for a New York run is extensively advertised in all the newspapers, the theatre and hotel guides and other publications. With a steady stream of transients pouring in and out of New York, word of mouth advertising of the Fox product travels all over the United States, and there is where the exhibitors over the country reap the benefit of the Fox New York runs.

At present the Fox pictures showing on Broadway are "Nero" at the Lyric Theatre now in its eighth week, and "Silver Wings" at the Apollo in its tenth week. In August "Monte Cristo" will open at the Forty-fourth street Theatre. "A Little Child Shall Lead Them" will go into the Lyric about Labor Day. About that time, too, another big special will be presented in another Broadway theatre. In the meantime The Mark Strand theatre played "The Fast Mail," the week of July 9 to be followed by "A Fool There Was," the week of July 16. These two presentations will be seen next in The Mark Strand theatre in Brooklyn, where they will continue their spectacular New York success.

"Nero" is the big Fox special made in Rome by J. Gordon Edwards with a cast of 35,000 people in some of the scenes. Silver Wings" is the great American home play featuring Mary Carr, the famous mother of "Over The Hill." "Monte Cristo" is from the famous story of Alexandre Dumas, with John Gilbert as Edmund Dantes. "A Little Child Shall Lead Them" is one of the super-specials that Fox has been holding in reserve. "The Fast Mail" is from the famous American melodrama by Lincoln J. Carter, and is the climax of action pictures. "A Fool There Was" is a modern version of the famous play by Porter Emerson Browne, founded on Rudyard Kipling's poem, "The Vampire," and is box-office proof.

By the time the Fox productions are released in the fall, seven of the big specials will have had Broadway runs, which will result in a general advertising of the pictures all over the country when they reach the exhibitors in the regular release.

Spectacular News Beats by Fox News Staff

SCORING one of the most spectacular news beats ever recorded, Fox News starts off on what promises to be another highly successful season, which will, according to Don Hancock, director-in-chief, break all past records.

Last March, Russell Muth, star stunt cameraman of the Fox forces, was sent to Italy to get pictures of Vesuvius in action. Muth, on his arrival in Italy, leased an airplane and waited for the Volcano to "shoot," when it did let loose, the plane, with Muth on board operating his camera, dipped and swirled about the mouth of the crater with the result that the cameraman was rewarded with scenes of the great volcano such as have seldom been seen before.

When the stunt had finished and as the machine was volplaning to earth something went wrong and it crashed. Muth was seriously injured, breaking his collarbone and his arm. The film, however, was saved and long before Muth was released from the hospital in Italy, the pictures had been shown to millions of people throughout the United States.

Another "exclusive" scored by the managers of the Fox News during the year was the picture taken of that wonderful painting of the war, the "Pantheon de la Guerre." This great allegorical picture which was painted in Paris by fifty of the world's greatest artists is on exhibition in the French capital. An entire building was built on the California, were made by eight rue de la Université for the hanging of this masterpiece. Arrangements were completed a short time ago for the removal of the painting to America for exhibition in several of the larger cities. When news of this reached the Fox offices a cameraman was immediately dispatched to Paris. He was instructed to get pictures of the painting. Fox competitors sneered. It could not be done, they said. It was done, and, as the managers of the Fox News reel affirm, it was done in a perfectly fair way, although the actual methods employed are a business secret.

A remarkable news reel "scoop" was scored when exclusive pictures of the race up Mt. Wilson, Fox cameramen. In this race a young man, with iron nerves, drove a racing automobile up the steep mountainside for a distance of nine miles. Along the steep incline are 144 jacknife turns and on the outside of the road drops of from two to three thousand feet. Despite these hazards, the drive was made in 27 minutes. Eight operators were stationed at various points of vantage along the road in order to photograph the action.

Correct Screen for Theatre an Excellent Investment

Impossible to secure Satisfactory Results When Using Wrong Type

By H. H. Magdsick and C. E. Egler

THE last step in the efficient projection of a satisfactory picture is the provision of a screen which will most effectively direct the light to the audience so that the images there formed may be seen without effort from every seat. It is desirable that the screen surface have a high reflection factor, but it is even more important that it direct a maximum part of the light back within the solid angle in which are included all of the seats, and that the light be so distributed within this angle that the screen will appear, as nearly as possible, equally illuminated from all of the seats. In the wide theatres the outer seats in front often make an angle of 60 degrees with a normal to the screen; in the narrower houses the angle is sometimes as low as 30 degrees, as shown in Fig. 27; in the vertical plane the lowest front seats are occasionally as much as 35 degrees below a normal to the screen, and the highest seats 30 degrees above it.

The distribution of light from a screen surface can be controlled by choice of material, its finish, texture, and configuration. The screens so far available meet the requirements fairly well in many theatres, but somewhat imperfectly in others; that is, there is not so great a diversity of light reflecting characteristics as would be desirable for greatest efficiency in each case. The three principal types in use are shown in Fig. 28, page 294, together with curves indicating the relative brightness as viewed from the different angles when a unit quantity of light is directed in a beam normal to the screen. Thus at right angles to the surface, the mat diffusing screen has a brightness of 1.0 unit and this is maintained at 0.94 units at 30 degrees from the normal, and falls only to 0.9 at 60 degrees; the semi-mat metallic surface, on the other hand, has a brightness of 3.5 units at right angles to the screen, but at 30 degrees it is reduced to 0.8 units, and at 60 degrees it is only 0.25 units. It should be noted that the areas included within the several curves are not at all proportional to the amount of light reflected from each screen.

Since with the mat diffusing surface shown in Fig. 28, page 294, the maximum brightness is well maintained at all angles, a screen of this characteristic is especially adapted to very wide theatres, such as that shown in Fig. 29. Although the outside front seats lie 65 degrees from the normal, the brightness in their direction is about 90 per cent. and the average brightness for all of the seats is 96 per cent. of the maximum. In general, the diffusing surfaces should be used where a considerable portion of the seats lie more than 40 degrees from the normal to the screen.

The smooth metallized surface, Fig. 28B, page 294, is especially applicable for the narrower houses, such as the one shown in Fig. 30, page 294. There the front end seats are about 40 degrees from the normal, but 97 per cent. are within 30 degrees, at which angle the brightness is still 0.8 units, and 87 per cent. are within 20 degrees, where the value is 1.6 units. The average screen brightness as viewed from the seats of this screen will, therefore, with this type of screen be 2¾ times what it would be with the diffusing type. The more usual case is that of the theatre of medium width, shown in Fig. 31, page 296, where the end front

NO exhibitor can afford to neglect his screen. Screens depreciate in their reflective qualities. It is quite possible that this depreciation, if extended to an extreme degree, will require twice the light from the projector to give a satisfactory picture, as was the case when the screen was new. The screen is a source of trouble if neglected.

It is of the greatest importance when selecting a screen for the theatre to study the type required. This article by H. H. Magdsick and C. E. Egeler, prepared for the bulletin, "Motion Picture Projection with Mazda Lamps" published by the National Lamp Works, explains in detail the functions of the various kinds of screens. Each type is best fitted for theatres having certain characteristics.

To thoroughly understand this subject requires thought and study. The article herewith presented offers a splendid opportunity for the exhibitor and projectionist to become acquainted with this subject. A careful study may be made to the advantage of all those interested in the screening of the picture.

The Correct Screen

seats make an angle of 50 degrees with the normal. But even here 88 per cent. of the seats fall within 30 degrees of the normal, and all of these seats receive more light from screen B than from screen A; in fact, about 2½ times as much for the average. For the remaining 12 per cent. the screen appears only about one-half as bright as would one of the diffusing type.

The beaded surface, C, Fig. 28, has a somewhat lower maximum brightness than the semi-mat metallic surface, but higher values at angles of about 35 degrees and beyond. The brightness of the diffusing screen, on the other hand, is somewhat higher at all angles beyond 20 degrees. The beaded surface finds its best application in theatres of medium width. In the house shown in Fig. 31, page 296, 71% of the seats fall within 20 degrees of the normal and these will receive about twice the brightness that would be directed from screen A, but in the directions of the remaining 29 per cent. the average brightness will be only 60 per cent. as much as from A. An important consideration is the fact that the bead screen can be cleaned by washing and hence it is likely that its reflecting power will be maintained at more nearly its full value than will be the case with surfaces requiring repainting or refinishing for their restoration from accumulations of dirt, which in service reduce the reflection factor very greatly.

In the foregoing, reference has been made only to the light distribution in the horizontal plane, but since the seats are at various elevations the brightness distribution in the vertical plane must also be considered. This is especially important in view of the fact that the three types of screen surfaces act differently in reflecting the light received at an angle with a normal to the surface. From the metallic surface screens, for example, the reflection is to a considerable extent specular, as from a mirror; that is, the general direction of the reflected beam makes an angle with the normal equal to the angle of incidence, as in Fig. 32 B, page 296. A metallic surface screen in the theatre shown in elevation in Fig. 33, page 296, would give an unsatisfactory distribution of light if placed in position 1. Position 2 would favor the front seats at the expense of those in the rear and balcony, but position 3 would give a well balanced distribution of the light. Tilting the screen backward at the top assists in raising the angle of maximum brightness in case the screen cannot be mounted at the desired height. The comfort of the audience must also be considered in determining the best screen position; if it is too high, those near the front cannot be at ease in viewing the picture. The bead screen reflects a maximum brightness in the direction of the projector, as shown in Fig. 32 C, because the specular part of the reflection is largely from that part of the glass bead surface normal to the beam. Obviously this screen finds its best application in theatres where the seats are not far below the projected beam. The direction from which the incident light is received has little effect on the distribution from the diffusing screen, as shown by Fig. 32 A, page 296.

The screen brightness necessary to produce the best pictures varies with the reflecting characteristics and texture of the screen surface employed. The most satisfactory brightness appears to be materially lower with a diffusing type of screen than with those giving a pronounced directional distribution. This tends to make the results with the diffusing screen relatively

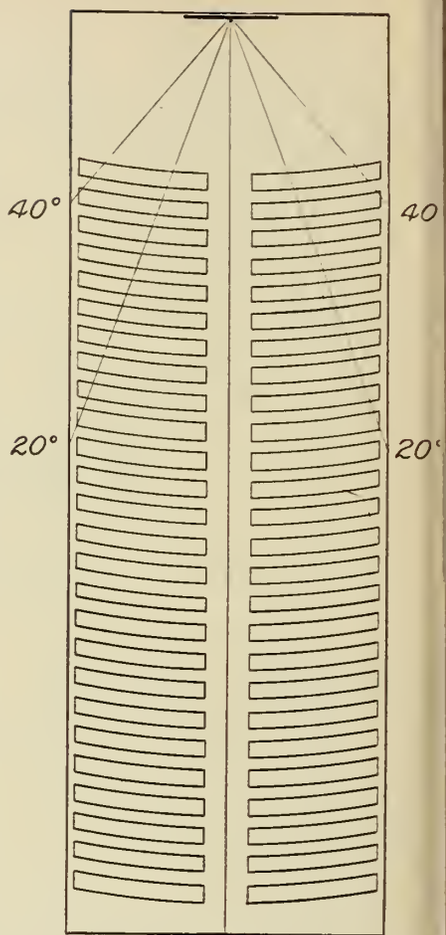

Fig. 30—Eighty-seven per cent of the seats in this narrow theatre fall within 20 degrees of a normal to the screen. The average brightness of a semi-mat metallized screen surface as viewed from this audience will be 2¾ times that obtained with a diffusing screen

Battleship Linoleum Defined—

The term "Battleship" has been misapplied so widely to solid-color heavy linoleums, regardless of their quality, that its real meaning is often lost sight of, even among architects and in the floor-covering trade. Here is the explanation.

In the first place, the designation "battleship" linoleum is not now, and never has been, the trade name of any single manufacturer's product. Instead, it stands for a fixed and inflexible standard of quality — a standard so high that this material can withstand even the most severe conditions of battleship service.

"Made According to U. S. Navy Standard"

Genuine battleship linoleum—of U. S. Navy Standard—is made according to the exacting specifications of the Navy Department for linoleum to be used on the decks of naval vessels. It must prove up under various tests, some of which are: the bending test, indentation test, absorption test, and burlap test. Other requirements concern the necessity for highest grade materials, uniformity of color and finish, seasoning, etc.

Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum is genuine battleship linoleum. It conforms in all respects to U. S. Navy Specifications and should not be confused with so-called battleship linoleums which do not conform to the Navy Standard.

Purchasers of Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum are doubly protected—first, by the specifications prepared by the United States Navy Department, which insure the very highest quality; and, second, by our Gold-Seal Guarantee, which pledges "Satisfaction or Your Money Back".

better than would be indicated from the respective brightness values given in the above discussion. An additional factor to be taken into consideration is that a lower order of brightness suffices for the seats nearer the screen than for those farthest away. Although for a given light source the screen brightness decreases somewhat with the larger pictures, as may be seen from the illumination values of Fig. 24, there is a compensating factor in that the brightness required for a good picture decreases as the size is increased.

The proportions of the theatre, the range of the seat elevations and the position of the projection room with reference to the stage must therefore all receive careful consideration in the selection and mounting of the screen. The relative size of the screen images is in direct proportion to their distances from the projector. When the light is projected at a considerable vertical angle from the normal to the screen, the picture will be noticeably wider at the bottom than at the top. The distortion of the picture as well as the distribution of screen brightness to all parts of the audience accordingly imposes limits in the design of a theatre. The architectural treatment of a new theatre can readily be adapted to produce conditions for favorable screen results. Placing the projection room lower than has been common practice even in the newer theatres will assist in the projection of good motion pictures.

Great Activity Shown in Construction of Motion Picture Theatres

CALIFORNIA

Hollywood—Work will begin immediately on the new Peggy Joyce Theatre by Peggy Joyce and her business partner, Oliver Morosco. Site chosen on west side of Highland Avenue at the intersection of Yucca Street. Seating capacity 1,200, of the 15th century Italian type. Ground 100 by 150 feet. Associated in the venture is Mrs. Clarice MacQuarrie. The architects are O. B. McCormick, Howell Terrace Apartments and Marcus Pretica of Seattle, Wash. Earl B. Newcomb, 912 Pantages Building, is consulting engineer. Structure to represent an outlay of $1,000,000.

Sawtelle—Modern motion picture theatre to be erected on the northwest corner of Sixth Street and Santa Monica Boulevard. A group of theatrical men are negotiating with Dr. Fielding of Los Angeles who is owner of the property.

CONNECTICUT

Momauguin—Moving picture theatre to be erected and opened by Thomas Reilly who plans to operate same.

KENTUCKY

Burlington—W. A. Edrington is building a motion picture theatre on the land he purchased recently from the late Capt. John Smith.

Somerset—A modern theatre will be built by T. E. Jasper on Mt. Vernon Street, according to recent plans.

MASSACHUSETTS

Boston—A lot of land at 2026 Columbus Avenue in the Egleston Square section containing about 24,000 feet has been purchased by the Palmer Amusement Co., who will erect a new building to be used for a playhouse. Lot has frontage of 155 feet. Theatre will seat 2,000 people, and be fireproof. Arthur H. Bowditch is architect. Theatre in rear of building, stores in front, and large public dancing hall on second floor front.

NEW JERSEY

Paterson—Excavating started on eight-story theatre and hotel building, Church and Market Streets, announces Jacob Fabian, 209 Main Street, seating capacity of the Alexander Hamilton Theatre to be 2,700, ground 125x164. Architect, F. W. Wentworth, 140 Market Street.

NEW YORK

Cortland—It is reported that Meyer Shine is soon to build a new theatre in Cortland.

Babylon—Contract for the new $100,000 vaudeville and moving picture theatre to be built on Main Street has been awarded to M. D. Schluensen of Riverhead by J. H. Phillips, owner. The theatre will have a frontage of 75 feet and a depth of 145 feet. Seating capacity will be 1,100.

Hudson Falls—New theatre to cost between $75,000 and $80,000 to be built by Cohoes Amusement Company. Plot purchased south of Masonic Temple building in Main Street, with a frontage of 50 feet, extending easterly 140 feet. Four offices in front of the building on the second floor. Architects, Wetmore & Crandall, Glens Falls, N. Y.

Jackson Heights—Samuel Sheer, president of the Sheer Amusement Company, has announced the purchase of ground in the city, where they will erect a motion picture theatre to cost $250,000. Theatre to have a seating capacity of 2,000.

Livingston Manor—Fontana & Sons have commenced operations attending the erection of a modern motion picture theatre on their Main Street property and immediately adjoining the building now occupied by them as a store. Structure to represent an outlay of $50,000. Plans call for brick and concrete structure, ground 50x150, with provisions for two stores in front and offices on the second floor. Contract given to James C. Cummings of Norwich.

Lyndbrook, L. I.—A new motion picture theatre is to be built by F. M. Kehr which will be of brick and one story in height according to plans by H. G. Wiseman, 25 West 43rd Street, New York City. John McKeefrey & Sons of New York have been awarded the contract to build this theatre.

New York City—The church at 35 East 125th Street, has been leased to the Shapiro Company who may remodel it for a moving picture theatre.

Old Forge—Plans are drawn for a $50,000 theatre and assembly hall, owner of which is R. E. Thompson. Building will be fireproof, of cement and steel, two stores on each side of the lobby. On top of the stores will be five apartments. Architect, S. W. Cassidy, Old Herkimer Natl. Bank Bldg., Herkimer, N. Y.

National Anti-Misframe League Forum

Dear Editor:

Am writing in haste and trust that this reaches you safely in record time.

At present I have only enough labels to last me until the first of next week so the first item is—please send me a new supply.

The next item will be pertaining to those new League buttons. I am enclosing the amount in stamps and hope to be sporting my new pin in the near future.

(Jerry turn the crank) and the next item will be something that might interest some statistic hound. I am operating two Powers machines here at the Globe and they are equipped with G. E. Mazda adapter projection lamps. The fact which pleases me as much as everything is the mileage which my lamps have given me. Following are the number of hours which were carefully computed for the last five bulbs I have used. (1) 162 hours, (2) 172 hours, (3) 188, (4) 238, (5) 150. The fourth one was a freak and if I thought anyone would be interested I'd tell you about it, but won't this time. Mazdas are a step forward in modern motion picture projection.

I am constructing a combined stereoptican and spot lamp using a 500 watt concentrated filament bulb as the light source. If it is completed to my satisfaction, I will surely write and tell you more about it. I have been making considerable money by furnishing special lighting effects at home talent plays and the like around here.

Will have to close for this time, so trusting that I hear from you soon, I am striving for the success of the N.A.M.L., I beg to remain,

Very truly yours,

Alignment of Intermittent and Cam Shaft

We have received an inquiry from Brother E. H. McGee of the Pastime Theatre, Belton, S. C., regarding the correct alignment of the intermittent and cam shafts on a Powers 6B projection. As we felt that the manufacturer could give the best information on this matter, we turned over Brother McGee's letter to the Nicholas Power Company and are here publishing the reply forwarded by the Power Company:

Mr. E. H. McGee, Pastime Theatre, Belton, S. C.:

Dear Sir—We are in receipt of a letter from Mr. Abbott, Technical Editor of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, INC., requesting that we write you direct with reference to the proper alignment of the intermittent and cam shafts on your No. 6B projector.

When you find it necessary to insert new parts in the intermittent movement, the simplest procedure is to insert the parts and have the eccentric bushing No. 670 set up in its proper position, so that the pins of the pin cross do not bind at any point, leaving the small bushing on the right hand side of the carriage free.

After you are sure that the pin cross and cam and the bushing are in proper position, then slip out the cam and shaft, turning the pin cross without the cam and shaft being in the carriage until you feel that it runs smoothly and does not bind in the bushing No. 671, at the same time setting No. 671 bushing. Then tighten up the screw holding this bushing in position and slip in the cam and shaft.

Using a calibre gauge does not always indicate that the shafts are in alignment. It is of great importance that the two shafts be exactly in alignment in order to obtain the best results, and the procedure above explained is the one we follow in the factory.

It is not necessary that the hole in the bushing and the hole in the carriage meet. You will notice there is an oil channel cut in both the large and the small bushings and this oil channel takes care of the proper lubrication of the bearing.

When inserting a new sprocket on the shaft, you will notice a scratch or score mark in the hole of the sprocket on one end. This side should be inserted on the shaft first, because the hole tapers slightly. The sprocket should fit snugly and if any difficulty is experienced in putting the sprocket on the shaft, we would suggest that you first dip the spindle in oil and wipe it off carefully with a clean rag. Then insert the spindle again in oil and with a twisting motion place the sprocket on the shaft and be careful that the shaft is supported when putting in the taper pins so as not to spring it.

Trusting these suggestions will enable you to put the movement in proper alignment, and awaiting your further favors, we remain,

Very truly yours,
NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY, INC.

THE first page article presented in this department this week treats in a comprehensive manner the subject of the motion picture screen. There is no other subject on which there is a greater variety of opinions, based, as a rule, on hearsay.

It is strongly recommended that the projectionists carefully study as well as read this article on screens. The data and explanations contained therein are the results of extensive tests conducted by parties disinterested in the promotion of any particular type of screen.

Dear Ed:

Enclosed herewith please find 25 cents in stamps for which you will please mail me one of the new membership buttons.

I have been intending to order it for some time but have been so busy on my radio outfit that I haven't had the time. However, I always have time to read the Forum when the NEWS arrives.

I am in a particularly big rush this A.M. and will have to forego the pleasure of writing a letter for the page but shall write pretty soon as I have some new things fixed up that might prove of interest to some other brother.

Trusting that I shall receive the button in due time, I am,

Very truly yours,

NATIONAL ANTI-MISFRAME LEAGUE PLEDGE

AS a motion picture projectionist who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the projection-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in reasonably good condition, according to conditions of film when received. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother projectionists and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

TransVerteR

Reduces Your Power Bills And Makes Better Pictures

Motion picture projection in theatres the country over has greatly improved since the perfection of TransVerteR—the original series arc M-G outfit, which set a new standard for the entire industry.

TransVerteR changes alternating current into direct current which is more suitable for projection arcs. It automatically supplies only such voltage as is needed for the arc, and no wasteful, current consuming ballast is used. It uses less current than any other device, and is therefore more economical to operate.

It is easily adjusted for light and dark portions of film. TransVerteR gives the projectionist perfect arcs, clear-white, steady light that is easily directed and controlled. It makes possible the projection of clear, sharp-lined pictures which patrons appreciate and come again to enjoy.

Write today for TransVerteR Facts. Room for only a few here—but you should know all of them.

What a Complete Modern Ventilation System Does to the Air

INVOLVING an expenditure of $15,000, a new air cooling and ventilating conditioning system is being installed at Grauman's Rialto Theatre, Los Angeles, Sid Grauman announced today. The system will be in working order within thirty days.

The system, which is being installed by the Tiltz Engineering and Equipment Company, Los Angeles, calls for the installation of a rotary air conditioner and the erection of a steel structure for its support. The air conditioner is a highly perfected machine for washing and cooling the air, consisting of a huge steel chamber filled with a very dense spray of cold water. The spray is created by an electrically driven impeller travelling at high velocity. The air in passing thru the spray chamber is thoroughly scrubbed, all dust and dirt being entirely removed. The system will provide for the comfort of the patrons in warm and cool weather alike, cooling the air from fifteen to twenty degrees according to the requirements of the atmosphere.

After the air has been washed and cooled it is drawn through special eliminating apparatus which removes all excess moisture, leaving in the air the amount of moisture which has been found to procure the most comfortable feeling to the skin. The air is drawn by suction into powerful electrical ventilating apparatus and huge ducts which distribute it evenly throughout the theatre. The vitiated air is constantly removed from all parts of the theatre by means of powerful blowers, keeping the theatre filled with only cool fresh air.

The capacity will be 60,000 cubic feet of air per minute, changing the air in the theatre every three minutes. In order not to interfere with the patron's enjoyment of Mr. Grauman's presentations, the work is being done during the night and early morning hours when the theatre is closed.

Exhibitors in Ohio Redecorating and Installing New Equipment

The movie business may be rather quiet out here right now, but it is only the lull before the storm. That exhibitors of Ohio are looking forward to a come-back in the fall is evidenced by the fact that many of them are using the dull season to redecorate their houses, and to install new equipment, so as to insure better service to the public in the fall.

W. C. Denney, manager of the Cleveland office of the Argus Enterprises, gave out the following list of equipment orders received for immediate installation :

Ceramic Theatre, East Liverpool, O., of which William Thalman is manager, is putting in an entirely new equipment, including two Simplex projection machines, a Minusa Screen and a Westinghouse generator.

George Manos of the Rex Theatre, Toronto, O., has placed an order for a new crystal bead screen and snaplite lenses.

The Cadiz Theatre, through its manager, R. H. Minteer, has arranged to have a complete Ilg ventilating system.

Art Rice of the Temple Theatre, Willard, O., has ordered two type-S Simplex automatic arc controllers and a Hertner transformer.

The Star theatre, Sandusky, will blossom forth with a new Simplex projection machine, with complete G. E. equipment, snaplite lenses and a new crystal bead screen.

In addition, the building of several new motion picture theatres has been announced, among them being a 1,000-seat house at Niles, to be erected by the McKinley Amusement Company; a new 1,200-seat house, to be erected by Louis Adovasic of Youngstown, and the New Mozart theatre, to be erected in Canton by Manager Abrahams of the Odeon theatre, Canton.

Bend—Construction of a $25,000 theatre building here is planned by D. T. Carmody. Carmody has purchased a site on Wall Street for about $4,500. Theatre will have a seating capacity of 700, and will be constructed of brick.

PENNSYLVANIA

North Braddock—Lena Krongold purchased a lot 120x130 feet with one 3-story brick building and two frame buildings at Hawkins Avenue and 4th Street, N. Braddock for $33,600. The buyer will build a motion picture theatre.

Titusville—Announcement is made of an arrangement made with Hon. J. C. McKinney and the Morosco Holding Co. of New York City to erect a theatre, McKinney Theatre, located on the two lots and rear property, 117-119 West Spring Street between the J. D. Dusckas block and the N. A. Johnson Building. New building estimated to cost $100,000. Theatre will cover 80 feet x 100 feet and be connected with the arcade which faces the street. Seating capacity 760.

M. Kassel Enlarges his Studio

M. Kassel of the Kassel Studios, is at present making special lobby display paintings for most of the exchanges in the United States and on the special showings in New York for the Universal features, "Human Hearts" and "The Storm."

It is interesting to note that Mr. Kassell's work has been so successful that he has found it necessary to enlarge his staff of artists very materially. Miss R. Hume, who has recently joined this staff, stands out prominently as one who shows great promise of rapid advancement due to her natural abilities in this line of work.

Mr. Kassel is also making sets of paintings for the Fox special features using color schemes similar to those now decorating the lobby of the Lyric Theatre, New York City, where "Nero" is being presented.

Among other works of Mr. Kassel are special lobby paintings for "Silver Wings" when it was presented at the Apollo Theatre, New York City and "The Fast Mail," Mark Strand Theatre. The big R-C feature in the George M. Cohan Theatre, New York, "In the Name of the Law" comprises twelve elaborate paintings produced in the Kassel Studios.

"God's Country and the Law"

Arrow-State Rights—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WHEN you give your patrons a Curwood story, you are certain to give them a feast for the eye. The atmosphere of the North country is never left out. "God's Country and the Law" is charming in its backgrounds, and after the spectator has dwelled upon the open vistas there isn't much left to consider. The story is trite, unoriginal and lacking in suspense and surprises. You know, once the characters are introduced just how every incident will develop. And each one works out according to Hoyle and Curwood.

The author has made his story a psychological study in a way. A bootlegger is the god of the machine and he conveniently dies more through a torment of soul than through any physical disability. Don't overlook the fact that the Mounted are in the picture. It would not be a Curwood otherwise. And it is their duty to pursue the rum runner who finds sanctuary in a brace of cabins. From that point the story develops conflict of an exceedingly arbitrary kind. The bootlegger abducts the woodsman's wife but she plunges into a turbulent stream rather than accompany him. The Mounted rescue her and her husband registers happiness to find her safe from the clutches of the bad man. The villain stumbles on through the forest and mad through fear and remorseful, dies of heart failure.

The picture is pounded home with sledge-hammer direction. There is nothing subtle or suggestive indicated. An idea is given you in a caption, then if this wasn't enough a map is drawn so you can get the substance of it. There is too much emphasis, which, of course, makes the action look forced. William H. Tooker lends a ruggedness to the role of the bad man while Gladys Leslie, when she is not overacting, manages to extract sympathy through her charm. Fred C. Jones is the husband and plays the character well. But anyone who lives far out in the open places will not appreciate this woodsman's sense of protection. He leaves his wife in a lonely cabin without a gun in sight.

By James Oliver Curwood. Directed by Sydney Olcott. Released by Arrow Film Corp.

The Story—Rum runner evades the Mounted and seeks refuge in cabins. He abducts a trapper's wife who manages to escape. She is found by her husband. The bootlegger travels on in the forest, mad with fear. This brings on a fatal heart attack.

Classification—Treats of Canadian Northwest with rum runner evading the law. The villain encounters the Mounted who pursue him.

Production Highlights—The open places which have been caught by the director and his cameraman. The good work of the cast. The scene when the wife escapes from the villain.

Exploitation Angles—Here is a Typical Curwood story with a typical Curwood title. You should be able to cash in on it through proper emphasis of a teaser campaign. Use the usual ballyhoos, prologue and lobby display which you have planted for other Curwood stories.

Drawing Power—Will be liked by downtown trade and in all neighborhood houses. The outdoor appeal will attract them.

"The Dictator"

Paramount—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE South American revolution is one of the oldest plots in screen fiction and one of the most useful. Take "The Dictator" for example. This stirring story by Richard Harding Davis, an author who started the fashion for comic-opera warfare, follows the familiar pattern, and, with Wallace Reid in the role which William Collier made famous upon the stage, and which subsequently was acted upon the screen by John Barrymore, not so many years ago—patrons are certain to be well entertained. It keeps moving and discharges a generous amount of action and suspense notwithstanding the fact that the general outline is easily anticipated.

It's the type of picture which brought Fairbanks his popularity and the leading role is actor proof. The nonchalant Wally frolics about having a good time outwitting the desperadoes, but the acting honors belong to Walter Long. He actually steals the picture in his portrayal of a taxi chauffeur who is determined to collect his fare from the elusive son of the banana king. The two Americans are condemned to work their passage on the boat taking them to the tropics and the scene calls for much physical action as well as a generous sample of humor. Once they reach port, Reid and Long have real work cut out for them. The star puts over some Fairbanksian high jinks in his ability to climb walls and mix in fights. He rescues the chauffeur from a firing squad and saves the heroine from the villain. And before you know it he has won the revolution by means of blank cartridges.

The scene which shows Long about to be executed will be remembered as one reaching the height of absurdity. The heavy earnestness of the actor makes the episode uproariously funny. But don't think for a minute that the picture has been produced around a single incident. It is crammed with enjoyable scenes of a semi-humorous character—there being plenty of melodramatic and romantic interest to provide a happy balance. The star has lost some of his dash and spontaneity, but due to the rapid-fire action you don't notice that he is off his form. Walter Woods' scenario and James Cruze's direction are praiseworthy. They have kept the picture and the players on the jump throughout. The atmosphere and other technical details are exceedingly well arranged. "The Dictator" is good enough to run any time, anywhere, in any house.

The Cast

By Richard Harding Davis. Scenario by Walter Woods. Directed by James Cruze. Photographed by Karl Brown. Produced by Famous Players.

The Story—Millionaire's son owes taxi fare and is pursued by chauffeur. They are imprisoned on steamer sailing for South American republic and when they dock are forced to fight for their lives. The hero rescues the chauffeur from a firing squad, saves the heroine, and wins the revolution.

Classification—Melodramatic romance dealing with a dashing American winning a South American revolution. Plenty of action.

Production Highlights—The easy performance of Wallace Reid. The fine character work of Walter Long who adds a burlesque portrait to his role of the chauffeur. The atmosphere. The fast-moving action. The capable acting of the supporting players. The well arranged scenes and direction of players by James Cruze.

Exploitation Angles—This picture presents a deal of high lights for exploitation. Dancing the maxixe or tango would fit in well for an atmospheric prologue. You can tie-up with book-dealers for a sale of Davis' novels. Your lobby can represent a tropical background showing a courtyard—the walls to be decorated with arms and ammunition. For a street stunt you can use your employees to ballyhoo. They can be garbed correctly. The title can be used for a window tie-up—such as "the dictator in quality," or "the dictator in styles."

Drawing Power—Is certain to go big in all communities. Popularity of star and fast-moving action and romance see to that.

"The Fast Mail"

Fox—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

NO better picture material could be selected than Lincoln J. Carter's melodramas which brought patrons to their feet with an array of stirring scenes. "The Fast Mail" which probably eclipsed all the others in its physical action has been adapted to the screen, and it is certain to make the blood tingle even in the veins of an anaemic spectator. The gallery gods will stand right up on their hind legs and shout for joy.

"The Fast Mail" is melodrama of an almost riotous brand. Which is to say that it contains everything. An exciting horse race? You said it. A race between two Mississippi stern-wheelers is pictured with full value for the suspense. It is a vivid scene. Then you have the smashing episode of the fast mail, from which the play and picture obtained its title—an episode which shows the hero leaping from an auto to the bridge of a locomotive and making another leap from the engine to a car. Finally the picture after a crescendo of ever-increasing suspense finishes with a crashing fire scene—with the hero rescuing the girl from the clutches of the evil villain.

The incident is well put together so that lapses in the continuity are never noticed. You don't even imagine that it is all wildly improbable. You don't even stop to laugh at some of the ridiculous detail—so rapid is the action and the execution of the various stunts. Charles (Buck) Jones will surprise you. He is a human dynamo here. You never expect to see him apply himself to such rugged heroics after witnessing him in easy performances. Yet he makes his work easy through an adaptability which might well suit Fairbanks.

What if it is a story showing the triumph of virtue over villainy? What if the hero has to flirt with violent death to save his sweetheart? What does matter is the fact that you may class it as sure-fire entertainment. "The Fast Mail" will be remembered for that Mississippi shot with the boats racing onto Vicksburg. The hero urges the skipper to make speed. Will he catch the leader which is carrying the villain? The latter's boat explodes through the pressure put upon its boiler. The railroad incident is rip-roaring melodrama and realistically picturized, while the horse race gives an inkling of the punch which increases with every turn of the camera. While it is episodic in construction you don't have time to think of the gaps because there is something doing every minute. From the moment that the black mammy tells the girl's fortune through the tea leaves the spectator knows that the fireworks will begin soon. He is not kept waiting.

Carter's plays carry serial qualities, and "The Fast Mail" out-serials any serial for crisp and snappy action. Say it with stunts. Say it with popularity for Jones. Eileen Percy does her best work as the heroine, while Adolph Menjou is as evil as any cartoonist's Desperate Desmond. The atmosphere is appropriate except for one shot which presented California mountains against the Mississippi valley road.

The Players

Charles (Buck) Jones
Eileen Percy
Adolph Menjou

By Lincoln J. Carter. Scenario by Agnes Carson and Jacques Jaccard. Directed by Bernard Durning. Photographed by Don Short and Geo. Schneiderman. Produced by Fox.

The Story—Westerner visiting girl in Southern city frustrates plans of gamblers and her weakling brother to disgrace her. He is tricked out of winning the Derby, and gives chase to the crooks by leaping aboard the fast mail. He catches the villain eventually in a house which is subsequently destroyed by fire.

Classification — Adaptation of Lincoln J. Carter's thrilling melodrama which revolved around a horse race, the run of the fast mail, a steamboat race and explosion, and a fire. Melodrama all through with a dash of romance for seasoning.

Production Highlights—The vigorous acting of Charles Jones who proves himself a daredevil. The steamboat race and the explosion of the leading boat. The horse race when Jones is thrown. The fire scene and rescue of the girl. The atmosphere. The fast-moving action.

Exploitation Angles—Give it to 'em strong. Tell them it is adapted from Carter's old thriller. Make a play for the old timers who remember the stage production. Tell them in every conceivable manner the interesting highlights. Pound it home with advertising accessories and plenty of copy and teasers.

Drawing Power—Will go like a house afire in the downtown theatres. Will be liked by everyone who possesses red blood.

"A Self Made Man"

Fox—4920 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS is a typical Satevepost story in that it concerns the making of a man—the type of story which is invariably found in every issue of the publication. Since none were forthcoming at the appointed time George Horace Lorimer, the editor, wrote one around the character of the millionaire's son who conquers his indolence and goes to work. Patrons who have been looking at William Russell's pictures the past season and remarked about the absence of colorful action and incident need have no fear that these qualities are missing. After a rather poor start the feature swings into high and finishes with a fine burst of speed.

The introductory footage is disappointing because you expect a quota of heroics. Instead you see a sample of comedy which is not ingenious in conception, nor spontaneous in execution. The hero, the son of a Wall Street magnate, has a trained bear in his apartment, and the animal and the antics of the owner are supposed to provide the humor. After this episode is completed the story presents its conflict and your interest is awakened. It is a simple theme, showing the hero's father in competition with a rival financier. The latter's son is pictured as a chip of the old block—willing to work for the success of the business while the hero is given to pursuit of pleasure.

Since Russell is the star and plays the part of the indolent youth—and since the title informs you of the development of the story, it stands to reason that you can anticipate the ending. There is some smashing incident which introduces a fight between the two sons for control of a certain stock. While slightly under five reels in length, the director has managed to keep it moving with very little recourse to padding. The love interest involves a quarrel which is patched up when the heroine aids the youth to get on his feet, financially. Thus he saves the business and with the girl's encouragement wins back her love.

Lest it be forgotton, we might add that the hero's father had disowned him for his frivolous habits. The story is not original but it provides a good program picture for the star. Russell makes his work convincing and Renee Adoree as the heroine is attractive and spirited enough to make any youth hustle to win her affection.

The Cast

William Russell
Richard Tucker
James Gordon
Harry Gribbon
Renee Adoree

By Geo. Horace Lorimer. Scenario by Monte M. Katterjohn. Directed by Rowland V. Lee. Photographed by David Able. Produced by Fox.

The Story—Girl breaks engagement with rich man's son because of his refusal to work. When latter is disowned he comes to his senses and with the girl's financial aid saves his father from ruin. He conquers his indolent habits and wins her affection.

Classification—Story of business entanglements centering upon disowned son who goes to rescue of parent and saves him from ruin. Romantic interest.

Production Highlights—The work of William Russell who portrays a self made man in convincing fashion. The fight between the two sons. The exciting climax. Plenty of action once story gets started. Competent support.

Exploitation Angles—This one should succeed with your patrons who are not too discriminate in their taste. The action and incident should please the masculine portion of your audience. Play up the title and use the theme for newspaper copy and a teaser campaign.

Drawing Power—Good for second class downtown houses and in all houses where Russell's pictures are popular. Will please the average audience.

"The Young Diana"

Paramount—6580 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

IF this is a sample of what Paramount is going to offer film fans this coming season—well this jaded old world is in for a surprise, at least as far as motion picture entertainment goes. If there ever was a picture that has everything, this one is it. To begin with there's one of the finest casts ever assembled. It includes besides the star, such well known artists as Maclyn Arbuckle, Forrest Stanley, Gypsey O'Brien and Pedro de Cordoba. Second, it is produced with absolute disregard for expense. It is the most lavishly mounted picture Cosmopolitan has ever offered the Paramount program. Third, the gowns worn by Miss Davies constitute a style show which will be a valuable asset for you in exploiting the picture to your fair sex patrons. Fourth, the story has a "different" angle and it holds the interest every moment. Fifth, Miss Davies appears in two extremes of characterization, first as a young girl, then as a woman 20 years older, grey haired and approaching spinsterhood. Sixth, the Ice Carnival scenes will set a new standard for lavishness. Here is pantomime and tableau, color, novelty, beauty—all mixed into a series of scenes unapproached in gorgeousness.

One could go on indefinitely enumerating the wonders of this production. Albert Capellani and Robert G. Vignola have directed the picture in praiseworthy manner and Luther Reed has admirably adapted Marie Corelli's colorful tale to the screen. Miss Davies in this picture has been given her opportunity. Her work as the young girl, then as the aged spinster, later as Mademoiselle Galatea, brings out histrionic ability heretofore not believed to be in her possession.

Joseph Urban's settings are quite the acme of perfection and he has outdone both "Enchantment," and "Beauty's Worth," in elaborate screen mounting. The ice carnival scenes will set a high mark for others to shoot at.

The story is one possessing novel twists. It deals with the hunt for eternal youth which carries the audience through a series of weird and thoroughly enjoyable adventures. Just as one starts to think how unreal it all is, we find it nothing but a dream and we find ourselves immensely pleased with it all and the observer will be puzzled right up to the close, as the outcome of the story. "The Young Diana" is an attraction that should help to usher in the most successful season in the history of the industry.

The Cast

Diana May.....Marion Davies
Mr. May.....Maclyn Arbuckle
Commander Cleeve.....Forrest Stanley
Lady Anne.....Gypsey O'Brien
Dr. Dimitrius.....Pedro de Cordoba

Scenes from "The Dust Flower," with Helene Chadwick, Claude Gillingwater and James Rennie. A Goldwyn picture

By Marie Corelli. Directed by Albert Capellani and Robert G. Vignola. Scenario by Luther Reed. Photographed by Harold Wenstrom.

The Story—The plot has an English locale and its complications are due to the desire of a parvenu father that his daughter, Diana, shall marry into society. The father has affected interest in science and wants her to choose Dr. Dimitrius as her husband. Diana, however, is in love with a British naval officer. In a dream that carries her through some of the most weird adventurcs ever pictured on the screen, she sees the commander eloping with another woman and twenty years pass. Dr. Dimitrius restores her to youth, which does not, however, bring her happiness because love has departed.

Classification—A superb picturization of the dramatic story which ran serially in Hearst's Magazine and was later published in book form. Transferred to the screen in lavish and intensely interesting manner.

Production Highlights—The gorgeous gowns worn by Miss Davies. The lavish and beautiful settings by Joseph Urban, especially those showing the Ice Carnival at Montreux. The very excellent cast. The apparent disregard for expense as far as mounting is concerned. The weird home and office of Dr. Dimitrius in Switzerland. The restoring of Diana May to youth. The meeting, 20 years later, of her old sweetheart and the stormy scenes that follow. The deep, luxurious interiors. The fine interpretation given a difficult dual role by Miss Davies, who here contributes her best work to screen literature. The scenes at the Paris opera, where the star as Mademoiselle Galatea startles the French capital with her beauty.

Exploitation Angles—There is no limit to them in this one. The star's popularity. The gorgeous gowns. The Ice Carnival. Drug store tie-ups on the elixir of life theme. Put on a Beauty Show. You can get some great prologue ideas from the Ice Carnival scenes which will also give you suggestions for lobby dress. Play up the name of the author and arrange for book store displays of her works, including this story. This is a picture where the more you spend in boosting it the more you'll get out of it at the box office.

Drawing Power—The finest theatres in the world can put this one on and reap a golden harvest. It should go anywhere, anytime. Exhibitors who can't make money with an attraction of this calibre should open butcher shops—they'll find the bacon there.

"The Dust Flower"

Goldwyn—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

A THOROUGHLY satisfying story of a modern Cinderella, containing a clean, wholesome plot, the characters of which are portrayed by a cast of uniform excellence. The players are one of the big features of this production and one will go a long way before he will meet up with such a sterling character actor as Claude Gillingwater, who in this film play gives another of his inimitable portrayals—that of Steptoe, the butler. Of course, it's always a real delight to watch Helene Chadwick act and in the role of Letty, a flower who rises from the dust of the slums to affluence in the "400," she again proves that she is on the road to a place with the big stars. These two dominate the picture and should be given credit for lifting it to a place in the sun.

Basil King wrote this story and it is a better box office attraction than "Earthbound." The plot opens in a slum cabaret and we are given some good shots of life on New York's lower East Side. Here we are introduced to Letty, a girl of the tenements. Miss Chadwick's beauty cannot be dimmed even by the sordid surroundings in which she starts her unusual adventures. And as we see the evolution of the girl into a noble and happy woman, we are given some fine close ups of Miss Chadwick's personal attractiveness and some beautiful gowns.

The picture has a smooth running story. There is a little padding, and there are a few very noticeable breaks where some careless cutting has been done. Outside of this the plot holds the attention throughout. There's action from the first scene to the final fade-out. The feature is not without its comedy moments, most of which are supplied by Steptoe, the butler. There is a good stunt introduced which may be turned to advantage in putting the picture before the public and that is where the butler, after all the old servants have been dismissed, hires former service men to take their places.

Edward Peil as the stepfather has the heavy role and is convincing in it. James Rennie is the leading man and is adequate in a part that does not call for much effort. Mona Kingsley is good as Barbara, the fiancée and a society belle. There are a number of dramatic moments in this picture, among them being the rescue of the heroine and their immediate marriage; the meeting between the bride and the fiancée; the scenes between the hero and the stepfather, especially the fistic battle at the close and Letty's putting aside all her fine gowns for the rags of the slum when the fiancée gets her to quit her husband. "The Dust Flower," like all Goldwyn attractions is finely mounted throughout.

The Cast

Letty	Helene Chadwick
Rashley Allerton	James Rennie
Steptoe	Claude Gillingwater
Barbara Wallbrook	Mona Kingsley
Judson Flack	Edward Peil
Ott	George Periolat

By Basil King. Directed by Rowland V. Lee. Scenario by Charles Kenyon. Photographed by Max Fabian

The Story—Letty Gravely attempts to end her miserable existence by plunging into a lake and is saved by Rashley Allerton, a millionaire. He has just been turned down by his sweetheart and has threatened to marry the first girl he meets. Letty accepts his marriage offer more as a protcction than anything else. Arriving at the palatial Allerton home, Rashley finds a repentant note from his former fiancéc. He visits her and tells her of the sudden marriage to another. Barbara, the fiancée, demands that he dismiss the girl. His wife, however, feeling that Rashley would be happier with Barbara, runs away. Rashley traces her to a slum cabaret where her stepfather has forced her to work as a cigarette girl. A terrific fistic encounter between the stepfather and Rashley ensues. Rashley wins. He takes his wife home where he learns that it was Barbara's scheming that turned his bride from him. He sends Barbara away forever.

Classification—An entertaining society drama dealing with the romance of a modern Cinderella.

Production Highlights—The fine cast, especially the work of Miss Chadwick and Mr. Gillingwater. The slum scenes. The luxurious interiors in the Fifth avenue mansion. The fashion show at a Fifth avenue shop, where some startling gowns are presented to the audience. The battle between the hero and villain. The beautiful photography and lighting. The meeting between the wife and fiancée.

Exploitation Angles—The fame of the author, Basil King. The fashion show. The cast. There's a chance for a tie-up with local legion posts in the part where the new lady of the house dismisses all the servants and the butler, engages all former service men. Beauty shop tie-up suggested by the evolution of the slum girl to a society beauty. Might use the Cinderella theme in putting over a tie-up with your local shoe store. Offer to give a pair of shoes free to the girl who can get into them. You can boost this one.

Drawing Power—Should prove satisfying entertainment anywhere. Suitable for the best houses. But advertise it. Any good picture will fall down if you lay down.

"Smudge"

First National—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

HERE it is—something different. Yet, "Smudge" resembles other Charles Ray productions sufficiently to identify it with the star's numerous successes. The same Charles Ray, the difference being in story, a pronounced departure from anything Mr. Ray has done, recently, but one that presents him to advantage. However, this is the first feature picture with the story founded upon the necessity of protection for fruit crops in California, where the occasional frost makes necessary the use of stoves in the groves to counteract the chill that would otherwise destroy the fruit yield. Until the inventive young mind of the hero contrived a smokeless heater, the country round-about the fruit groves became all "smudged up" following use of the frost prevention. On this informative basis has been well worked out an interest-compelling plot, a cross between comedy and drama, and in either instance, of great general appeal.

Added to the splendid cast is the evidence of painstaking direction. Abundance of beauteous exteriors in California locale, photographed by competent camera-men, it is safe to guarantee the photography as pleasing, the interior scenes being well lighted, with photography throughout, above average.

A clean, refreshing entertainment is "Smudge." There is just enough love interest to hold to the end which completes an altogether satisfactory production. It is a picture on which an exhibitor may depend not to offend those inclined to be "touchy." Ten chances to one, it will please all who patronize the attraction.

The Cast

Stephen Stanton	Charles Ray
John Stanton	Charles K. French
Mrs. Clement	Florence Oberle
Marie Clement	Ora Carew
Purdy	J. P. Lockney
Mrs. Purdy	Blanche Rose

Story by Bob Wagner. Directed by Charles Ray. Produced by Arthur S. Kane-First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc.

The Story—In the small town of Citrona, southern California, the population, especially the women folk, launch a campaign against "smudge" resulting from the use of heaters, throwing off a soot, and thereby damaging wearing apparel and delicate furnishings, but often saving fruit crops. Stephen Stanton, who has inherited a Citrona newspaper, is in sympathy with the reformers, incurring severe opposition of city politicians, his own father and the competing newspaper. At the close of a bazaar, given to raise funds to carry on the anti-smudge crusade, Stanton, only recently out of an eastern college, sees for the first time the smudge pots in action, with deplorable results. Stanton and a lovely girl are victims of a frame-up by the enemy, one that compromises the girl and threatens Stanton's integrity. Together, they make a thrilling escape from captivity, arrive back in Citrona in time to save the situation and launch Stanton's invention of a smokeless heater.

Classification—Comedy-drama with interesting and informative foundation, clean, adaptable to all ages and classes of audiences.

Production Highlights—Escape made by Stanton (Charles Ray) and girl with whom he is abducted and placed in position threatening ruin, for both young people's reputations. Scenes showing interior of newspaper plants, the presses in action and the race over the long trail by motor.

Exploitation Angles—Tie up with dealers in small heating apparatus. Might combine advertising with local races, printing plants and take advantage of any bazaar under way.

Drawing Power—In any theatre, it will please those who admire Charles Ray.

"Colleen of the Pines"

Chester Bennett Production—F. B. O.—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

IN territories where melodrama is popular, this picture should meet with favor. There are some excellent points, considerable suspense, a fair cast, double love interest. However, it is melodrama undefiled, although much above the average. The story is laid in the Saskatchewan country, where two lovely daughters keep house for their father, a stern, unyielding Scotchman. There is a dyed-in-the-wool villain, a trustworthy half-breed Indian, and a hero, member of the Royal Mounted Police. Because of lack of sympathy between father and daughters, the girls indulge in secret love affairs, which bring about a series of misunderstandings, the development of a rather interesting plot.

Jane Novak delivers a convincing interpretation of Joan, known to her lover only as the main title implies, "Colleen of the Pines." Charlotte Pierce as her younger sister Esther portrays an impetuous child in an appealing manner. Both girls are pretty and are well cast for the respective roles.

The male members of the cast might have been improved upon. Especially is the father over-acted. Yet "Smoke" Turner as the half-breed Indian, makes considerable out of a minor part. Those who are called upon to fight, do it convincingly. Edward Hearn, as the hero, rides well. The picture has marked scenic value and has been well directed. Photography A-1.

The Cast

Joan Cameron	Jane Novak
Barry O'Neill	Edward Hearn
Duncan Cameron	Alfred Allen
Paul Bisson	J. Gordon Russell
Esther Cameron	Charlotte Pierce
Jules Perrault	Ernest Shields
Jerry-Jo	"Smoke" Turner

Story and scenario by J. Grubb Alexander. Directed by Chester Bennett. Photographed by Jack MacKenzie.

The Story—Joan Cameron lives in the Saskatchewan country with her father and sisters. Both girls fear the unyielding Scotchman and therefore exchange confidences only between themselves. Jules Perrault, a trapper and sort of dandy, makes love to the young sister, who, after a while, elopes with him, during her father's absence. Paul Bisson, the factor, would make Joan his unwilling wife and bargains with her father that he may gratify his lust. At the psychological moment along comes a member of the Royal Mounted, Barry O'Neill, who captures Joan's heart, and calls her "Colleen." He is obliged to return to headquarters with a prisoner. During his long absence, Esther returns, carrying a baby, and explains her predicament to Joan, who, upon her father's sudden return from a trapping expedition, claims the baby as her own. Thereafter develop complications, injustices and unhappiness, with all explained leading up to the happy ending.

Classification—Melodrama of the northlands. Of good scenic value.

Production Highlights—Escape of Joan with the infant. Attack of faithful dog upon villain, who follows Joan, and attacks her half-breed Indian protector. The dog saves the situation by destroying the bad man. The scene is well done.

Exploitation Angles—Could be used in tie-up with furriers, since the characters dwell in that land where fur bearing animals are trapped. Also could tie up with vacation expeditions.

Drawing Power—Appeal to popularity of Jane Novak as star. It is possible to advertise her as charming in the role of a dream girl of the northlands. Do not fail to cash in where melodrama is in favor. Followers of thrilling escapes and hazardous stunts will find it pleasing.

"Grandma's Boy"

Associated Exhibitors—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

HAS the picture millenium arrived? Here's a five part comedy that is actually filled with new stuff. Surely such a picture is to be regarded as an event in this industry. We have had five part comedies galore, but they have contained situations that Noah used to make his animals laugh. Here, however, one gazes upon a continuous flow of absolutely original mirth, a succession of ludicrous situations guaranteed to provoke the risibilities of a grouchy Eskimo.

"Grandma's Boy," answers the nation-wide call for clean, entertaining pictures. With its release in the fall, we predict an epidemic of giggles spreading in its wake from coast to coast. If exhibitors want to start off the new season with a real novelty, a sure box-office winner, they will make no mistake in putting this one down. Grab it quick and beat the other fellow to a barrel of money.

Harold Lloyd as Grandma's Boy is inimitable. We nominate him for the Nobel comedy prize. If there is none, there should be. There has never been a role similar to this one in the history of the silent art. It's an enviable achievement. While there's lots of fun, there is much food for thought also. The plot is built around a sacred Yankee ideal, courage. Ever and anon as the action bounds onward, we are pulled up and landed into a situation of touching tenderness. These moments are supplied by the scenes between Grandma and her meek, modest, retiring grandson, whose boldest act, according to a subtitle was "to sing out loud in church."

With the space at hand, one can't begin to enumerate all the amusing stunts or thrilling scenes. There's the episode of the well, when the rival gives our hero a ducking and his new suit almost shrinks right off his back.

Then comes the donning of grandfather's 1862 model with each pocket loaded with camphor balls. When Lloyd dumps some of these into a candy box and then eats one himself in mistake, his rival following suit, we have a sure-fire comedy moment. Grandma shines his shoes with goose grease, which attracts first one and then a harem of cats who begin to lick it off as he tries to woo the girl. He scares the felines away with a china dog. The hunt for the tramp, realistically played by Dick Sutherland in the course of which Harold gets scared, runs into a barn, and brings down almost the entire contents thereof is another hilarious moment. Following this experience he rushes home and jumps into bed, clothes and all. In the morning he realizes his cowardice, his utter uselessness and then follow Grandma's relation of the heroism of his grandad during the Civil War. This act of heroism is depicted on the screen in wonderful manner, with Lloyd playing the role of grandad. When the story is over, our hero comes into possession of the magic charm, which is supposed to have kept grandad from harm. Once he gets possession of this charm, Lloyd becomes a different boy. Then things start in earnest.. The pursuit for the tramp begins with no end of thrills and fun ensuing. Of course, Harold captures him single-handed. And when that "bad egg" is finally landed in the town hoosegow, the audience is just as exhausted as he—buts it's from laughter. Just a word for the fine direction, photography, mounting and cast. Mildred Davis is as attractive as ever as Lloyd's leading lady. "Grandma's Boy," is as near perfect a picture as it's possible to make.

The Cast

Grandma's boy ..... Harold Lloyd
His girl ..... Mildred Davis
His grandma ..... Anna Townsend
His rival ..... Charles Stevenson
The Rolling Stone ..... Dick Sutherland
The Sheriff ..... Noah Young

By Hal Roach, Sam Taylor and Jean Havez. Directed by Fred Newmeyer. Scenario by T. J. Crizer. Photographed by Walter Lundin. Titles by H. M. Walker.

The Story—Grandma's boy is a coward. He's in love, but his rival is a bully who makes his life miserable. One night when the boy and the bully are calling on our heroine, the sheriff arrives with word that a tramp has robbed the town jewelry shop and shot a citizen. A posse is organized at once with the boy as one of the deputies. He gets lost from the bunch, finds himself in a barn when he has a terrible time. Then grandma tells him how his grandfather, himself a coward, with a magic talisman as his aid, redeemed himself and made himself a hero in the Civil War. Grandma gives the boy the charm. He goes out, captures the tramp and fights the bully to a standstill.

Classification—An invigorating, clean five-reel comedy holding the laugh record to date. Original in theme and treatment.

Production Highlights—The meeting of Lloyd and the tramp. The Civil War episode. The well ducking and suit shrinking. The camphor ball, barn razzing, tramp trapping, bully beating moments and a hundred other "blues" destroying scenes. The fine work of Lloyd and his cast. The beautiful photography. The realistic mounting. The originality of theme.

Exploitation Angles—Tell your patrons that this is Harold Lloyd's best picture. Play up the star to the limit and tell them that the picture is the last word in originality, with a laugh in every few feet of film. The producers have issued a great line of paper and exploitation aids on this one. Use it all. One of the novelties offered are Harold Lloyd goggles. Give these to the boys in the neighborhood and they create a lot of talk. Give a special show for Grandmothers and have the newspapers write about it. Might invite the crippled children or orphans of your town for a free show. The kids will have the time of their lives and newspapers can be tied up with on the stunt. There are a hundred and one things you can do to put this one over.

Drawing Power—They'll fight to get in to see this picture if you let them know how good it is by advertising. This picture is suitable for presentation in the best theatres in the country and it will clean up.

"Frivolous Wives"

Fidelity, S. R.—5000 Feet

(Reviewed by John Oscar)

HERE'S a picture—evidently a re-issue or else just dragged from the shelf, dusted off and turned loose, due to the enormous popularity of Rudolph Valentino—which will certainly not help the popularity of this star, and while it will draw on a one-day run, because his name is featured, don't get tied up with it for more than one or two days, because those who see it the first day are going to kill business for the next day or two.

It's a picture in which Rudolph is the villain—a real bad boy, who makes love to a married woman, and marries her step-daughter, in order to be near said married woman, and who is quite the most brutal villain you ever saw. He spends his time sending oblique glances of scorn at the foolish married woman, who supplies him with spending money, and chases his wife, in a satin nightie, round and round her room, finally being repelled and driven out in a manner strangely reminiscent of the old time ten-twent'-thirt' days by the faithful servant, with an upraised cross.

It's a picture in which the married woman, to show how utterly devilish she can be, insists on her husband sending her to the seashore, in the winter—the sub-titles make it pitifully plain that the misguided lady wants to spend the winter at the seashore, when sane people usually go in the summer. Anyway, there isn't much rhyme or reason to the picture—and the modern, up-to-date flapper who composes the major division of the followers of the "Sheik-ish" Rudolph are going to find it hard to believe that any woman would run from Rudolph—especially when she was married to him.

The picture is valuable if for no other reason than to demonstrate the tremendous progress motion pictures have made since they wore long skirts, high collars, and served cocktails with dinner, with a saloon going merrily on every corner—about three years ago.

The Cast

Fiske Connelly ..... Edward Jobson
His daughter, Mary ..... Vera Sisson
Her fiancee ..... Frank Newburg
Ethel, Connelly's second wife ..... Kathleen Kirkham
Roberto di Francinni ..... Rudolph Valentino
Annie Mullins, the maid ..... Lillian Leighton

Directed by Joe Maxwell. Produced by Maxwell Productions. Distributed by Fidelity Pictures. (State Right.)

The Story—Ethel, the beautiful second wife of Connelly, contractor, and millionaire, is conducting an affair with Roberto di Francinni, whom she supplies with pocket money. Mary, her step-daughter, is engaged to a rising young lawyer—but to further her own ends, Ethel helps Roberto to win the girl, and marry her—though he really loves Ethel. Several years elapse—Ethel and Roberto quarrel—Ethel is killed in an accident, and Roberto tells Mary the truth—that he does not love her, never did, and married her only for her money. There is a scene in which Roberto attacks Mary, and she is protected by Annie, the faithful Irish housekeeper. Roberto, fearing that he may be implicated in the disappearance of Ethel, flees the country, and Mary, her marriage to him annulled, marries the lawyer.

Production Highlights—There is only one—that's Rudolph Valentino. His name alone is all you've got to count on—he is as good-looking though not quite as polished an actor as in more recent productions—the quarrel his admirers will find with the picture is his role.

Exploitation Angles—Again Valentino's name is all you have to go on. The story is a bit sex-y, now and then, and you can dig up some "teaser" stuff—"how many people really understand what marriage means" (this from a sub-title) and another caption gives you a hint, "A drama of the moment, in which certain facts about marriage that are all too seldom discussed, are treated in a frank and appealing manner," etc. But the bigger you carry Valentino's name, the better for the box-office—on a one-day run!

Drawing Power—Because of the fact that Valentino is in the picture, it will draw in even the better houses, but it is a picture that will disappoint nine out of ten of his followers. In the "blood-and-thunder" houses where they aren't too critical, you might put it over, by good, hard plugging. But the best thing you can do with it—is let it alone!

"Speed 'Em Up"

(Century-Universal—Two Reels)

HERE you have Harry Sweet playing the role of a farmer's helper while Johnny Fox is his assistant. The latter has with him some bottles of "Pepo," a few drops of which are guaranteed to put pep and speed into anything. Some of the precious liquid is dropped into the sheriff's motorcycle and it makes a getaway. A few drops are put in the chicken feed and the hens are busy dropping their "fruit" everywhere. We next see a barn dance and Johnny has enough "Pepo" left to put in the ice-cream. This causes the old ladies to start flirting with the rustic finale hoppers. The boys and old men are batting a high average too. Finally the romance intrudes and Harry and the farmer's daughter elope. The comedy carries some snappy hokum and is good for a hearty chuckle most of the way.—LAURENCE REID.

"Beyond the Horizon"

(Kineto Review-Urban—Two Reels)

SOUNDS like a feature. Instead, it is a trip via the screen to the Australian cities, Sydney and Melbourne, beginning with the trip thereto. There, we find the modern city of Sydney, which is down-to-date to the extent that the seekers of primitive methods of existence journey on to Melbourne, where they land at the fashionable resort of St. Kilda. There are many interesting points to cover in this far away city, which are realistically reproduced on the screen with refreshing effect. Superior pictorially. Delightful photographically.—LILLIAN GALE.

"High Life in New York"

(Urban Classic—Two Reels)

The usual educational or informative short subject, does not offer thrills. In this one, no death defying stunt of the serial could outdo the breath-taking risks caught by the camera. Instead of referring to high society life, the main title points upward, to spots upon skyscrapers illuminated with thousands of electric bulbs, some composing signs, others clocks and even weather indicators. It does not occur to the casual looker-on, that the small lights that make the large signs possible, are subject to cleaning and replenishing, the same as everything else. Close up views of the men undertaking this hazardous work, is a part of the film, while men who work upon skyscrapers in the making, going up with the building, as it grows, are seen staring death in the face without a blink of an eye-lash. One of the little pleasures in life for this sort of stunster, is making necessary repairs upon bridges that span deep rivers, at great heighths. There is a good laugh at the end, when the 21 foot minute hand of a huge electric clock points to five P. M.—LAURENCE REID.

June 6, 1922.

Mr. Louis J. Selznick,
Selznick Pictures Corporation.
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

Being a staunch advocate of the idea of bestowing praise where it is due constrains me to write and inform you that for downright delightful motion picture entertainment the Selznick production "Reported Missing" with Owen Moore as the star, which we are playing this week at the Victoria Theatre ranks amongst the best for many a day. It is splendid, tingling comedy-melodrama, replete with excitement and thrills and fun, with lots of punch and every other element that goes into the making of real screen entertainment of the highest quality. It is one of those rare combinations of artistry in star, direction, cast and every other detail, even to the most minute, which enter into the making of a picture that merits enthusiastic approval from the public who love motion picture in their most entertaining estate

That the public has placed the stamp of their approval on "Reported Missing" is evident at the Victoria Theatre where it is going over in wonderful style. On Tuesday the critics of the daily papers were enthusiastic in their praise of the production. The comment we heard as patrons left the theatre illustrated the fact that they too, were given keen enjoyment. But then, with a picture that is so nearly perfect as this one, there could be nothing else but praise evoked. There is never a moment when the entertaining qualities of this production lags and rarely has Owen Moore been seen in a picture that so effervescently combines genuine humor with good melodrama. To sum up, "Reported Missing" is a gem containing 90 per cent of the qualities for pleasure which motion picture fans look for.

I remain

Your very truly,
Jules E. Mastbaum

Catch the box office punch of that title.

Visualize the words spread across your lobby with a smashing big cutout of the girl's figure as shown on the right. It's the subject of the impelling six sheet.

This is a feature with the dramatic lure which sells tickets; the kind of an offering that never fails to pull.

A beautiful, reckless girl who loves to play with fire. A strong, determined man so deeply in love that he would wager his life for her.

A trifler of dubious morals who plays with her adventuresome nature and leads her on. Then the big moment when the hero follows, fights, saves, scorns and forgives her in a final dramatic jolt.

Everything is in your favor. Play it up strongly.

BOX OFFICE PREPAREDNESS

William Fox presents this superb super-series of proven Box-Office winners that have crowded the special New York City Theatres in which they have been shown

The FAST MAIL

Released August 20th

The livest, speediest, highest-class super-melodrama ever made—a wonderful proven money-making first-run attraction. It thrilled and packed the great Strand Theatre of New York.

"The best out and out thriller seen in a long time."—N. Y. Sun.

"Silver Wings"

Released August 27th

One of the most successful Box-Office attractions ever developed—a superb picture of motherhood and charm—now playing to crowds in the Apollo Theatre, Broadway and 42nd Street, New York City.

"The cleanest, finest picture I have ever seen."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

MONTE CRISTO

Released September 3rd

Tested and proven Box-Office money maker. Played to crowded houses in Boston, Denver and Los Angeles—it is destined to be an even greater standard of success than its fortune-making stage play.

"See 'Monte Cristo' if you have to mortgage the old homestead."—Denver Times.

A FOOL THERE WAS

Released September 10th

Inspired by Kipling's famous poem—Kipling's writings have made him and his publishers enormously wealthy—he is the most successful living writer to popular taste in the world—a wonderful picture and a wonderful Box-Office Money-maker.

Opens at Mark Strand Theatre, New York, July 16.

NERO

Released September 17th

Every family—every churchgoer, knows of Nero and his gorgeous, dissolute, Christian-burning, barbaric reign, and of his calloused burning of Rome—it is the pageant sensation of New York's summer where it has filled—and is still filling—the Lyric Theatre, 42nd Street and Broadway, New York.

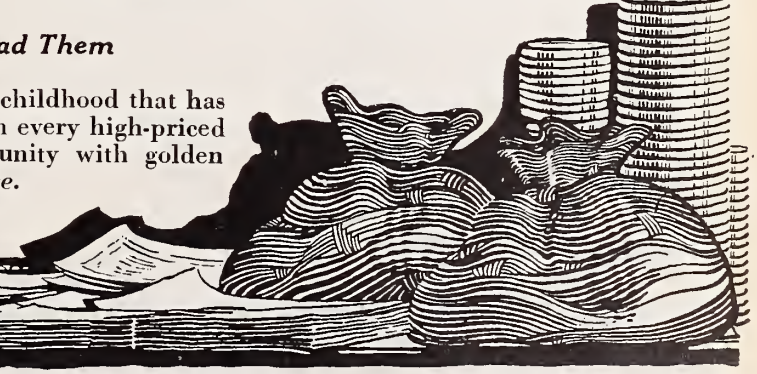
Lights of New York

Released October 8th

New York! From its upper to its lower crust—one of those sure-fire pack-'em-in profit makers that every exhibitor always asks for!

My Friend the Devil



Released November 19th

A masterful story superbly directed that starts audiences to telling their friends about it—the best kind of business for an exhibitor's box-office.

A Little Child Shall Lead Them

Released October 15th

A golden story of golden childhood that has won golden opinions from every high-priced expert—a golden opportunity with golden returns for every box-office.

VARIETY: "'Shattered Idols' is way above the average and should be given runs in any of the first run houses. A rather unusual story which Edward Sloman has directed splendidly. The big scenes are remarkably handled. Scenically, the atmosphere of the story is well developed and the character touches in all of the roles are most decided.

AMUSEMENTS, Minneapolis: "Teeming with thrills and action, this picture is fine entertainment. A strong climax, a surprise ending and a final punch which sends audiences away satisfied. Filled with exploitation possibilities.

FILM DAILY: "The producers have succeeded in bringing I. A. R. Wylies novel to life. The adaptation has been given suitable presentation, and a capable cast selected with evident discretion. Marguerite De La Motte looks truly Oriental. James Morrison offers his best performance as the crippled son."

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: "A lavish production that has great possibilities. Acting distinguished because of its profound sincerity. Frothingham and Sloman, the director, have mastered the art of creating an atmosphere."

The Long Pull Ahead

ONE of Babson's recent "barometer letters" to the business men of the country is entitled "A New Era in Advertising."

Its application is broad; it is addressed to merchants of all kinds and to the movement of all kinds of goods, but it might well be aimed at the exhibitor alone.

In general, the letter says: Advertise!

Advertise, as never before!

But—make your advertising creative, not predatory.

In other words don't merely go after your competitor; don't merely fight for the existing business, the business he is also after, the business in sight. Go after new business.

Get new people into your theatre.

This may sound like old stuff.

But let us see.

Babson's letter is accompanied by a chart.

The chart shows the effect in prices of the various wars, and the panics that always follow them, beginning with the war of the Revolution and up to the late World War.

Prices always decline after a war; they are beginning to decline now, following the recent war; and judging by the past, Babson says we are in for twenty years of gradually declining prices.

This doesn't mean that theatre prices must or will come down.

But it does mean this: that whereas during the war the merchant, or the exhibitor could get a profit out of the volume of business at hand, from now on he must go out and fight for new business—for greater volume.

Through creative advertising.

The volume of business must be increased because people from now on and for many years to come are going to spend less per capita—at least less carelessly.

Volume of sales will be the factor that will distinguish prosperity from failure. The merchant who can turn over the goods on his shelves most often, the exhibitor who can keep filling his seats, he is the man who will win out in this new business era. That's certain.

And advertising will do it. That's certain.

But a new kind of advertising—creative advertising—is needed.

* * *

Creative advertising sounds like a stickler, but its meaning is simple enough.

It means getting new people into the theatre—and holding them.

The first step is to divide the community into its various classes. Which class or classes are not coming as they should?

How can these people be reached? What do they read, and where and when? What is the way to their eyes and ears and convictions?

It isn't a matter of more money in advertising. It's a matter of more study and effort—a lot of each.

Again, this may sound trite. But what theatre today is reaching out beyond its front display and right into the homes, schools, churches, offices, factories, stores as it could?

In every community of say 5,000 people, how many feel the pull every week of the motion picture as they could be made to feel it?

We leave the question to the individual exhibitor. It is necessarily his peculiar problem. For our part we will make MOTION PICTURE NEWS this year more than ever a merchandizing medium, a medium for the selling of pictures to the public.

For as never before and for years to come advertising will prove the vital factor of success in this business.

Mr. Babson and his charts are right—as usual.

VOL. XXVI JULY 22, 1922 No. 4

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

OUT at Indianapolis the City Fathers, probably with an eye out for votes at an approaching election, are furnishing free dramatic stock shows at two local parks—with the various theatres of the city suffering thereby to an extent that has made closing for some houses imperative.

This sort of pandering to the public for political purposes and at the expense of the taxpayers doesn't seem to be a square deal from any angle.

There are millions invested in theatrical property in Indianapolis. The owners of this property are heavily taxed and with the advent of the free shows they are forced to carry a still heavier burden.

They must pay their share of the free shows and then play to empty seats, as the result of unfair and subsidized competition.

And the strange part of such a condition is that the protests of the showmen go pretty much unheeded by press, public and the other business interests of a community. Everyone seems to think that cutting off the trade of a theatre involves no hardships and entails no losses. Anyway, no one bothers much about who is hit or the injustice of such a procedure.

However, suppose Indianapolis should have opened a municipal shoe store, where footwear was sold at cost, what kind of a howl would the shoe merchants have put up and how long would it take the Chamber of Commerce or the Business Men's Association to convince the city administration that such a philanthropic idea was very much out of order?

And the newspapers. For once they would all agree.

UNIVERSAL'S fifty-two page Special Section in this issue deserves the careful consideration of every exhibitor, not because it is 52 pages but because contained therein is a lot of information that the showman should know—and digest.

The day when mere assurance that a theatre is to have a sufficient number of attractions available for booking is past. The question is not how many pictures are to be made this year but how many of these productions will stand up for extended runs and how many of them will coax an indifferent public into the theatre.

Universal has a list of productions that stands the acid test. You are told all about them in this special announcement. Read every line and then make your plans for the Fall.

"GRANDMA'S BOY", the new Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors feature, began the ninth week of its run at the Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles, Sunday night, July 9th. "Crowd formed long waiting line," Dr. H. E. Breckwedel, the Symphony manager, wired Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated. "Run is positively sensational. End not in sight."

UNIVERSAL has hit another bull's-eye. Hal Reid's celebrated play, "Human Hearts," which toured up and down the country several years ago and achieved a popularity through its homespun realities, has reached the screen with all its highlights intact. It is a wonderfully simple play, relying upon its heart interest, its touches of sentiment and sincerity of characterization for appeal. And it tugs at the heart and conquers it because everything is in the right place.

"Human hearts" has not been exaggerated to make a rural holiday. King Baggott has caught the ruggedness of the soil in his lifelike details. The characters seem human and they express themselves like everyday people who live far from industrial centers. The folks are neighborly toward one another and all they ask of life is to work peacefully and live in sweet contentment.

The picture is ideally cast. House Peters, whose sterling work in "The Storm" carried him very near the head of the procession as an actor of parts, demonstrates again that he has no equal in the expression of a true son of the soil. Watching him shoe a horse in his blacksmith shop here makes you feel as if you have known him always—which is explainable through his getting right down to the bed-rock of human understanding. Russell Simpson plays a typical farmer—one of the "backbone" types of the country, while Gertrude Claire as his gentle, uncomplaining wife gives you an inkling that the people back on the farm have found the secret of contentment.

"Human Hearts" presents a love story and conflict, and its simplicity merges into a dramatic conclusion to point a contrast. The director has used discretion in every scene—a virtue to be commended, judging from the opportunities here to exaggerate the details, the sentiment and the humor. It's a picture which should attract patrons everywhere.

AROUND ten years ago, House Peters declined a number of picture jobs to accept an engagement as "Stafford" in a road company presenting "Bought and Paid For" and thereby, no doubt, decreed that Bill Hart should be screendom's hero in he-man roles, instead of himself—or at least beat himself out of a fifty-fifty break with Mr. Hart in the regard of the picture theatre public.

There is no question about Mr. Peters' ability as an actor or his right to stardom—except that just as at the time the public is beginning to fully recognize his talents the starring idea goes out of fashion.

But, anyway, House Peters is a trouper. See him in "The Storm" or any one of the dozen pictures of the last year in which he has appeared and ask yourself if there is any actor you can think of who could have got as much out of the part or made you forget—to a greater extent—that it was only a picture you were seeing.

And that's the test of the real screen player. If they can put it over so it seems like the real thing, they have reached the pinnacle. But "many are called and few are chosen."

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER, accompanied by his wife and daughter, sailed for Europe on the Majestic July 8. The head of the Rothacker Enterprises planned to go direct to London for a conference in regard to the proposed London Rothacker laboratory and then on to Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Prague, Rome and Brussels. He expects to sail for home on the Majestic September 6.

* * *

"American Stars Are Very Much Honored in London"—so says Mr. Sidney Jay, the London Manager who came to this country to engage Miss Mae Marsh to star for the Graham Wilcox Productions.

"Miss Marsh is one of the best known and best liked stars of the American screen in London and ranks with Mary Pickford and Lillian Gish in popularity over there.

"I look forward to British Producers in the near future having one or more American stars in each one of their productions."

Miss Marsh is the first to go over and at the largest salary ever paid an American star.

Ernest Shipman wires from Ottawa, Canada, that the Ottawa Film Productions, Ltd., after viewing the final scenes in their first picture "The Man from Glengarry" were so well impressed that they voted to proceed immediately with the making of a sequel "Glengarry School Days."

N. Y. Appellate Court Decides News Weeklies Must Be Censored

Decision Cites Difference Between Newspaper and News Weekly

ONE of the most important legal decisions in recent years in motion picture circles has just been handed lown by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of New York State, third lepartment, with all judges concurring. Under this decision all news weeklies in New York state will continue to be subected to censorship by the New York State Motion Picture Commission, with he payment of the license fee demanded.

In connection with the decision, which s of far reaching importance and one vhich has been awaited with much interest, is an opinion written by Associate Justice Harold J. Hinman, in which is shown the legal viewpoint taken by the Appellate Court as distinguishing between the ordinary newspaper as a purveyor of news and the motion picture news weekly, citing the differences as they exist and giving the reasons why one should be submitted to censorship while the other remains immune.

The decision made by the Appellate Division comes as a final chapter in the test case which was instituted months ago by Pathe Exchange, Inc., of New York City, against the New York State Motion Picture Commission, and which carried from court to court, arguments having been presented before the Appellate Division in Albany last May. At that time Frederic Coudert, appearing for Pathe, claimed that the New York State Motion Picture Commission was overstepping its authority in demanding a submission of news weeklies to censorship and that such procedure violated certain constitutional privileges under which the company was engaged in business.

The opinion, accompanying the decision on the part of the higher court, deals with the matter in an exhaustive way and is said to be one of the most comprehensive opinions of its kind yet written in connection with motion picture censorship. It follows, in part:

"Section 5 of chapter 715 of the laws of 1921 contains the limits of the power and authority of such commission so far as material here and reads as follows: 'The commission shall cause to be promptly examined every motion picture film submitted to it as herein required, and, unless such film or a part thereof is obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman, sacrilegious or is of such a character that its exhibition would tend to corrupt morals or incite to crime, shall issue a license therefor.'

"The pictures to which the provisions of section 5 are applicable are those which come under the provisions of section 12 of said Act, which reads as follows: 'It shall be unlawful to exhibit, or to sell, lease or lend for exhibition at any public place of amusement for pay or in connection with any business in the state of New York any motion picture film or reel, unless there is at the time in full force and effect a valid license or permit therefor of the Motion Picture Commission of the State of New York.'

"The plaintiff claims that chapter 715 of the laws of 1921 violates the constitutional guarantee of freedom of the press in that it lays a previous restraint upon the publishing of 'Current Events' films and that the statute denies the plaintiff the equal protection of the laws, and deprives plaintiff of property without due process of law in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

"If this act constitutes a valid exercise of the police power for the preservation of the morals or welfare of the community, it does not operate to deprive the plaintiff of property without due process of law. Unless the bi-weekly motion picture news reel is in the same legal category as a newspaper and the liberty of the press would protect newspapers from such restraint as is here sought to be exercised, there would be no denial of the equal protection of the laws.

"To determine whether these two are in the same legal category we must inquire whether they are in the same practical category.

"Any substantial difference between particular businesses may serve as a reasonable basis for a classification. Children are peculiarly entitled to legislative protection as a class and legislation aimed at their protection does not fall under the constitutional prohibition of unfair discrimination. Consideration may also be had of the matter of sex in determining a question of the public morals or welfare.

"We can not say that the moving picture is not a medium of thought but it is clearly something more than a newspaper, periodical or book and clearly distinguishable in character. It is a spectacle or show rather than a medium of opinion, and the latter quality is a mere incident to the former quality. It creates and purveys a mental atmosphere which is absorbed by the viewer without conscious mental effort. It requires neither literacy nor interpreter to understand it. Those who witness the spectacle are taken out of bondage to the letter and the spoken word. The author and the speaker are replaced by the actor of the show and of the spectacle.

"The newspaper offers no particular attraction to the child and much that is contained in it that might be harmful to the child is not understood by it for lack of literacy or imagination. But the moving picture attracts the attention so lacking with books or even newspapers, particularly so far as children and the illiterate are concerned, and carries its own interpretation.

"The child soon becomes sophisticated, as he attends the school of experience, where current events may be revealed in all their nakedness, where the pictorial drama may illustrate the experiences of mankind, the good and the band, where character may be shaped most readily the one way or the other, according to the sentiment conveyed.

"The purveyance of thought and instruction is just as incidental to the 'show,' in principle, as it is with the circus or any theatrical performance. It is the fact that it is in each case the performance of an actor which characterizes the thing done, and that 'acting' is the essential quality of the business.

"If the motion picture business generally is not a part of the press of the country, as the Supreme Court has concededly said, it seems to be a reversal of proper emphasis to lay particular stress upon the 'news' feature of the press, which seems to us to be at most an incident to the thing privileged by the Constitution.

"The 'show' business is clearly different from the newspaper business, and those who engage in the show business are none too likely to confine their produc-

Pettijohn Makes Plea in Missouri

ON Friday Night, July 7, the moving picture interests of Missouri struck the most important blow that has yet been delivered for the freedom of the screen in America.

Led by Charles C. Pettijohn, personal representative of Will H. Hays, and Martin J. Quigley, editor of the Exhibitors Herald of Chicago, a large delegation of theatre owners, film exchange managers and others who were interested in the question appeared before the committee on constitutional amendments of the Missouri Constitutional Convention, now in session here, and asked for a favorable report on a bill now before the committee that would grant to moving pictures the same constitutional guarantees for freedom of expression now accorded to the press and individuals.

Pettijohn told the committee that censorship was a failure, that it was impossible to produce moving pictures that would meet with the approval of the eccentric views of the members of many state boards of censorship.

Several members of the committee indicated they were favorably impressed by the pleas made to them, and it is hoped a favorable report will be made.

U. S. Picture Dominance Growing Steadily

Associated First National Survey Shows This Country Leads in Industry

WITH all its so-called faults, the American motion picture continues to rule the world and its dominance is growing steadily firmer.

This and other interesting facts are revealed in a world survey made by Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Through its special agents in England, Continental countries, the Orient, Near East, Australia and Latin-America, First National conducted one of the most searching inquiries into the film market abroad that has been made since the war.

Among the highlights of its findings are:

The demand for American-made screen subjects is increasing.

Payment for these is more prompt, indicating a very general improvement in the health of the world's finances insofar as the entertainment field is concerned.

Mexico has declared war on film firms handling photoplays which hold its people up to ridicule or tend to brand them as a nation of outlaws.

The Mexican ultimatum comes at a time when film conditions are improving throughout that country. Heretofore distribution of pictures in the land of the Montezumas was more or less of a gamble, because once a film was turned over to an exhibitor the distributor had no assurance as to when it would be returned. This particular evil is being remedied by the installation of exchanges in Mexico as part of the American Exchange system and First National will be the first, it is declared, to be so represented.

Conditions are becoming more regular and businesslike in Cuba and South American countries, and the only place where there is any real difficulty is Jamaica, because films have to be shipped from New York, and it is sometimes months before the shipper, or owner, gets them back from that island.

As to Europe, the best reports come from England and Italy. In England there obtains what is known as the "block booking" system, whereby pictures are booked by exhibitor organizations after a "trade" showing, but probably are not presented to the public under eighteen months. This means a long delay in realization of money collections by the American sellers of the picture.

The information revealed in the survey indicates that these showings will soon be made possible in about nine or ten months, which will be a very important factor from the financial standpoint.

The investigation in Italy shows that business dealings are becoming easier, collections much better and that more theatres are being turned over to the films.

Germany, which was held to make the most threatening gesture toward the American film industry, is eager for American product. But the American distributor is not very keen about such business, owing to the fact that Germany is unable to pay for the product.

Owing to unfavorable financial conditions Spain, which was supposed to have enriched herself during the war, is almost as bad a risk for the picture salesmen as is Germany.

France, through a determination to advance her own film industry, also joins these two as a poor business field, not that she has no money, but because France wants her people to see home-made pictures at least equal in number with importations.

Belgium, which has shown such vigorous recuperative power, ranks only fair as a field for American-made screen entertainment.

In Scandinavian area the demand for American product is growing in Norway and Sweden; Denmark remains about at a standstill. Russia and the Balkans are impossible as immediate film markets.

India is showing probably the most encouraging signs of all the countries outside of England in its desire for American pictures.

China, which is a film market only along its coast, is reported as having a fair demand for U. S. A. pictures.

Pearson Declares for 15-Episode Serial

Pathe General Manager Emphatic That Such Serials Are Here to Stay

IT will be of interest to exhibitors everywhere to learn that Elmer Pearson, General Manager of Pathe, declares in the most emphatic terms that the fifteen-episode serial is here to stay—and why. One important consideration alone, says Pearson, is sufficient to continue fifteen episodes as the standard length of serial productions, and that is the unanimous judgment of exhibitors themselves. This is the length, coupled with the maximum of entertainment quality, that attracts patrons with the greatest certainty and is most advantageous from all angles of presentation, advertising and various forms of exploitation.

Pearson states the case of the fifteen-episode serial as follows:

"The proof of the fifteen-episode serial is in the bookings. Not of one, or two, or half a dozen scattered examples, but of a steady output of this form of picture covering a period of years. The successful making of a long series of fifteen-episode serials establishes a standard of excellence which can be reached only by the specializing process. Hence the increasing value of the 'Patheserial' trade mark as shown by the steady growth of bookings, which, of course, is the reliable index of public approval.

"On this subject Pathe certainly is entitled to speak with authority, having in a period of less than fifteen years made and distributed all over the civilized world a total of more than thirty fifteen-episode serials. This record is of itself sufficient evidence, first, that the subjects chosen were always adequate for development in that, or greater, length; and, second, that the writers and production forces were always capable, able to sustain the mounting interest and suspense from episode to episode to the denouement. That is the secret of the tremendous, popular vogue of a great motion picture specialty—the fifteen-episode Patheserial.

"No such record as this is possible where there is any evidence of 'padding' a picture to bring it up to a specified length. Padding is fatal, and a confession of incompetence. And to argue against fixed forms, even as regards length, in creative literature for print or stage or screen, is to deny the cumulative wealth of experience in successful appeal to the multitude. It is a case of 'the patter and the cloth.' of 'the punishment fittin the crime,' of 'not biting off more tha you can chew.' Form (including length is the first specification, as it governs th selection of the subject. When Beethove started work on his Ninth Symphony h knew very well that he wasn't composin the 'Moonlight Sonata.' Architecture too, furnishes a pointed illustratio Imagine the architect of the Woolwort Building deciding that there wasn't 'ma terial enough' for fifty-seven stories, an submitting plans for a garage!

"The specialists in writing and in pro duction who have combined to bring th fifteen-episode serial up to its present hig standard of excellence and popularit know very well that they cannot depe on published fiction for their materia 'Stories' ready made simply do not exis They have to be created by writers wh are familiar in detail with all the esse tials entering into this form of pictu production. Until these highly traine writers begin to show more signs of e haustion than they do at present. Path serials will continue to be issued in fifte episodes."

Washington Woman Heads New Department

Crandall Theatres Put Mrs. Locher in Charge of Educational Activities

THE progressiveness that has made the Crandall theatres in Washington, D. C., and vicinity one of the most successful exhibitor's units in the United States reasserted itself last week in the announcement by Harry M. Crandall, owner of the chain and First National regional franchise, of the expansion of his executive organization to include a Public Service and Educational Department, under the directorship of Mrs. J. J. Locher, prominent Washington club woman and for six years chairman of the Motion Picture Committee of the District of Columbia Federated Women's Clubs.

The permanent establishment of the new department comes only after a year of experimentation during which Mrs. Locher has served the Crandall organization in an advisory capacity and has demonstrated the great good that can be made to result from closer contact with the public.

Crandall has always been of the belief that an exhibitor's most valuable assets are public confidence and the possession of some means of intimate personal contact with the citizenship that constitutes the theatre's patronage. He has observed that a vast majority of all controversies between the industry and the public have been the result of misunderstanding and misinformation, as to both sides. This embraces all the hue and cry about censorship, the need of safeguarding the children's welfare and all of the other questions that have been agitated almost without cessation during recent years.

Many months ago Mr. Crandall took steps to bring his organization, both as to personnel and activities, into closer touch with his public, with results that manifested themselves unequivocally at a time when any exhibitor less solidly fortified would have been wiped out of existence.

It was in pursuit of this idea that Mrs. Locher's cooperation was enlisted and in such manner that Mr. Crandall over a year ago put in operation for himself a course of procedure that the producing heads of the industry later adopted in their own behalf by the appointment of Will H. Hays to the important post which he now occpies. The Crandall department of Public Service and Education establishes the point of contact and the means of discussion and cooperation between the Crandall interests and the public just as Hays serves as liaison officer establishing contact among producers, exhibitors and public on a national instead of local basis.

Mrs. Locher approaches her new task well equipped. During the six years that she has served as chairman of the motion picture committee of the District of Columbia Federated Women's Clubs, she has had under her direction as many as fourteen theatres running special performances for children over a period of four consecutive weeks. She also directed the educational matinees for mothers during Baby Week campaigns.

While always a strong advocate of better pictures, Mrs. Locher has also always been emphatically opposed to censorship. Under her direction it will be the purpose of the new Crandall department to form a medium of contact and a closer relationship between the exhibitor and the public he serves. The neighborhood motion picture theatre, Mrs. Locher believes, is the logical community center. Church, school and theatre each has its own ethical value in the community life and each is a factor in the making of good citizenship. Every person in a community should have as much personal interest in his own community theatre and as keen a sense of responsibility in its conduct, as the man who receives its commercial benefits. He is only the custodian of the community's most popular form of entertainment.

The cooperative spirit essential to the success of the Crandall plan already exists in large measure in the National Capital, but every facility, nevertheless, will be afforded Mrs. Locher to impress upon the city of Washington that the Crandall enterprises are a species of public utility conducted to enlist the counsel, the advicie and the support of every citizen with a spark of civic pride. The approach, of necessity, must be through the housewife and the mother for the patronage of the motion pictures in the Capital is something over seventy-five per cent feminine. For this reason studio offices in the Metropolitan Theatre building, which also houses the executive staff of the Crandall organization, have been placed at Mrs. Locher's disposal so equipped as to make easy the entertaining of groups of women at tea for the friendly discussion and analysis of points of common interest.

Hays Pledges Assistance to All Producers

ON June 21st Gus Schumacher, general manager of the O'Conor Productions, wrote Will Hays asking the latter if non-members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., would receive any consideration in the non-members' efforts toward better films, and if Gen. Hays would assist the short subject producers in their efforts for cleaner films.

Mr. Hays' reply in part follows:

"We are organized for the purpose of helping the motion picture industry, not any particular company. While naturally our first duty is to our members—we would not have existence if it were not for our members—we are at all times anxious to help anyone in the industry.

"Our constant aim is to be of benefit to those who are working to increase the moral and educational value of motion pictures, and are glad at all times to receive suggestions as to how this can be best done.

"I appreciate very much your assurance of loyalty to, and cooperation with, this Association, and you may rest assured that we will be glad at all times to hear from you."

Players' Board to Hold Conference with Hays

Players and Directors Will Discuss Better Pictures with Commissioner

A GIGANTIC gathering of motion picture players and directors with Will H. Hays for a frank and full discussion of the industry's problems for the purpose of working out together the most effective plan for the co-operation in establishing and maintaining the highest possible moral and artistic standards in motion picture production is the plan announced in a telegram just received in Los Angeles from the "High Commissioner" of the screen industry by members of the Players' Board of Control of the Paramount Stock Company.

Mr. Hays' telegram came in reply to a wire from the five noted actors and actresses making up the Players' Board of Control. In their dispatch these players, following their first meeting since the formation of the Paramount Stock Company, pledged their heartiest co-operation in keeping the screen to a high standard of wholesomeness and artistic worth.

The following wire was sent Mr. Hays by the Players' Board of Control of the Paramount Stock Company:

"We, the undersigned, representing the members of the Paramount Stock Company, desirous of fostering the ideals and purposes set forth by you as head of the motion picture industry, pledge to you in our first meeting that we shall do everything in our power to further the success of the program which you have laid out 'to attain and maintain' the highest plane of achievement for the motion picture. To your efforts in keeping the screen to a standard of wholesomeness and high artistic endeavor consistent with American tradition we also pledge our heartiest co-operation. We pledge you that both in our work and personal conduct, following the code of ethics laid down for members of the Paramount Stock Company, we shall strive unceasingly to protect the good name of our profession. Heretofore much effort has been individual. With the formation of this stock company, it has become collective. As a body of men and women working wholeheartedly toward the ideal which you have set, we ask you to give us your assurance of protection against scurrilous attacks. For your encouragement and satisfaction might we have a statement from you setting forth your plan of co-operation with the people who are engaged in the actual work of producing motion pictures, namely, the actresses, actors and directors.

"(Signed) Players' Board of Control.
"Thomas Meighan, Conrad Nagel, Theodore Roberts, Lois Wilson and Sylvia Ashton."

Following is the wire Mr. Hays sent in reply:

"I have your telegram and appreciate it thoroughly. Complete success in this effort is only attainable with the enthusiastic co-operation of authors, actors, directors, producers, distributors, exhibitors and every one engaged in the industry, and also with the sympathetic co-operation of the public. I have an abiding faith that this necessary co-operation and generous help will come from all thinking people who must recognize that our association's purpose, 'to establish and maintain the highest possible moral and artistic standards in motion picture production,' is an effort for the good of all. I am especially grateful for this collective action on the part of the players and directors, and very soon want to arrange for a frank and full discussion with as many players and directors as possible to work out together the most effective plan of co-operation."

International Publicity Chief Resigns

C. L. DIXON has resigned as Director of Advertising and Publicity of International Film Service in order to give his entire time to Saterlee Radio, Inc., a company in which he is a heavy stockholder and of which he is one of the directors.

Theodore Deiterick, formerly with Zit's Weekly, succeeds Dixon at International.

Shallenberger Points Independents' Advance

President of Arrow Declares Independence Is Salvation of Industry

ACCORDING to figures issued there are 908 features promised for release in the 1922-1923 season, as compared with 887 during the past year. "It is a highly significant fact," says Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, "that out of these 908 features 395 of them will come from the independents.

"During the past year there was a great deal of talk about curtailing production, despite which fact there will be more pictures available for the theatres this year than there were last. This, in itself, is cheering news. The greatest feature of it all, though, is that the independent producers have advanced with such tremendous strides. Last year they contributed but 128 pictures to the quota of 887; this year they stand ready with an imposing array of feature productions,—395 in all, an increase of 267,—in other words, an advance over last year of more than 200 per cent. Another thing which must be taken into consideration is the fact that fully 50 per cent of the 513 pictures to be released by national distributors were made by independent producing units.

"When I entered the motion picture industry many years ago I had a definite idea in mind. I still have it and I summed it up very succinctly in a recent letter written to the publisher of a motion picture trade journal, wherein I stated that 'the whole motion picture industry will be independent in five years.' The figures which I have quoted above would seem to point out that we are progressing rapidly toward that goal.

"In the last analysis the keen thinker must realize that independence represents the salvation of our industry, just as the condition which thus far has been permitted to exist—a condition which stifles not only initiative but creative genius as well—would represent its ultimate damnation unless checked.

"The only way in which a director can give the screen the best that is within him is when he is free and untrammelled. He can not function properly bound down by a system which compels him to grind out pictures to meet release dates. The only way a distributing organization can properly do business is by placing the output of various producers in open competition, one with the other, stimulating thereby the competitive spirit in the various producers which assists so materially in the creating of better product. The only way the theatre owner can continue on is if he is permitted to choose, himself, those pictures which are to be shown upon his screen. His right to existence depends upon his ability to please his patrons and keep them coming to his theatre. Under a system which makes of him merely a figurehead with practically no active participation in the running of his own house it can readily be seen that the individual plays little or no part.

"Thus I say and have said from the beginning that independence is the keynote of the entire motion picture situation. Complete independence will be the means of bringing into the industry the greatest creative brains the world has ever known. It will mean not only bigger and better pictures but it will mean finer pictures, splendidly conceived and intelligently produced, which will stand as a monument to that sturdy group of pioneers who from the first have fought for freedom.

The Reader Has His Say

By Charles K. Harris

WITH so much attention focussed nowadays upon the featured players, direction, photography, subtitles, "sets," clothes, musical accompaniment, lighting and color arrangements, nevertheless it appears to the sagacious film lover that Shakespeare's dictum, "The play's the thing," cannot be so easily discarded. This fundamental law of drama remains as immutable as a fixed law of nature. Therefore, perfection in the above mentioned forms are not the prime requisites for a truly interesting motion picture.

In the early days of the one and two reelers, any old theme that caught the producer's fancy would suffice as a vehicle. But as time went on the public consumed these one and two reelers with an enormous appetite thereby causing the motion picture industry to expand rapidly. Fabulous salaries were paid for the services of the players, and many a merry pursuit was made for the purchase of famous plays, novels and magazine tales. The result obtained after filming a famous play or novel has clearly demonstrated its futility. Only in rare instances have the results proven the exception.

Many producers state that the exhibitor desires startling titles and well known plays and novels, but the latter is gradually beginning to see the light of reason when he learns his patrons voice their disappointment after the screen performance of a well known stage play or book. This reminds me of the time I wrote the song "After the Ball." I endeavored to foist it upon all the large music publishers of that day, only to have it rejected upon the ground of non-conformity to the song conventions of that age. It was something more than a song. It was a play condensed but set to music. The music publishers had long been wedded to the old-time flower and sea songs prevalent in those days. I was compelled to publish the song myself, and the world generally knows with what result, when one takes into consideration that over 2,000,000 copies have been sold and it is still at this late date one of the best selling numbers in America.

The same coincidence occurred when I plunged into motion pictures by writing an original story, "When It Strikes Home," which had been submitted to the best known producers in New York City. They immediately rejected it, giving as their reason that a well-known book or play was far more feasible than an original story. To prove the contrary, I produced the picture at my own cost and sold it the day after completion to one of the self-same producers who rejected my story.

One of the old stock arguments advanced by advocates for the filming of stage plays, books and magazine stories is the wide amount of publicity attached to these features. They labor under an erroneous impression that the film ought to be enhanced from the box office angle. It does not always work out in that manner. For example, a person who has witnessed the stage performance or read the story may not evince any interest in the screen adaptation of the aforesaid play or novel. It can no longer hold him in suspense. Removing the element of suspense in a story eliminates the problem of imagination. Fancy the majority of screen followers filing into a motion picture theatre when they are well acquainted with the tale about to be unfolded to them upon the screen! One knows it to be indecorous to impart to a friend the gist of a play that he witnessed the night before when he knows too well that that friend intends to witness that same performance.

Most producers are beginning to acknowledge this defect in motion picture production. They also recognize that there is no dearth of material for original stories. But in order to appeal to an audience these stories must be taken from life, contain a moral, love interest, pathos and a shaft of comedy. In short, a picture that one should not hesitate to bring his family along to witness it. Now such a story to show virtue triumphant in the end must also show sin otherwise the moral is lost. It goes without saying that this does not confer license for salaciousness. The characters should be fashioned true to life.

When we accost the heroine in the picture we see her as a young, flighty and nonsensical creature, who utilizes the same characteristics in playing an ingenue, wife or middle-aged woman. Why shouldn't these heroines be exhibited as we meet them in daily life? Then take some of the young men in the story. They stand revealed as scapegraces, puffing cigarettes as they idle away their time in cabarets, quarrelling over money matters or the fair sex and never performing any useful labor. While there may exist such specific characters or worldlings in real life, yet the majority of men fail in their defects.

Then I contend it would be far better for us if we eliminated some of the films containing charmingly overdressed men and women who are made to suffer the horrible pangs of love and jealousy amidst the most gorgeous surroundings. We, therefore, must have our characters in the stories human so that they may be readily intelligible to the masses and not be indifferent "that the play's the thing," and will continue to be the thing.

Wells' Re-Election Seems Assured

AT the hour of going to press the re-election of Jake Wells as president of the M. P. T. O. of Virginia seems assured. Wells appeared to be the favorite of the film men assembled in convention at Ocean View, Va.

It is estimated that about one hundred film men made the trip to the Southern City, a great number of them from Washington. On Wednesday, the members went on an automobile tour arranged for their entertainment. This was followed by a matinee at Keith's. In the evening they attended a shore dinner. The ball was held on Thursday evening and the Marcus Loew party came in for considerable attention. A number of prominent film and stage stars from New York were in attendance.

Knickerbocker to Be Rebuilt

Harry M. Crandall, Washington, D. C., theatre owner and national factor in the industry, spurred by press, patrons and civic organizations, pro and con, startled representatives of the press today with the announcement that he would immediately commence the demolition of the Knickerbocker walls, and commence re-building of a super-theatre, in the usual Crandall style.

Leading up to this announcement was the signed petition of business men, residents and former Knickerbocker patrons to the effect that when these signatures reached 2,500, the Eighteenth Street and Columbia Road Business Men's Association was today presented to Mr. Crandall. The Kalorama Road citizens who made a losing fight against this rebuilding on the site of last winter's disaster, petitioned Congress to make the site a memorial park, yesterday.

Universal Laboratory Chief Dined

A farewell dinner was given to Edwin F. Murphy, retiring superintendent of Universal's laboratory at West Fort Lee, N. J., at Sauter's, Fairview, N. J. More than two hundred employees and executives of the plant, as well as several department heads from the Home Office, were on hand to wish Murphy a speedy return to health. Norman Sprowl, business manager of the laboratory, served as master-of-ceremonies and introduced the speakers.

Wells Heads Exhibitors of North Carolina

P. W. Wells was elected president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of North Carolina to serve his ninth consecutive year in this office notwithstanding his requests that another man be elected for the office. This is also true of H. B. Varner, secretary, who has likewise held this office for the same number of years.

Great Production for "Uncle Tom's Cabin"

THAT R.-C. pictures will produce "Uncle Tom's Cabin" as the biggest production in its career, was announced by P. A. Powers, managing director of R.-C. and the Film Booking Offices of America, immediately before he left for California this week on his quarterly visit to R.-C. studio. The preliminary arrangements for this special have been completed and production is to start under the personal supervision of Mr. Powers at the R.-C. studios.

R.-C. will give this famous old story the most elaborate production it has ever had either on the stage or screen. An all-star cast will be selected and the ranks of film players are now benig honeycombed to find a cast worthy to interpret the famous old story.

The R.-C. screen version of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" will be released by the Film Booking Offices of America. It will be preceded by a big advertising and publicity campaign worthy of such a production.

News Weeklies To Be Censored

tions to the things which are just, pure and of good repute; but in order to continue to attract patrons many would cast discretion and self-control to the winds, without restraint, social or moral. There are those who would give unrestrained rein to passion. If the thing be true and real, they would reveal it in its utter nakedness. They appreciate the business advantage of depicting the evil and voluptuous thing with the poisonous charm.

"This state and other states have considered it necessary in the interest of public morals and welfare to supervise the moving pictures which are displayed in such places of business. The effect of the act which we have under consideration is to simply prohibit the use of any uncensored films 'in any public place of amusement for pay or in connection with any business in the State of New York,' and this is done by providing a penalty against those who engage in that particular business, either by exhibiting such uncensored films or by selling, leaving or lending for such exhibition. The statute does not prohibit the making or selling of films but regulates only the use of the thing in a certain way.

"The State does not say that the films can not be produced and sold. The act of the State simply results in justifiably destroying one of the markets for their sale unless the act is complied with. It is the show or spectacle which is aimed at by the statute and such a show or spectacle is certainly not an essential incident to the conduct of the press. It is a thing separate and apart from it. We do not think that the bi-weekly motion picture news reel, so far as it becomes a part of such show or spectacle in such a public place of amusement, is a part of the press of the country. It is therefore subject to the regulation of the act in question."

Berman Tendered Dinner by Universal Officials

A farewell dinner was given to Harry M. Berman, retiring general sales manager, by Universal at the Biltmor's Italian Gardens, Friday, June 30. More than fifty employes and executives of the Home Office and nearby Universal exchanges were on hand to wish Mr. Berman the best of luck with his new work at Robertson-Cole. E. H. Goldstein, general manager of Universal's Home Office, served as master-of-ceremonies and wittily introduced a number of talented speakers and read a spirited cablegram from Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, who sent his regrets from Europe.

Several tokens were presented to the guest of honor. Among these were a magnificent gold watch suitably inscribed from Mr. Laemmle, a two-and-one-half karat diamond and platinum ring from the employes, an artistic hand-illuminated testimonial from the Universal exchange managers, and a huge parchment tribute signed by all the Universal employes.

Patterson Gives First National Token

Col. Willard C. Patterson, of Atlanta, Ga., representing the Sig Samuels interests, First National Franchise holders, received the surprise of his life during a recent business trip to the First National New York offices. Col. Patterson was one of the prize winners of the exploitation contest conducted during First National Anniversary week and was entitled to a trip to Los Angeles, along with the other "$1-a-Week-Men," but imperative interests kept him at home. It was a keen disappointment to him not to be able to make the trip, but the Colonel was "game" and he wrote a letter expressing the pleasure it would give him to have another exhibitor travel in his place.

Officials of the First National organization decided that such a spirit should not go unrewarded, so when Col. Patterson came to New York he was called in to the office of General Manager J. D. Williams and presented with a handsome solid gold watch.

Brownell Resigns from Universal

John C. Brownell, Eastern Representative of Universal's Scenario Department, has resigned to devote himself to original scenario writing, it has just become known. His resignation becomes effective at the end of this week, after which he is planning a four weeks' cruise aboard his yacht, the Virginia.

Brownell has been with Universal for six years. In that time, he has been instrumental in the selection and purchase of many of Universal's screen successes. Among Universal's big fall productions selected by him are "The Storm," now playing at the Central theatre.

Cohen Pledges Support to Elks Movement

THE M. P. T. O. A. have offered the close cooperation of all theatres to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks in furthering the public playground movement, brought to the attention of the national convention at Atlantic City July 12.

The letter from the National president Sydney S. Cohen to Grand Exalted Ruler W. W. Mountain follows:

"I am advised that a movement will be inaugurated at the coming National Convention of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks in Atlantic City, to provide Elks playgrounds for children in all sections of the country.

"This is an intensely practical and constructive move. It will serve the welfare of the children in large communtiies especially, and commends itself to the favorable attention of all people who desire the proper development and advancement of the youth of our land.

"I am particularly impressed with the contemplated action of the Elks in this relation and want to help them in every possible way to consummate the same. I believe the cooperation of every Motion Picture Theatre Owner in all parts of the United States will aid materially in furthering this and other public benefactions of the Elks. The screens in our theatres can carry the Elks' message to the people and immensely popularize and advance such movements.

"As president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and on behalf of twelve thousand theatre owners in our Organization in every state in the Union, I now extend to you this screen cooperation in your Children's Playground project, particularly, and in the promotion of such other worthy public enterprises as your Organization may undertake."

Candidates in Kansas Withdraw

Herbert and James Barclay, recently nominated for the appointment as business manager of the M. P. T. O. Kansas, have declined the position, due to pressing business interests, thereby leaving the field open for another appointment.

Prior to the next state convention at Salina, Kas., September 25 and 26, the Kansas organization expects to have one of the most compact state associations in the Middle West, according to M. Van Praag, president. Notices now are being sent to all exhibitors whose dues are unpaid, informing them in a courteous manner that the M. P. T. O. K. intends to have a 100 per cent paid up organization, even if the membership consists of not more than seventy-five exhibitors.

Allen's Winnipeg House Has New Manager

M. M. Stewart, who has been associated with Louise Lovely for some time past, during her personal appearance tour, has accepted an offer from the Allen Theatres Limited to manage the Allen theatre in Winnipeg. He undertook his new duties a week ago. Stewart succeeds Benjamin Bloom, who has left on a tour of the world to extend over a year. Mrs. Bloom ac-

Many New Companies Organize

Companies incorporating in the motion picture industry in New York state during the past week, showed the following capitalization and directors, according to the records filed in the secretary of state's office:

Nursery Rhymes and Kiddies Fairy Tales Film, Inc., $250,000, E. W. Nye, Edna Wallach, Abraham Kalisky, New York; Qualtoplay Film Corporation, Syracuse, $25,000, Granby Dodds, F. E. Hagedorn, E. T. Shepard, Syracuse; Davidson-Kranz, Inc., $50,000, Charles Kranz, Henry Frank, New York City; G. M. Davidson, Harrison, N. Y.; Bronx Capitol Amusement Corporation, $10,000, R. L. Noah, Leo Rotschild, Morris Epstein, New York City; Pilgrim Pictures, $100,000, Alexander Lewis, C. L. Lewis, H. R. Winokur, New York City; Warner Research Laboratory, $500, Leslie Reid, Charles H. Lawson, New York; William H. O'Neil, Jersey City, N. J.

Minister Opposed to Church Showings

A minister, whose mind runs in the same channels as that of motion picture theatre owners of Kansas, has been discovered. He is the Rev. C. A. Stephens of LaCygne, Kas.

Not long ago the Rev. Stephens was summoned to Kansas City, Kas., to serve on a committee that contemplated staging a fight against exhibitors who sought to prevent the showing of pictures in schools and churches in opposition to theatres. Rev. Stephens promptly refused to serve on the committee and announced that he did not believe that a church was the place for the showing of pictures, that it was a place for worship and not amusement.

The sentiment of Rev. Stephens is right in line with the battle that Kansas exhibitors have been staging against unfair competition in churches, free entertainments, etc., and virtually all exchanges have pledged themselves to refrain from renting film to non-theatrical institutions.

Rothacker Heads World Screen Advertisers

Douglas D. Rothacker, special representative of the Rothacker Film Company's industrial division, was elected president of the Screen Advertisers' Association at the Milwaukee convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. James P. Simpson, of Dallas, was elected vice-president, and H. V. Winn, of the DeVry Corporation, Chicago, secretary-treasurer.

Rothacker has been a member of the Rothacker organization since 1919. He is a brother of Watterson R. Rothacker, president and founder of the Rothacker Enterprises.

N. Y. Censor Talks on Advertising

JOSEPH LEVENSON, of the New York State Censorship Board, appeared before the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at their weekly luncheon Thursday, July 6, to explain to them just what the Censorship Board expected in the way of handling motion picture advertising. At the conclusion of his talk he said he would be glad to answer questions, and a regular old-time "heckling" resulted. The discussion veered around to censorship in general which, Levenson maintained, was bound to continue "for scientific reasons."

"I want you advertising men to understand that I come here as your friend," said Levenson after being introduced by President C. L. Yearsley. "A section of the censorship law provides that the censors shall have the right to pass on motion picture advertising. Now, if you will bring your drawings to me before they are turned over to the lithographer you will greatly simplify matters.

"To my mind all motion picture advertising should be censored because, while the picture itself may be seen by thousands in one given locality, the advertising is seen by tens of thousands. Not for one moment do I question the sincerity of you gentlemen in your work, but slips are liable to occur.. Besides, we have absolute authority to abolish any objectionable advertising which has not been censored, so why not have it censored first?"

Blue-Sunday Agitation Is Still On in Tampa

Tampa, Fla., continues to be the scene of agitation over the resurrection by Sheriff Spencer of age-old blue laws forbidding the operation of places of amusement on Sundays. Despite notification by the Sheriff that violation of these laws would entail punishment, the amusement places were opened and kept running on Sunday, June 11 and also on Sunday, June 18. An application for warrants for the arrest of several of those who kept open on June 11 was submitted by the Sheriff to County Judge Hazard. The Judge promptly rejected the application. Following the suggestion of the Grand Jury, the Sheriff placed under arrest three of those who again opened on Sunday, June 18. Again the Sheriff applied for warrants, and his request was rejected for the second time by Judge Hazard on Tuesday, June 20.

The Judge is quoted as declaring: "So long as I am Judge of this Court it will not be used as a catspaw or tool either by the Sheriff or anyone else to satisfy any personal or political prejudice."

Universal Handles Twin City Distribution

It was announced in error that Finkelstein & Ruben would continue the physical distribution of Universal pictures for the Minneapolis territory. The Universal is in full control of the physical distribution and everything else in connection with the management of the Universal product in the territory.

Paramount School Lays Out Schedule

In a meeting held at the Lasky studio last week the Player's Board of Control of the newly organized Paramount Stock Company School laid out a schedule for early commencement of class work among its members, added another course to those already listed and reiterated that the school is not open to the public.

This last announcement was made necessary because of the hundreds of requests for admission which have poured in upon the school heads. Applications of outsiders, however, are not to be considered, the rules of the school and its course of study in photodramatic theory, dancing, fencing, costumes, cinematography, make-up, being available only to the players of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the idea of the school being to encourage the development of its members along all lines that will make them better players and better citizens.

Exhibitors of Illinois Discuss Problems

The Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners held a meeting at the Blackstone theatre on Friday afternoon, at which more than one hundred exhibitors were present, despite the heat.

The high cost of film rentals, support of independent producers, summer closing, the effect of daylight savings on attendance, censorship, and other important matters slated for discussion, were referred to special committees for action.

No progress was made in the proposal to combine all state and Chicago exhibitors in one organization, and the discussions over this matter developed bitter debate.

John H. Quinn, of Los Angeles, president of the Better Pictures Association, made a plea for giving his society moral support.

President L. M. Rubens, who had just returned from a six months' tour of Europe, was in the chair, and with him on the platform were Vice-President Abrahams, Secretary Dibelka, and National Committeeman D. D. Burford.

Mayer Executive Off on Foreign Tour

George Samuels left New York for South America during the week for a survey of conditions of motion pictures in Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile and Brazil for the Louis B. Mayer Productions, Foreign Department.

Samuels is a road-show specialist in foreign territories, having toured the world a number of times with his own two and one-half hours' motion picture entertainment. He has made his residence in South America for a number of years and is personally acquainted with all the large theatre owners there.

Activities of Exchange Managers, Exhibitors, Salesmen and Others

Kansas City

A LOWER wage scale for motion picture operators in Kansas City, as well as Missouri, appears inevitable. At a meeting of Kansas City exhibitors last week a committee of five exhibitors was appointed to confer with the operators, who are reported as being willing to accept a reduction in wage scale. Lawrensce E. Goldman, secretary and counsel of the M. P. T. O., Missouri, presided at the meeting. The committee appointed consists of A. M. Eisner, chairman; Jack Rose, Charles Fromhoff, Calvert Weil and H. Coste.

A war between the Film Board of Trade of Kansas City and Kansas exhibitors is brewing. A recent ruling of the board provides that no postponements on play dates will be accepted by the board. Formerly, an exhibitor who had booked a picture and desired to change the play date two weeks in advance of the showing of the picture, could do so by paying for the picture and then showing the picture at a more convenient date. Kansas exhibitors are contending that an exhibitor has a better knowledge of the most suitable date for the showing of a picture and that many circumstances may arise between the booking of a production and the play date, which makes it highly necessary that the play date be postponed.

A new service feature has been established by Thomas Byerle of the Kansas City Vitagraph branch. Beginning last Friday, that day was set aside for the screening of new prints received during the week and invitations issued to all exhibitors of the Kansas City territory.

In Emil Umann, assistant manager of Loew's Garden theatre, Kansas City, who goes to San Francisco where he will be connected with Loew's Warfield theatre, Kansas City loses one of its most able theatre executives. Umann, during his rather brief career in Kansas City, created a wide friendship and his absence will be felt.

Booking solid months seems to have developed into a habit with First National in Kansas. The latest towns which have expressed confidence in First National attractions as summer business getters are Hiawatha, Kas.; Augusta, Kas.; and Horton, Kas.

The Linwood theatre, one of the larger suburban houses in Kansas City, which recently was purchased by the Capitol Enterprises, has been closed for remodeling and will reopen this fall. Improvements, including a new $20,000 Hope-Jones pipe organ, will be installed.

TEN years ago, by process of mental deduction, Harry Wellington, new manager of the American Releasing Corporation's Kansas City branch, concluded that the best bet among a large field of prospective vocations was the motion picture industry. His victorious trail of accomplishments since that time proves that he erred not in his selection.

Harry Wellington

Although Wellington has been with the American Releasing Corporation little more than two months, he has started a "caravan" of contracts towards the home office that leaves no doubt as to what his career in the Kansas City territory will be. It's "Brother" this and "Sister" that with Wellington, and this characteristic mannerism has won him a host of friends in Missouri and Kansas.

Prior to coming to Kansas City, Wellington was affiliated with the New Era Film exchange in Chicago. Prior to that he was with George Kleinie interests in Chicago. He has served in virtually every capacity from inspector to sales manager, but the one thing he emphasises is the policy of the company with which he now is affiliated—no deposits on films.

HOWARD F. Brink, known in western New York and the rest of the country as "Daddy," has gone up again. You can't keep this old veteran of the celluloid world down. And he has been up and down many times in the past 100 years or so. "Daddy" has just been appointed manager of the Buffalo office of the Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., of which E. W. Hammons is president. This company is now operating its own offices in New York state, Arthur Whyte having sold his interests to the Hammonds organization. Colonel Brink for the last few years has been making Grand and Warner and Grand and North products famous. He has been a member of Sydney Samson's Buffalo sales staff. Prior to that "Daddy" was with Paramount, Robertson-Cole and almost every other Buffalo exchange. He has been connected with the business for the past 20 years or so. He will be a valuable acquisition for Educational. The Colonel has an enviable reputation for square dealing and is one of the most popular men in the industry in the Buffalo territory. So successful has he been of late that he has taken unto himself a new Buick coupe with which he is touring the territory—when his son Earl is not joy riding in it. Elmer Dodds, former manager for Educational, has gone to Syracuse to engage in the distributing business.

Buffalo

A. W. MOSES has resigned as Albany sales representative for Universal, according to an announcement by M. A. Chase, district manager with headquarters at Buffalo. Mr. Moses, who is one of the best known film men in New York state, has made a new connection which will be announced in a few days. He has been manager of the Buffalo Select, R-C Pictures and other exchanges. Mr. Chase attended a meeting in Chicago of district and branch managers to meet the new sales manager, Art Schmidt.

George A. Hickey, branch manager for Goldwyn, had the auto ride of his life one afternoon last week, when he motored for some three miles through the city with P. H. Smith in his Italian tank. George's nervous system is in pretty fair shape, but it can't stand the strain of missing other cars and trolleys by a hair. The tank is a sea and land-going hack and P. H. knows that nothing less than a ten-ton truck could put it down for the count, so when he takes friends out he shows them how close one can come to death without really dying. George offered a prayer of thanks when he arrived safe and sound at his destination and vowed never again to enter the vehicle of his famous salesman.

Des Moines

A. G. STOREY, general representative for Pathe, in making his western tour of the exchanges visited Des Moines on Saturday. Mr. Plues, manager of the exchange, says that he believes that Mr. Storey is contemplating taking the big jump into matrimony but Mr. Storey denies the charge. And Mr. Plues says that he doesn't know the lady's name.

Lee Wedertz, assistant cashier for Pathe, has left for his vacation. He will spend a week at his home in Burlington. "Andy" Anderson, on whose shoulders the work falls when Lee leaves, says he can't return any too soon for him.

W. F. Neal, assistant cashier for Paramount, leaves Monday for his vacation. He'll visit relatives in Marshalltown and Clear Lake. His vacation lasts for two weeks, but from all he plans to do it will take three weeks' time anyway.

John Friedl, exploitation man for Paramount, is still a bachelor. He ran up to see the wife and kiddie last week and they told him they were planning to stay a week or so longer.

Visitors to Universal Des Moines Exchange during the week were: J. C. Collins, Mgr. Rex theatre, Perry; Nate Chapman, Mgr. Carden and Englert theatres, Iowa City; Mr. and Mrs. Wm Youngclaus, Mgr. Majestic, Jefferson; Mr. and Mrs. Forest Hagen, Pleasanton; A. V. Louver, Star, Rippey, Iowa, and W. C. Treloar, Ogden.

Mrs. Rose Quigley, chief inspector for Paramount, who with her five assistants passes upon some 1,500 reels a week, has just returned from her vacation. She has been gone for two weeks.

Fountain, special representative for Paramount, came out from New York to inspect the Des Moines exchange and check up on efficiency of the film business.

Hugh Bennett, well known in the Iowa and Nebraska territory for the last ten years, has secured the lease on the large Colonial theatre, Grinnell, Iowa.

90% of the motion picture theatres in Iowa are running throughout the year. It looks like a good summer.

J. C. Collins, Mgr. Rex theatre, Perry, and Nate Chapman, Mgr. of the Garden and Englert theatres, Iowa City, Iowa, were visitors at the Des Moines Exchange this week.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE

ALDERMAN Oscar Olson, chairman of the Council Judiciary Committee, announced last week that no action on recommendation of the motion picture censorship committee will be taken before next October, and probably the recommendations will not be approved. It is the belief around the city hall that the kills the commission's plans, which have been hanging fire for two and one-half years. Among the recommendations was one that censorship be taken from the police department, and another that three censors be appointed by the mayor at a minimum salary of three thousand dollars a year, to take charge of the proposed new censorship bureau. In making his announcement Alderman Ilson declared that there is no call for a stricter censorship of motion pictures in Chicago and added, "The movies are getting better every day and public condemnation of unwholesome pictures, rather than censorship, is responsible."

Julius Kramer and Jacob L. Schnadig have purchased a lot at the southeast corner of 63rd Street and Kedzie Avenue for a reported consideration of $87,500 and have engaged Architect Henry L. Newhouse to draw plans for a two story store and office building with a $400,000 moving picture theatre in the rear. Construction of the stores and offices will be started immediately and the theatre at an early date if a lessee can be secured to take over the house for a long term.

S. L. Rothafel, of the Capitol Theatre, New York, spent Saturday and Sunday in Chicago and made an inspection tour of the Ascher houses. He made favorable comments on the spotless condition of the theatres, the way they are conducted, and the neatness and courtesy of the ushers and staff of various houses.

With the termination of the lease held on the Ziegfeld Theatre by Harry Spanuth, on July 29th, Blum, Inc., the owners, it is reported will tear out the theatre and convert the twelve thousand feet of space it occupies, into stores. Work already is well under way in adding eight stories to the building and other improvements are contemplated. The Ziegfeld has played an important part in the Chicago theatrical history, having been opened by Will Brady as a legitimate house, many years ago, and later having been one of the original first run houses in the downtown section.

S. E. Pirtle, of Jerseyville, Illinois, who owns and operates the Pirtle circuit of theatres, consisting of six houses in Illinois, has purchased the Dixie Theatre at Vandalia, Illinois, taking possession on July 1st. Mr. Pirtle has closed this house for a few days while new equipment is installed and the theatre redecorated. It will be reopened shortly and according to reports, as remodeled, will be a handsome and up to date moving picture house.

Universal's team was taken into camp to the tune of thirteen to eight by Paramount's flock of Babe Ruths, at Washington Park last week. The batteries were:—Paramount, Given, p., Welpley and Ondracek, c., Universal, Lipton, p., and Collins, c., Paramount making fifteen hits and thirteen runs and Universal eight hits and eight runs. Paramount, flushed with victory now announces that its team is open to challenges from "film row."

A goodly number of the Chicago Rothacker Laboratory workers spent their Saturday afternoon half-holiday on the lake front where they cheered E. A. Bertram and Lee Andrews at their start in the Chicago to Saugatuck boat race. Bertram commanded the good ship Naniwa and Andres was his sole crew. After the race they planned to spend three weeks cruising around Macinac Island.

Charle Darrell is now manager of the Midway at Rockford, having succeeded Ed. Flynn. Darrell is well known in Chicago, have opened the Crown Theatre for Ascher Brothers when they took it over.

Sub Rosa, Ascher Brother's new house organ, which is being edited by Publicity Director Dick Robertson, is making a hit with the personnel of this big organization and contains much material of value to house managers, as well as interesting bits of news. F. J. Godsol, president of the Goldwyn Company, who was in Chicago last week, looked over the draft of the current Sub Rosa and said "Good stuff; do the boys read it and observe?" When told they did, he added, "That's good; there's meat to each paragraph."

Herbert W. Given, district manager for Paramount, announces the advent of Herbert W. Given, Jr. Herb declares that he is the "finest ever" and that he arrived just in time to see the greatest line of pictures ever released under the Paramount banner.

For the second time within two weeks, robbers broke into the manager's office of the Shakespeare Theatre and this time succeeded in opening the safe and getting away with the 4th of July receipts, which totaled about six hundred dollars. Managing Director Lamm believes the burglars are same gang, reenforced by an expert, who made a futile attempt to open the safe force. Johnson will be succeeded the last week in June. The Shakespeare seems to be the target for thieves, who earlier in the year "jimmied" their way in and extracted the nickels from the phone. The loss to Brunhild & Young, the owners, is entirely covered by the burglary insurance policy they hold.

An important conference was held in Chicago last week by Robertson-Cole, now the Film Booking Offices of America, Inc., officials, including Vice-President J. I. Schnitzer; General Manager Harry Berman; Division Manager James Klein; Division Manager E. C. Jensen, and Advertising Manager Nat Rothstein, all of the New York office, and exchange managers from as far west as San Francisco, including: C. R. Plough, Chicago; Mark Goldman, Cleveland; William Benjamin, Omaha; C. E. Penrod, Chicago Division Manager; Ray Churchill, Kansas City; E. J. Lipson, Seattle; A. C. Carrick, St. Louis; E. C. Gommersal, Cincinnati; Edwin Booth, Indianapolis; A. Elliott, Detroit; L. E. Harrington, Dallas; J. S. Nelson, Denver; Frank Jene, New Orleans; A. H. Schnitzer, Pittsburgh; and C. D. Beale, San Francisco. It was strictly a business session and officials were at work at the Congress Hotel from 10 A. M. to midnight during the three days of the meetings. Plans were matured for Fall and Winter sales campaigns, and the home office officials got in close touch with the various exchange managers. Enthusiasm was shown for the forthcoming Robertson-Cole releases, which, it was declared, will be the best and strongest box-office attractions ever offered by this organization. Opti-

Cleveland

J. A. McCarthy, assistant to R. A. White, general sales manager for the Fox Film Corporation, is a guest of the Cleveland Fox exchange, and plans to remain until July 1. McCarthy is visiting the key city branch exchanges all over the country.

Bob Cotton, local Fox branch manager is spending his vacation with the folks back home in Minneapolis.

W. B. Frank, general sales manager for Associated Exhibitors dropped into town last week for one of his brief but periodic visits.

Tom Colby, commander in chief of Universal's Cleveland exchange, left for Chicago last Friday night so as to answer "present" at the roll call at the convention of central western Universal exchange managers.

Al Lichtman was in the city last Saturday in conference with the officials of the Standard Film Service. Lichtman has closed with the Standard Film Service for the release of his product in Ohio, Kentucky, Michigan, West Virginia and western Pennsylvania.

Kansas City

The National Film Releasing Company is the latest independent distributing company to enter the field in Kansas City. F. F. Nine, formerly branch manager of the Vitagraph Kansas City office, is the organizer and head of the new concern, which will be located at Nineteenth and Wyandotte streets.

The sojourn of Ben Blotcky, former manager of the Kansas City American Releasing Corporation office, to Minneapolis, to accept a position on the sales force of Famous Players-Lasky, was short and abbreviated. He returned last week as manager of Paramount's Kansas City office. Blotcky has tasted experience in virtually every phase of the film game and has a host of staunch friends in the Kansas City territory, which probably is the reason for his transfer back to Kansas City.

Following the appointment of LeRoy Alexander as manager of the Kansas City Universal office, another change in the personnel of the Kansas City branch has been announced—the promotion of Art Johnson, who for more than two years has been head booker to a position as member of the sales

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Our Leading Citizen—
Sincere, true to life feature with good comedy and excellent cast. Good business getter. (Middle West.)

Great picture which sure did draw the crowds. (West.)

The Ordeal—
A fair picture. Business good, helped by weather. (East.)

The Woman Who Walked Alone—
Did a good business. Played to well filled houses for a week's run. (Middle West.)

Previously reported. Business as good as could be expected. (East.)

Across the Continent—
A snappy picture. Probably Reid's best auto yarn. Pulled big houses for week. (Middle West.)

Good picture but hasn't the laughs one usually gets out of the usual Wallie Reid picture. Business fair. (East.)

The Green Temptation—

The Bachelor Daddy—
Best Meighan picture we have shown. Patrons went wild over it. Business immense. (East.)

The Cradle—
Good and satisfying picture but business off. (East.)

It takes a stronger picture than this one to bring them in during the warm weather. (East.)

The Heart Specialist—
Poor picture. Business bad. (East.)

The Man From Home—
Held them out with this one. Pleased everybody and proved good box office attraction. (Middle West.)

One Glorious Day—
A real hot weather special. Did excellently and proved very popular. (Middle West.)

The Man Unconquerable—
Good summer entertainment. Drew average houses. (Middle West.)

Midnight—
Very good. (Middle West.)

At the Moon, Omaha, "The Trap" was advertised in this way.

The "Grand" of Pittsburgh uses contrasting types accentuating the different offered with the feature "Sonny"

Carmen—
Very good in its shortened form. (Middle West.)

Over the Border—
Mediocre story, but carried by scenery. Fair business. (East.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Crossroads of New York—
Outrivals "Suzanna." Went over big despite warm weather. (Middle West.)

Light comedy that pleased for summer entertainment. No great dramatic value. Fairly good business. (Middle West.)

Trouble—
Good Coogan feature. Played to good business. (Middle West.)

Better than "The Kid" and more appealing than "My Boy" is general comment. Drew good crowds during entire week. (Middle West.)

Sonny—
Went across in first class style. Barthelmess is very popular. (Middle West.)

The Cup of Life—
Patrons liked this one and the attendance for the week was unusually good. (Middle West.)

The Infidel—
Fair picture. Our patrons seemed neutral about it, neither enthusiastic nor critical. However, it didn't do any special business. (Middle West.)

GOLDWYN

Come on Over—
Went over good. Played to large attendance and won the approval of all patrons. (Middle West.)

Yellow Men and Gold—
Lurid melodrama, nothing distinctive. Business fair. (East.)

From the Ground Up—

Mr. Barnes of New York—
Moderately entertaining show. Poor business. (Middle West.)

FOX

The Last Trail—
Better than average of its kind. Business fair despite the weather. (Middle West.)

Very Truly Yours—
Ordinary stuff for Shirley Mason. (Middle West.)

Men of Zanzibar—
A good action picture which did very good at the box office. (East.)

The Broadway Peacock—
Pearl White is a Missouri product. Hence the picture did a lively business for the week. (Middle West.)

Footfalls—
Well advertised and went over better than most shows at this time of the year Good acting, gripping tale. (Middle West.)

The Yellow Stain—
Gilbert has a certain following here that enjoys his work. Did very well everything considered. (Middle West.)

METRO

Turn to the Right—
A feature built on a favored American theme which went over to fair business. (East.)

The Conquering Power—
Rodolph Valentino of course takes good in our section, but the picture itself was not also good. (East.)

Seeing's Believing—
Fair picture. Fair business. (East.)

AMERICAN RELEASING

Sisters—
Immensely good. Our patrons more than liked it and the attendance was very good. (East.)

A good picture and an average box office value. (Middle West.)

My Old Kentuky Home—
Good sentimental picture. Pulled ordinary houses for one week. (Middle West.)

Cardigan—
Satisfactory. (Middle West.)

SELZNICK

Evidence—
Better than the usual Hammerstein feature. Average box office attraction. (Middle West.)

Love's Masquerade—
Conway Tearle not well enough known to bring them in strong, but this one went over to satisfactory business. (East.)

HODKINSON

Jane Eyre—
A first-class picturization of the novel. Fine box office attraction. (Middle West.)

French Heels—
Mediocre picture. Fair business. (East.)

UNITED ARTISTS

Orphans of the Storm—
Great feature shown first time at popular prices. Proved big box office success. (Middle West.)

Disraeli—
Picture was praised by some of the patrons and criticized by others. As a drawing card it wasn't there. (East.)

UNIVERSAL

Delicious Little Devil—
Business extremely good. Picture is old enough to be new. Patrons were satisfied. (East.)

A wonderful hit. Mae Murray and Valentino co-starred, brought people who had never been in the theatre. Jammed all week. Going to hold it over a second week. (Middle West.)

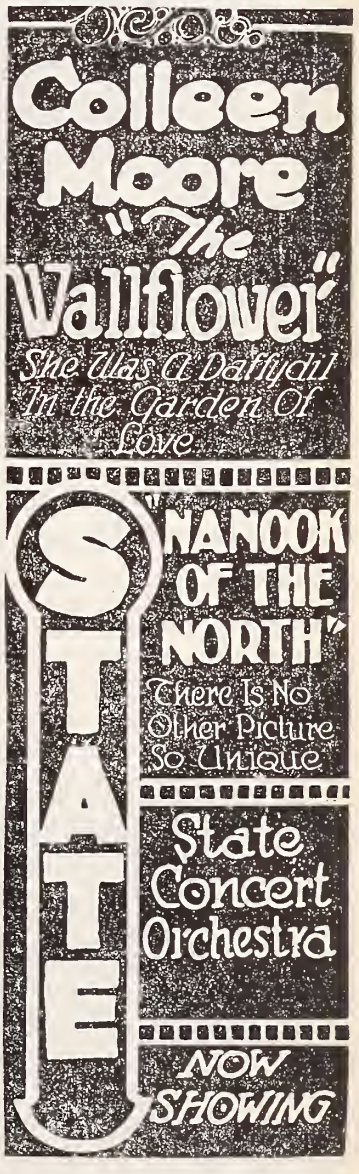
PATHE

The Real Adventure—
Fair picture. Fair business. (East.)

VITAGRAPH

My Wild Irish Rose—
Not much of a picture but it played to good business. (Middle West.)

FILM BOOKING OFFICES



The Vermillion Pencil—
A good entertainment. Patrons like Hayakawa and his pictures draw well. (Middle West.)

STATE RIGHTS

Her Night of Nights—
Fair picture with fair business. (West.)

Schooldays—
Very disappointing. Patrons didn't care for it and business was not as good as the picture should have done. (East.)

The Night Riders—
A very good picture, plenty of pep and action. Patrons liked it. (East.)

Well balanced advertising for a double feature program, State theatre, Minneapolis, showing "The Wallflower" and "Nanook of the North."

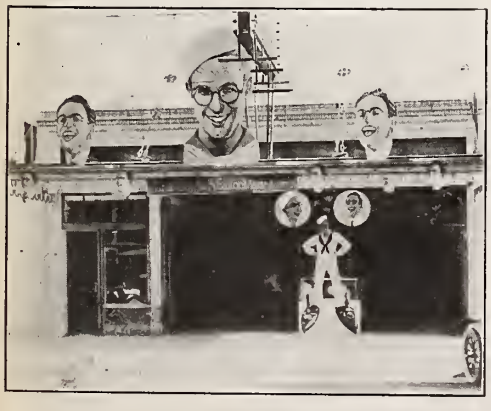
Lobby display and ballyhoo on "Thunderclap," provided for the Liberty theatre, Bartlesville, Oklahoma, by manager W. L. Berryman

Seattle Theatre Exploits "Black Bag" With Ballyhoo



Black bags were used to good advantage in the exploitation of the Columbia theatre, Seattle, Wash., recently, when that house played "The Black Bag."

The opening day of the photoplay, a character dressed to resemble Herbert Rawlinson, carrying a small black bag, walked up and down the streets of the city, and the first person to accost him and escort him to the theatre office was awarded a cash prize by the management. The stunt was well played up in the papers, and received a good share of attention.

The lobby front of the Columbia was decorated in black and white, and a large black bag resting upon white velvet was displayed in the center of the lobby. From the bag protruded diamond bar pins, necklaces, jewels and rings set with precious stones; pearl necklaces and other flashy articles of jewelry that caught the public eye immediately.

Small black bags were hung all around the edges and borders of the lobby and box office, and the door panels and sides of the lobby were decorated with colored stills from the photoplay, all mounted upon black backgrounds cut in the shape of bags.

Several of the leather goods stores in the city tied up with the Columbia in their window displays of bags and scenes from the attraction.

Cut-outs of Lloyd used to decorate the lobby of the Capitol theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla., during the run of "The Sailor Made Man"

Lobby Display on "No Woman Knows" Attractive

THE accompanying cut shows the lobby display for "No Woman Knows" which Manager S. M. Brooks of the Royal theatre, Little Rock, Ark., under the direction of George Watters, built recently. Mr. Brooks paneled in his box office to represent a book which carried the title of the book, the author's name and some high points in the picture. Cards were displayed in the lobby with large red question marks and the title of the picture in the background, also several cut-outs of actual scenes.

Decorations for "Over the Border," arranged by J. B. Carroll, manager of the Imperial theatre, Asheville, N. C.

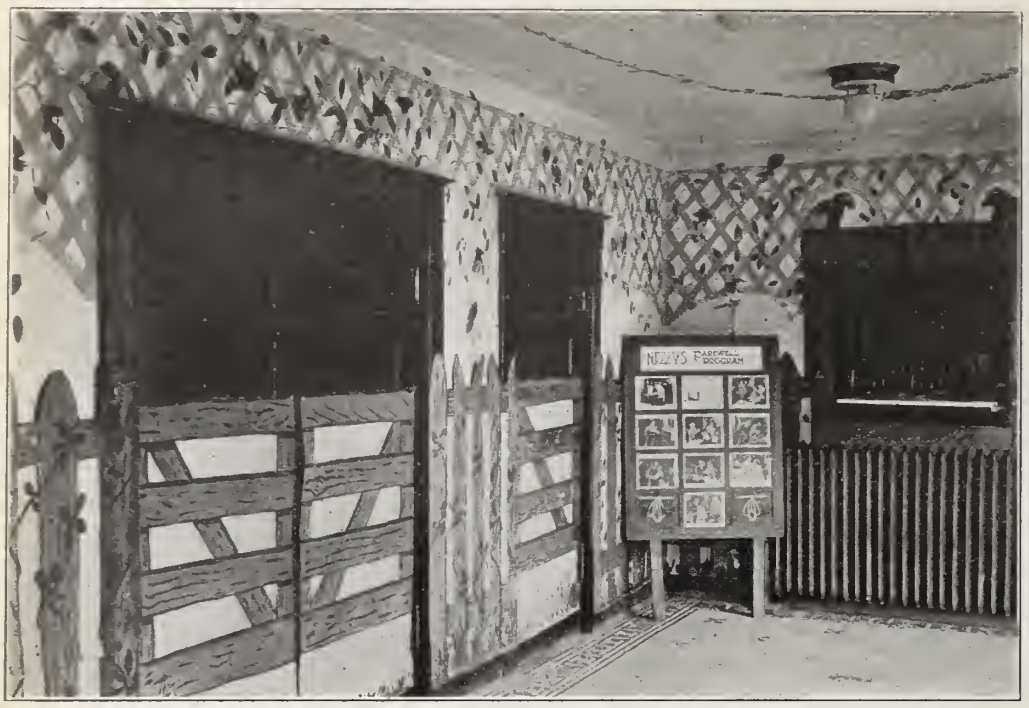
Uses the Sea Captain of "My Boy" as Ballyhoo

The Garden Theatre, Battle Creek, Mich. had run "Peck's Bad Boy" the exploitation for which centered around a Jackie Coogan contest and other angles of the young star's daily habits and personal characteristics. Along came "My Boy" and the manager of the Garden, determined to give his patrons a change of program, selected the old sea captain as a picturesque figure to vary the street menu for a score of Jackie impersonators.

An old salt was found who dressed up to resemble the captain and gave out cards advertising the picture. It pays, in exploitation, to remember that variety is as desirable on the street as on the screen.

Cooperative Advertising Alters Paper's Policy

The heretofore inaccessible Barrie Examiner was annexed for the run of "Fool's Paradise" at the Opera House, Barrie, Ontario, when Manager John Powell tied up with five merchants for cooperative ads.



With the aid of Leon Bamberger, Paramount Exploiteer for Canada, these ads were laid out on a single page. The text of each contained both title of the picture and the name of one of the featured players. There were also several hidden names in the ads which entitled the owners to free tickets. So appreciative was the paper of this revenue, that they gave a whole page to "Fool's Paradise" publicity.

Special Overture Compiled for "School Days" Showing

Paul Maiss, organist at the Superba theatre, San Diego, Cal., for the week's showing of "School Days," played a specially arranged overture which met with popular approval. In his arrangement Mr. Maiss started off with the old song, "School Days," then gave the school bell calling the children in from play, followed by the salute to the flag, with the bugle sounding. The children were then supposed to follow with the singing of "America," and other familiar airs. For the closing portion of the overture he gave "Home Sweet Home."

The ticket booth of the Rialto theatre, Augusta, Ga., dressed for "Pay Day"

Lobby arrangement for the Linwood theatre, Tarkio, Mo., with the season's closing attraction "The Old Nest"

Snow Lobby Makes Chickasha Fans Want to See "Over the Border"

A "snow" lobby display was an effective part of the exploitation which Manager Clayton Tunstill of the Rialto theatre, Chickasha, Okla., used in putting over "Over the Border."

By means of cotton, imitation snow, some Epson salts and beer, the entire lobby was frosted over and looked as if a snow storm had recently hit it. Local merchants in Chickasha loaned the theatre management two wild cats and a fox. Of course, these were stuffed animals, but the effect that they gave made the whole display look very real. A live opossum was chained to the post telling of the dividing line between the United States and Canada. This live animal in the lobby caused considerable comment from everyone who passed the theatre.

Large bags of imitation snow were hidden from view above the marquise and at intervals would open, causing snow to flake down in front of the lobby.

Striking Window Display for "Fools First"

ONE of the most striking window displays ever seen, reproduced an entire block of a prosperous business section in Dallas featuring the new Hope Theatre which was playing "Fools First" at the time. A miniature outline of sky-scrapers and office buildings stared at the spectator who looked through the window into what was only the bottom floor of one of these skyscrapers.

At the right end of the display was the Hope Theatre with the sign of "Fools First." Before its doors, opening a hospitable invitation to all Dallas, automobiles passed by in miniature and a street car of diminutive proportions chugged along without bothering about fares.

The back drop constituted a sky line. The entire display was an artistic and daring conception that won interest by its boldness and accuracy.

Trolley Fare Boost Tied Up With "Foolish Wives" Campaign

One of the most unusual tie-up arrangements ever noted in Canada was that which Manager T. Logan of the Allen Theatre, London, Ontario, conducted along with various local bicycle dealers of the city. The hook-up was held in conjunction with the presentation of "Foolish Wives" at the theatre and following the decision of the London Street Railway Company to double trolley fares. The features of the tie-up included the publication of a two-page combination spread in the London Free Press and the display of about 40 new bicycles in the lobby of the theatre along with appropriate signs. London is a great cycling centre and the stunt went over well.

One page of the double-page spread in the newspaper carried reading matter referring to the special production. The second page carried a sweep line and reading matter of an appropriate nature which drew attention to the economy and general utility of the bicycle in view of greatly increased street car fares. The flare heading on the second page read:—"Foolish Wives who still pack dinner pails and lunches and allow their husbands to pay out $62.40 per year in car fares when $50 buys a bicycle." The same theme was emphasized in a half-page advertisement by local bicycle establishments. The one page told of the realism of the picture while the other announced that the "bicycle is the solution to your transportation problems."

Picture Page Editor Interviews Von Stroheim by Telephone

A long distance 'phone conversation with Von Stroheim pepped up the showing of "Foolish Wives" for Manager Burke of the Palace Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas. Arrangements were made in advance with the Universal Studios in California and at 1 P. M. on the day of opening, Von Stroheim was put on the wire and interviewed by Mabel Clark, picture page editor of the Fort Worth Daily Record. The novelty created much interest and the newspaper was generous with free space on the stunt.

Lobby arrangement employed by the Liberty theatre, Yakima, Washington, offering "Smilin' Through," the feature attraction

Tremendous Campaign Rouses New York

Big Drive for Broadway Run on "In the Name of the Law"

"In the Name of the Law" was ushered into its pre-season run at the George M. Cohan theatre, New York, with an exploitation campaign which proved to be one of the most thorough and extensive ever used in connection with a Broadway run. The entire drive was the work of Nat G. Rothstein, advertising and publicity director of F. B. O.

For a week before the showing all passersby in the Times Square district were told of the coming attraction by means of a huge sign which was erected after special permission was obtained from the city officials, just north of the Times Building, in Times Square. One side of this sign announced the picture's opening and the reverse carried an eye-catching line of selling talk.

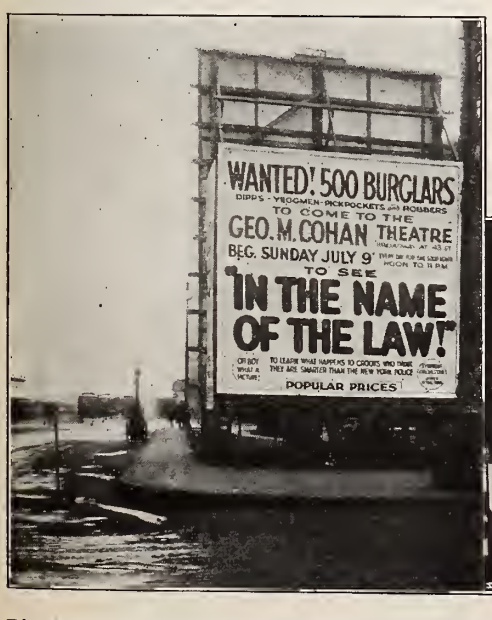
The campaign also included banners hung across many of the main streets of Manhattan and the Bronx.

Permission was obtained for stringing banners in places which have not carried advertising of any nature since the Liberty Loan drives of war times.

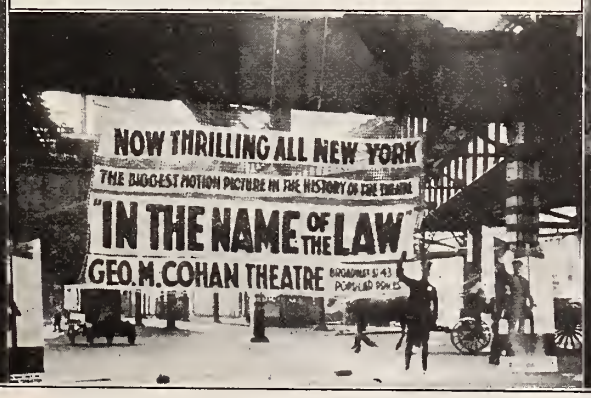
One of the many street stunts arranged in behalf of the picture consisted of a large touring car manned by a cameraman, an actor dressed as a policeman, and a girl. The auto carried a sign reading: "Scenes being retaken for 'In the Name of the Law,' at the George M. Cohan theatre." Wall-street and lower Broadway, the theatrical district and uptown neighborhoods were invaded by this car with the occupants stopping every few blocks to enact a dramatic scene while the cameraman turned his crank from inside the car. The stunt, which was staged a few days before the run and which will be continued during the engagement, attracted considerable attention and brought the picture to the attention of thousands.

A direct mail campaign was carried on on a big scale. In all thirty-one thousand letters were mailed to individuals in the metropolitan district. A letter reached every O'Hara family (the name of the family in the photoplay) and various trade professions were circularized. Special nights at the Cohan theatre have been designated "lawyers' night," "doctors' night," and so forth.

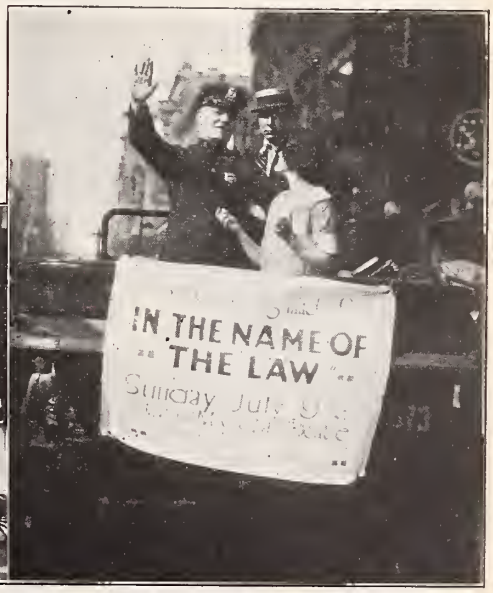
On the day preceding the opening, four huge auto buses, filled to overflowing with lusty-voiced newsboys, awoke New York to the fact that "In the Name of the Law" was soon to be presented at the Cohan theatre. These youngsters each carried a bundle of The Midnight Star, a miniature newspaper which was printed by the F. B. O. exploitation forces as an exploitation novelty. Made up with as much care as a big daily, its headlines compelled attention. The sightseeing buses covered the entire city, leaving a newsboy every few blocks to distribute his papers. As approximately 250 boys were crowded into the big cars, practically every neighborhood saw many copies of The Midnight Star before the day had passed.



"The Enquiry Reporter" was used to good advantage by Mr. Rothstein and his staff. Two young men, with a band on their arm explaining their mission, patroled Broadway, acting as walking and talking twenty-four sheets. Their questions, which were always listened to with interest, apprised hundreds of people in this personal manner of "In the Name of the Law."



Special efforts were made to obtain advantageous window displays and "In the Name of the Law" placards were displayed in more than five hundred shop windows. Tie-ups were arranged with the Beck-Hazzard Shoe Company and the Remington Typewriter Company, the latter tie-up being effective nationally. In all of these window cards the pictorial theme—the policeman with raised hand—was used throughout.



Improvised Lanterns Make Favorable Impression

Improvised lanterns made of window cards for "Over the Hill" and "Queen of Sheba" were used to great advantage by the management of the Egypt theatre, Fort Worth, Tex., during runs of these productions.

By using four window cards the lettering on which had been cut out, shaping them into box formation, and touching them off with paper tassel work, a unique lantern was obtained. Electric bulbs were placed within, and the light shone out through the apertures of the letters. These lanterns were hung in windows and at street corners about Fort Worth, and attracted much attention.

Another "Snow" Lobby Display Finds Favor

In exploiting "Broken Silence," Manager J. B. Robertson of the Palace theatre, Fort Smith, Ark., arranged a most attracttive "snow" lobby display. All the photo frames were hung with cotton sprinkled with imitation snow. Two small cedar trees were placed in the center of the lobby, which were also camouflaged to represent scenes from the far north. The upper portion of the lobby was covered with white cloth painted so as to give a bleak northern atmosphere. Imitation icicles hung from this canopy and also decorated the sides of the lobby. In the center of the display was a 200 pound cake of ice, with photographs of scenes from the picture frozen in the ice. This stunt alone created considerable attention, since it was so unusual to see a photograph in a chunk of ice.

A local ice factory worked up the display and took charge of the ice.

New England Women in Discussion of Clothes

An essay contest on "What the Women Will Wear" has been started throughout the entire Black Circuit in New England to advertise "Beauty's Worth."

A Marion Davies doll secured by the exhibitor at reasonable price from Cosmopolitan is the prize. The stunt has been put into effect by John P. McConville, Paramount Exploiteer, Lee Rhodenizer and Percy Maxon, of the Black publicity staff. The three exploitation men came into Concord, N. H., recently and tied up with the Patriot, the town's leading newspaper which sponsored the contest. Nearly 100 essays were received.

The three exploitation men ran similar contests in Brockton, for the Rialto Theatre and for the Taunton Theatre, Taunton, Mass.

Punch and Judy Show As "Green Temptation" Exploitation

A fine drawing card on "The Green Temptation" was a Punch and Judy show worked in the lobby by Manager Robinson of the Palace Theatre, Fort Smith, Ark. A big shadow box draped in velvet, was built at the edge of the sidewalk, with a narrow opening across and just over the heads of passers-by. Rag dolls were mounted on a stick and were fine resemblances to Punch and Judy. These danced and bowed across the opening, to the accompaniment of a squeaky tin horn, sounding much like a ventriloquist. In addition, the lobby floor was painted with green chalk, and 1,000 green cards were mailed "For Men Only."

Calvert's "Smilin' Through" Well Balanced and Pleasing

One of the most pleasing and well balanced programs ever arranged in connection with "Smilin' Through" was presented by the Capitol theatre, St. Paul. The stage was done over to give the English garden effect with vines, trellises and arbor benches. A company of six rendered the following extracts from "Maytime," with Marion Crary and Katherine Lowe featured: "Go Away, Girls;" "Road to Paradise," "Gypsy Song," "Dancing Will Keep You Young" and "Will You Remember."

Lowell V. Calvert, master of ceremonies for such functions, arranged the presentation.

Parkway Theatre Has Attractive Summer Settings

One of the most attractive summer stage settings ever put on at a Baltimore theatre has been devised at the Parkway, one of the Whitehurst chain in the Maryland city, by House Manager Jefferson. Its background consists of a sky-blue drapery. About the stage are a dozen vases of large size, in which are kept dainty flowers which blend with the background.

The central feature is a prismatic fountain, which throws a mist-like spray perhaps 18 inches high. From the flies three 1,000 watt lights which shine upon the fountain through a color wheel. This is revolved by means of pulleys, and the effect is delightful.

The town of Meriden, Conn., is reporter as enthusiastically following newspaper advertising for the Community Play House, which are made up of intimate heart-to-heart chats by Manager Ralph Thayer, whose method strikes Meriden readers as a distinct novelty.

For example, excerpt from one of the chats, which appears in medium type, surrounded with much white space:

"Today 'Her Husband's Trademark,' And my dear, after you have seen the gowns she wears, you can readily see why Gloria Swanson is called the best dressed woman on the screen."

This is an example of the worth-while suggestions offered by Claude Saunders, of the Paramount Exploitation Service, upon which exhibitors cash in to advantage.

Everett Builds Excellent Lobby Front on "Peacock Alley"

A novelty lobby display for "Peacock Alley" is one of the latest exploitation accomplishments for J. H. Everett, manager of the Palace theatre, Maryville, Tenn.

An eight foot disc was made from compoboard. In the center was mounted a three sheet cut-out of the star. The entire disc was then painted in brilliant colors to represent peacock feathers radiating out from the center. Around the edge in delicate lettering was "Mae Murray in Peacock Alley." This was placed in the center of the lobby.

Three sheet cut-outs of peacocks were also made and touched up with an air brush.

Rialto Theatre, Denver, Ties-up with Ford Dealers

The Rialto theatre, Denver, staged a spectacular parade, in selling "Across the Continent," by calling together the ten Ford dealers of the city. This tie up was possible for A. G. Birsch, manager, because the Dent car which is used in the picture is a flivver. Each dealer pledged himself to provide twenty cars, drivers and girls as occupants. The theatre furnished a band and the Ford people and the theatre management went 50-50 on the painting and banner expenses.

Heading the parade was a tractor, pulling a trailer, carrying the band. Both vehicles carried banners advertising "Across the Continent." There was also another banner to the effect that Wallace Reid, for the first time, drives a flivver.

The theatre's share of the stunt, including the band and paper cost, was only $62.00.

Ogg Gives "Four Horsemen" Comprehensive Exploitation

When Manager E. C. Ogg of the Imperial theatre, South Pittsburg, Tenn., played "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," he began his exploitation campaign by the use of his regular slides. This advertising was followed by more than average newspaper space and special text stories were secured.

To a great extent, he depended on outdoor methods of reaching his prospects, using one-sheets, three-sheets and six-sheets to post nearby towns, from which he hoped to draw patronage.

On almost every street in town the sidewalks were chalked with the title of the coming attraction, the day before opening.

Cooperative windows were also secured in advance and window cards were placed in the windows of a number of business houses.

In his lobby, Mr. Ogg used very effectively a cut-out of the 24-sheet.

Pogo-Sticks Latest Exploitation Novelty

BOTH Pantage's Theatre, Minneapolis, and the Tower Theatre, St. Paul, got a rise out of the populace by a party of six boys dressed as clowns travelling on Pogo-Sticks.

The Pogo-Stick is a toy recently come into wide popularity. It consists of a long pole, foot pieces and a spring. The rider makes a jump on the pedals, which slide down and then spring up again—boy and all. It is good exercise and lots of fun.

The boys were dressed in outlandish clown costumes and were accompanied on the tour by a brass band. They also carried signs on them which read:

"We are Po-Going From Pantage's Theatre to the Tower Theatre to see "Fool's Paradise."

June Brides See "Bride's Play" as Guests of Manager Hill

Issuing formal invitations to all the June brides of this year, Manager Dwight Hill of the Pickwick theatre in San Diego, Cal., secured some good publicity for the week's showing of "The Bride's Play." Mr. Hill secured his mailing list from the official records of the county clerk's office, and to the brides he sent passes, with a cordial note of invitation to see the picture. Any others who became brides after Mr. Hill got his list out were given the necessary credentials upon application at the box office.

Kennedy Decorates Marquee for "Foolish Wives" Showing

Manager Kennedy of Allen's theatre, Ottawa, recently gave his exploitation attentions to "Foolish Wives." One of the outdoor attractions for the feature was a marquee display which consisted of a huge spider's web with a monstrous spider which was lying in wait for a group of women, the latter being represented by cutouts from the posters. The moving part of the display was the spider which was shown crawling up and down the netting that represented the web.

"Voice from Minaret" Under Way

The past week saw the christening of two First National attractions—Joseph M. Schenck's "The Voice from the Minaret," starring Norma Talmadge, and B. P. Schulberg's "Money, Money, Money," featuring the beauteous Katherine MacDonald.

Coincident with the final editing, cutting and titling of "The Eternal Flame," Miss Talmadge's next release through First National, the filming of this star's much discussed "The Voice from the Minaret" got under way at the United Studios where three expansive stages will be utilized in the picturing of this colorful and romantic Oriental story.

Joseph M. Schenck is authority for the statement that Norma's next picture will cost in the neighborhood of $600,000. "The Voice from the Minaret" is from the play of the same name by Robert Hichens. As a stage play it created a furore in London, and the critics prophecy that it will provide Miss Talmadge with the most emotional and elastic role that she has yet essayed.

"The Kentucky Derby" in Editorial Stage

"The Kentucky Derby" has been finished. This Universal-Jewel dramatic spectacle on which King Baggot has been busy for eleven weeks has passed into the editorial stage.

Reginald Denny, Lillian Rich, Gertrude Astor, Walter McGrail, Lionel Belmore, Kingsley Benedict, Bert Woodruff, Bert Tracey, Emmett King and others enact the principal roles in an adapted form of Charles T. Dazey's oldtime stage success, "The Suburban." Benedict played the same role that he lived for nine and a half years on the American and European stages.

Season's Last Christie Due This Month

"Mile-a-Minute Mary," the last comedy of the Christie series of 1921-22, is released this month, completing the twenty-four which have been issued in the past year through Educational Exchanges. This comedy featuring Dorothy Devore, supported by Henry Murdock, has received favorable reviews in the trade and is said by Educational to be a fitting conclusion to the most popular series the Christie company has produced to date.

Christie and his aides have already started work on the new series which will also be distributed by Educational.

Metro Signs Star Directors

Beaumont, Vidor, Badger, Chautard Will Stage New Series of Pictures

IN accordance with its established policy of obtaining the best possible talent for the production of Metro pictures, four directors of renown have been signed by that organization to stage the new series of pictures at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

Harry Beaumont, King Vidor, Clarence Badger and Emile Chautard are four successful directors now occupying offices in the Metro administration building.

Beaumont has been a member of the Metro forces for a year, having directed Viola Dana in five of her most recent productions. He has been assigned to handle the megaphone again for Miss Dana's new series of pictures, and has started the filming of "Page Tim O'Brien," the little star's newest production.

King Vidor, who has been responsible for numerous successful pictures during the past few years and who has had his own producing company for some time, will direct the Metro film version of "Peg O' My Heart," the famous J. Hartley Manners stage play in which Laurette Taylor will star.

"Quincy Adams Sawyer," the widely read story from the pen of Charles Felton Pidgin, will be Clarence Badger's first picture for Metro. This will be a Metro-S-L Special production, to be played by an all star cast.

Emile Chautard will direct the first of the Special Stories Series, "Country Love," in which Billie Dove heads a distinguished cast.

Tearle Engaged by Selznick

Popular Star Will Make Two Big Specials During Coming Season

CLOSE on the heels of the announcement by Lewis J. Selznick, President of Select Pictures Corp., that the producing units regularly contributing to the Select output had abandoned the restricted "star" plan and would in the future produce pictures using story, star, and production value entirely at the discretion of the producer, comes another announcement that Conway Tearle has been engaged by Selznick Pictures Corporation to appear in two big Selznick specials during the coming season.

Myron Selznick, President of Selznick Pictures Corporation, completed arrangements with Tearle at the New York offices of the company a few days ago and signed him on the dotted line.

Until other members of the casts which will include Tearle are definitely engaged, President Selznick is withholding information as to the specials in which Tearle will appear. It is definitely announced however,

Maloney in Western Series

Pathe Announces Signing Contract With Star for Two-Reel Features

"THE Range Rider Series," a succession of two-reel Western features starring Leo D. Maloney, have been accepted for distribution by Pathe. General Manager Elmer Pearson announces the signing of a contract to that effect, releases to be one every two weeks beginning early in the Fall.

Pathe declares this new product superior to the successful "Santa Fe Mac" series, which established Maloney in public favor as a most magnetic and picturesque figure of his spirited, hard-riding type that has appeared on the picture screen. "The Range Rider Series" are described as clean dramas of effective craftsmanship and pervaded with the quickened inspiration of all outdoors, the rugged natural settings being remarkable for beauty and perfection of photography.

Pictures of this type and length are known to have gained enormously in popularity through the record made by Tom Satschi in the long series of two-reelers distributed by Pathe. Maloney is declared to add to similar presentations of realistic Western life a youthful and electric personality and dare-devil horsemanship that are irresistible. He is

New Style Press Books for Paramount

With the issuance of the press sheet on Marion Davies in the Cosmopolitan production, "The Young Diana," which is scheduled for release August 7, Paramount has inaugurated a new style in its press books. From now on, the book on each production will be of full newspaper size, printed in newspaper style on a fine, heavy grade of news stock.

This new press book or "Paramount Press Sheet," as it is called, is the result of many requests from exhibitors and theatre advertising managers for a simpler and more easily handled sheet than the book form afforded.

The usual size of the sheet will be four pages, and in the case of some of the super-specials this will be enlarged to eight.

Fashion Show Features "Little Wildcat"

A Fashion Show will be a feature of Alice Calhoun's new picture, "Little Wildcat."

Miss Peggy Hamilton fashion dictator of the Coast, and rotogravure fashion editress of the Los Angeles Times, was engaged for this picture, together with her trained models, for the interiors showing the fashionable shops.

The introduction of Miss Hamilton's well trained models, and her own expert knowledge of dress, adds immeasurably, both to the realism, and to the interest in the experiment.

Miss Calhoun has completed what is confidently expected to be her best picture in "Little Wildcat," and in the process has displayed great versatility.

Selznick Stars Guests of L. A. C. of C.

The ever energetic Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce is leaving nothing undone to convince the motion picture people that California is the only place for them to work. Their latest effort is one of actual entertainment for the film workers. In this they have the co-operation of the many surrounding resorts.

Last week an invitation was extended to the members of the Selznick West Coast Studios to visit Catalina Island for some fishing. Owen Moore, Kathryn Perry, Vic Heerman and Eddie Sturgis took advantage of the opportunity and as a result have been completely won over to California's side of the motion picture argument. At least until a new theatrical season opens on Broadway.

Rothstein's N.Y. Campaign

Great Exploitation Introduces "In the Name of the Law" in Big City

"IN THE NAME OF THE LAW" had been introduced to the New York public by an exploitation campaign staged by Nat G. Rothstein that has seldom been equalled in the motion picture history of the metropolis. Its opening at noon on a hot Sunday proved that the campaign was as efficacious as it was big. This is in spite of the fact that the George M. Cohan theatre is new to pictures and that the advance advertising was concentrated, starting only a few weeks before the opening.

It is the belief of the Film Booking Offices of America, which will release this picture in the early fall as a special, that this production has already proven its exploitation values. Exploitations of a most startling nature preceded the showing. Unprecedented in the history of motion pictures, a huge sign was erected by Mr. Rothstein in the heart of the theatrical district, at the north end of the Times Building. This is the most coveted advertising spot in all New York and has only been used for advertising purposes to aid such drives as the Liberty Loans and Red Cross drives. Banners were stretched across many of the important streets of Manhattan and the Bronx and a variety of street ballyhoos were used.

"We are, of course, intensely gratified by the showing made by our picture at its world's premiere," said Mr. Schnitzer, vice president of F. B. O. in discussing the picture. "It is living up to all of our hopes, both as regards to its adaptibility to exploitation and as to its entertainment value. We know that even such exploitation as Mr. Rothstein has given 'In the Name of the Law' will not carry a mediocre picture, and the fact that we overcame the terrific obstacle of hot weather during the entire day and followed up with an excellent business on Monday and Tuesday assures us that we have a picture of real entertainment value.

"We confidently expect 'In the Name of the Law,' to continue its big business during the entire New York engagement."

Johnnie Walker, new R-C star, whose first picture for release through Film Booking Offices of America is "My Dad," to be issued July 23.

Larry Weber Is Again Active in Game

Keen comment in film circles was created by the recent announcement of the renewed interest in film affairs exhibited by L. Lawrence Weber when he and his associate Bobby North signed Director Will Nigh for a series of super specials for the independent market.

The negotiations with Will Nigh bring Weber once again to the foreground of filmdom. This aggressive promoter and Producer holds a rare place in film annals. He flashed to the fore years back when the industry was cutting teeth with the introduction of Olga Pterova for the first time in pictures. Weber carved another niche in picture history when he organized Metro and shaped its policies as one of the original Board of Directors. He showed his genius in cutting new paths when he appeared with the super screen presentation of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" with Sir Johnson Forbes Robertson in his original role. The pioneer producer then followed with another sensation—"Raffles" with John Barrymore in the title role.

Wally Reid Finishes "Ghost Breaker"

Wallace Reid has finished his work in "The Ghost Breaker," his latest for Paramount, directed by Alfred Green, and after a three-day rest began work the latter part of last week in William de Mille's production of "Clarence," in which he is co-featured with Agnes Ayres and May McAvoy.

The star's last few days of work in the first named picture were very strenuous, due to an almost continuous succession of fight scenes with twelve men in heavy armor in an old Spanish castle setting.

"The Storm" B'way Hit

Universal Jewel Is Well Exploited and Gives Promise of Great Run

"THE STORM," Universal-Jewel's adaptation of Langdon McCormick's stage success, is the sensation of New York, according to Andrew J. Cobe, manager of the Shubert Central theatre, where the picture is now in the second week of its phenomenal run.

The unsurpassed manner in which this film thriller is standing up despite most unfavorable weather conditions, strong counter attractions and other obstacles is due in a large part to the forceful presentation arranged by Cobe, the remarkable mechanical effects installed by McCormick, and a forceful exploitation campaign engineered by Marc Lachmann, Universal exploiteer.

The lobby contains many unusual effects in the way of novelties and innovations devised by the Universal's Exploitation Department.

Several realistic transparencies showing the scorching flames flashing through the huge trees of the forest, with dense clouds of smoke arising from the blazing timber, furnish continual movement and attract and hold the interest of the spectator. Artistically framed oil paintings of punch scenes are shown from the production and colored portraits in oil of three featured players, House Peters, Virginia Valli and Matt Moore.

Ask "Grandma's Boy" Dates

Exhibitors Ask Earliest Bookings Possible for Harold Lloyd Feature

WITH the time officially set for the national release of the Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors feature, produced by Hal Roach, "Grandma's Boy," still nearly two months away, leading exhibitors throughout the coutry are clamoring for bookings at the earliest dates possible to secure. Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated, annnounced this week a long list of engagements entered for well known theatres, and these are declared to represent only a comparatively small part of the nation-wide demand.

Several cities on the Pacific cost and a few in the Rocky mountain district will have their first view of "Grandma's Boy" in the next few weeks, Harold Lloyd's first five parts feature seeming to vie with summer resort weather as an attraction in these favored localities. Only in the case of such tourist Meccas are departures being made from the decision fixing September as the release month.

July 9th saw the start of a run of indefinite length in San Francisco. The Golden Gate city is filled with convention visitors this summer and M. L. Markowitz, owner of the Strand, explains his booking of "Grandma's Boy" in the statement that he considered it a patriotic civic duty to bag the very best attraction obtainable. M. Naify of the T. & D. Jr. Enterprises has procured the picture for the Goddard Theatre, Sacramento, one of the finest houses in the California capital.

"Nanook of the North" Wins Critics' Praise

Less than three weeks after the release of "Nanook of the North," exhibitors, patrons and reviewers in widely separated sections of the United States were united in pronouncing the unique Pathe special Eskimo feature among the greatest productions ever screened.

In "Judge," issue of July 8, Heywood Broun, wrote:

"Go North, young picture men, Go North!" and continued with such expressions as these:

"'Nanook of the North' and his family act their own story before the camera of Robert J. Flaherty, up where the seals and the walruses come from, and so unversed are they all in the art of motion picture acting that every move they make is beautiful, exciting and eloquent."

An amusing screen novelty, described as a "novelette, bound in leather," is "Feet—Her's 'N His'n," the outstanding feature of Pathe Review No. 165, which has been scheduled for release the week of July 23rd.

The subject shows a romance with two pairs of feet—masculine and feminine—playing the leading roles and expressing all the necessary emotions for a love affair. The camera only records the feet and ankles of the two leading characters, showing the masculine pair waiting for the feminine ones to appear, the quarrel, the separation, the reunion, and finally the wedding.

"To Have and to Hold" Nears Completion

George Fitzmaurice has practically finished the studio and location work on his production for Paramount, "To Have and To Hold," adapted by Ouida Bergere from Mary Johnston's famous novel and the film will soon be ready for the cutting room.

Betty Compton and Bert Lytell are co-starred in this picturization of the story.

Scenes Under Water in "Monte Cristo"

UNDERWATER scenes are an interesting feature of the new William Fox super-production "Monte Christo," adapted from the famous novel by Alexandre Dumas and constituting one of the big specials listed by Fox for the season of 1922-23.

Few scenes of this character have been used as a sequence or part of a dramatic narrative. Readers of the great novel will recall the sensational escape of Edmond Dantes from the Chateau d'If; how, after twenty years imprisonment, he sews himself in a sack, is thrown into the sea as dead, rips himself free from the bag and makes his way to the island of concealed treasure.

As this episode forms one of the most dramatic and thrilling moments of the play, the introduction of underwater photography, showing every incident as pictured by Dumas, was first considered a risk because of the danger which lies in the usual methods of such filming.

However, the feat was successfully accomplished, mainly because John Gilbert, playing Dantes, is an expert swimmer and diver, and was able, therefore, to lend dramatic truth to the performance, which a double would have been unable to do.

"Forest Fire" Declared Hair Raiser

"The Forest Fire," the second episode of the new Pathe serial, "The Timber Queen," starring Ruth Roland, is one of the most spectacular and thrilling chapters ever seen in a serial according to the Pathe office. The episode has been scheduled by Pathe for release the week of July 23rd.

The current chapter shows Bruce Gordon swinging out over a gulch on a rope and rescuing Ruth from a runaway freight car. The climax occurs with the forest fire, showing giant trees in flames, and finally, Ruth Roland trapped in her burning home and escaping by climbing to the roof and jumping to a tall tree.

"Bull Dog Drummond" Is Being Filmed

"Bull Dog Drummond" the melodramatic success which ran all last season in the Knickerbocker Theatre, New York, is being filmed. This important announcement came from Producers Security Corporation which will handle the releasing arrangements in America.

Evelyn Greeley and Carlyle Blackwell are cast for the leading roles and the direction is by Oscar Apfel. The trio of stars sailed for Holland several weeks ago where the interiors are being made and the company will then go to England to film the exteriors on the exact locale of the story.

Christie Studio Speeds Up

Full Steam Ordered on 20 Comedies Under Agreement with Educational

THE wheels are turning faster at the Christie Studio, and they will soon be going at full speed on the pictures scheduled under the new 1922-1923 agreement between Christie and Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., which calls for twenty instead of the accustomed twenty-four Christie Comedies, but each of which is to be a bigger comedy production.

Camera work was started several days ago with one of the Christie Comedy companies, under the personal direction of Al Christie, almost immediately after he and the production manager, H. D. Edwards, returned from their vacation trip to Europe. Christie had previously ordered the principals to be ready for work and the sets constructed, and no time was lost in getting the cameras going. The picture will be a horse racing story with Dorothy Devore and George Stewart in the leading roles.

Although Stewart, who is a brother of Anita Stewart, was engaged by Christie some time ago, this will be his first picture, as Christie has been waiting for the opportune time for this young actor to make his comedy debut.

Christie's other directors, William Beaudine, Harold Beaudine and Scott Sidney, will all be making new pictures within a few days. William Beaudine has recently completed a Bobby Vernon picture, "Pardon My Glove," and Sidney has finished "The Son of a Sheik," featuring Neal Burns.

These two pictures will start the 1922-23 Christie Comedy series, with the first release about the first of September, only a few weeks after the last of the present series, "Mile a Minute Mary."

Neal Burns, Dorothy Devore, Bobby Vernon, Vera Steadman, George Stewart and Charlotte Stevens are scheduled to play the leading parts in most of the comedies of the new series.

Strand Books Fox Specials

Broadway Runs Are Assured for "The Fast Mail" and "A Fool There Was"

FOX FILM CORPORATION announces the consummation of negotiations whereby a number of its special productions for the season of 1922-23 will be given Broadway runs at the Strand theatre, New York. The first two will be "The Fast Mail," booked for the week of July 9, and "A Fool There Was," for the week of July 16. Further stipulations of the deal provide for the showing of the pictures at the Brooklyn Strand following in each instance the engagement at the Manhattan house.

This is the first time in the history of the Strand that full length Fox productions will be shown there. Heretofore the Strand program has contained Fox features of the shorter lengths, including Fox News, all comedies and many educational subjects.

"The Fast Mail," the first of the series to be presented, is an adaptation from the famous stage melodrama of that name which has entertained thousands of theatregoers for many years. Lincoln J. Carter, celebrated as the "father of the American melodrama," is the author of the story and will attend the opening of the production at the Strand. "The Fast Mail" is melodrama of the supreme type, and the fact that it has been booked by one of Broadway's leading theatres indicates clearly the clean, wholesome diversion which characterizes it.

"A Fool There Was," which follows "The Fast Mail" at the Strand, is another of the formidable array of Fox specials for the coming season. It is the screen version of Porter Emerson Browne's drama which was inspired by Rudyard Kipling's poem, "The Vampire," and was directed by Emmett J. Flynn.

Lewis Stone and Estelle Taylor are the principals in the cast which numbers many of the most prominent players of the silent sheet.

New Sales Manager Puts Over Big Deal

DAVID BRILL, newly appointed Sales Manager of Universal's "Big 'U'" Exchange, bears out the adage, "A new broom sweeps clean." His first achievement, since taking up his new duties, was the landing of a contract with Thomas McGowan, manager of Steeplechase Park, Coney Island, N. Y., unique in the annals of salesmanship.

Brill has sold McGowan a contract for sixteen consecutive weeks, calling for a complete program to be changed daily. McGowan's faith in Universal products and service is such that he leaves the entire choice of program to the "Big U" Exchange. This means Universal will supply McGowan with at least eight reels of film daily for one hundred and twelve days, the entire season of the celebrated amusement resort.

Hitherto, McGowan has handled, during the season of Steeplechase Park, the product of from four to five different exchanges. This season his magnificent theatre will show nothing but Universal films—features, comedies, westerns and news reels.

Pathe Quick With N. Y. Subway Fire

BEFORE the fire engines arrived on the scene, the Pathe News cameraman had already taken the most important shots of the Lexington Avenue Subway Fire in New York City, which occurred at 11.17 A. M. Thursday, July 6th.

The explosion of the fire which wreaked so much havoc, was reported at 17 minutes after 11 and the Pathe News cameraman was there at 11.30 A. M., exactly 13 minutes after the discovery of the fire.

The New York Broadway theatres were showing prints of this event at 5.30 P. M. the same day.

Evelyn Brent Realizes Ambition in Sonia

In playing the part of Sonia, the principal woman character in "The Woman Who Came Back," which Playgoers Pictures is releasing July 16th, Evelyn Brent is realizing one of the greatest ambitions of her career.

While lounging on the sands at Deauville, the celebrated French seaside resort, during a summer's vacation, Miss Brent read "Sonia," Stephen McKenna's famous novel, and determined that the girl for whom the book was named was the one book character in all the novels she had read that she would like to impersonate.

She was so impressed by the possibilities of the story that, on leaving for America, she resolved to find a producer upon whom she might urge its superior qualifications. On the way she stopped in London, and there, as chance would have it, she met Dennison Clift, the English director.

"I've just the picture for you, Miss Brent," said Clift, following the introduction. "It's the part of Sonia from the novel of the same name, or, as we are going to call the picturized version, 'The Woman Who Came Back.' You were made for the part."

"Quincy Adams Sawyer" Popular Story

"Quincy Adams Sawyer," Charles Felton Pidgin's famous story of New England rural life which will be produced at a Metro-S-L Special at the Metro studios in Hollywood, is recognized as one of the most popular of American novels. More than a million and a half copies have been sold and still the story retains its hold on the public.

Bernard McConville, who adapted the story for the screen, has written the continuity for such well known stories as "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," "Monte Cristo," "The Rosary" and "A Fool There Was." He took particular care to follow closely the text of the Pidgin novel in order that the picture might be an accurate reproduction of the author's work. Clarence Badger will direct the photoplay.

First Madge Kennedy Title Decided

The Kenma Corporation, organized to star Madge Kennedy on the screen, this week announces its selection of a final title for the first Madge Kennedy special production. It is "The Purple Highway," which it is believed expresses in some degree the trail followed by the leading character in the photoplay.

There have been a great many weeks' work put in on the production of "The Purple Highway," as it is planned to make this one of the biggest of the fall releases. Arrangements have already been made for its screening at a Broadway motion-picture theatre. Miss Kennedy was starred in three Broadway stage successes, two of which approached record runs. These were "Fair and Warmer" and "Twin Beds." It was only a short time before starting production on "The Purple Highway" that she closed a successful engagement in the stage production, "Cornered." In commencing "The Purple Highway" she faced the motion picture camera for the first time in three years.

Laugh-O-Grams Has a Strong Personnel

Laugh-O-Gram Films, Inc., the latest cartoon studio to enter the producing game has gathered together a strong personnel to conduct its affairs and promises to be an important factor in the film industry.

Leslie B. Mace, who for the past eight years has been associated with some of the larger film concerns in the distribution end, is general sales manager and is in charge of distribution of Laugh-O-Grams.

Walt Ditney is the cartoonist. He is the originator of several comic strips and recently has been making Newman Laugh-O-Grams exclusively for the Newman Theatre, Kansas City.

William Lyon has charge of the photographing department. He has been cranking a camera for various film companies for the past twelve years.

Walter J. Pfeiffer is scenario editor and R. C. Ising is in charge of the art room.

Laugh-O-Grams are one-reel cartoons of modernized fairy tales and will be released every other week. The concern is located in Kansas City, Mo.

Pacific Misnamed, Says Dorothy Phillips

WILL someone please page the gentleman who gave the Pacific Ocean its name? Dorothy Phillips would like to inquire of him if the dictionary is correct in explaining that "pacific" means quiet and peaceful.

"If the Pacific Ocean is really what its name implies," declares Miss Phillips, "then I hope never to sail the waters near Newfoundland or Cape Horn.

"For the last month I have been making daily trips out to sea from Los Angeles Harbor in a three-masted schooner.

"They call this schooner the 'Apollo,' but we have temporarily renamed her the 'Tahiti Belle,' as she is an important figure in 'Hurricane's Gal,' Allen Holubar's picture for First National, of which I am the star. The 'Apollo' was a German wireless information ship during the war, and I am not surprised they found her and put her in escrow, the way she shimmies in the water.

Betty Blythe Shoots Biggest Scene

The big operatic scene for "How Women Love," starring Betty Blythe, was shot last week at the Whitman Bennett studios, Yonkers. This scene had been in preparation for sometime, as it is the most massive set of the entire production. Miss Blythe appears in "How Women Love" in the role of an opera star, and in line with the story it was necessary to build a set showing a large operatic stage and such scenery and properties as would be shown at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York.

Miss Blythe studied for grand opera in Paris, and planned an operatic career. Her screen success in such roles as "The Queen of Sheba," however, influenced her to remain in motion pictures. "Why Women Love" is the first of four productions she will make under the Whitman Bennett banner this year.

Schulberg Picture Is Booked on Coast

It is a rather unusual precedure for one of the largest Metropolitan houses to book a production after viewing only the roughest sort of a "rush print," meagre of titles and with the continuity still in the initial stages of arrangement, but when Fred Miller, Managing Director of the California, Los Angeles, saw the rush print of "Rich Men's Wives" recently he immediately booked it for a pre-release showing on August 7th.

"Rich Men's Wives" is B. P. Schulberg's Gasnier Special Production, and the first picture to be made by Preferred Pictures for distribution through the Al Lichtman Corporation.

Educational Pictures Win High Praise

Educational Pictures have been signally honored in mid-year resumes of "best pictures" by newspaper motion picture critics.

James W. Dean, whose motion picture reviews for the Newspaper Enterprise Association Service are printed in several hundred newspapers in the United States and Canada, made up perhaps the most important of these lists. After discussing longer feature productions, Mr. Dean wrote about short reel subjects, listing the twelve short pictures which in his judgment stood out as the best of the six months.

Out of these twelve pictures listed and discussed, five were Educational Pictures. They were "And Women Must Weep," the first release of the Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce; "Cold Feet," a Christie Comedy, the first travesty on the melodramas of the North; "Poor Boy," the final Mermaid Comedy featuring Lloyd Hamilton; "Step This Way," a Jack White production in the Mermaid Comedy series and one of the five Mermaid Comedies which were shown in first run theatres on New York's Broadway last week, and "The Dying Detective," one of The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes, from the stories by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, in which Eille Norwood is featured as the great detective. "And Women Must Weep" is a single reel picture. Each of the others is in two reels.

Buster Keaton Stars as Blacksmith

"The Blacksmith," presented by Joseph M. Schenck, with Buster Keaton as the star, is one of the latest Keaton comedies scheduled for early release under the First National banner.

The story deals with a young blacksmith who is learning his trade under a burly smithy, who rules his shop with an iron hand. The village smithy gives the orders and Buster does the work.

Critics Highly Praise "The Innocent Cheat"

HARRIETTE UNDERHILL, writing in the New York "Tribune," said: "Don't miss 'The Innocent Cheat'; Dana Gatlin, the brilliant and internationally famous authoress, after a visit to the Broadway Theatre, said: "I don't know when a picture pleased me as much"; C. B. McDonald, prominent theatrical man, called it "One of the year's greatest pictures." These are but a few opinions gleaned at random from the countless thousands of visitors to the Broadway Theatre, who, from the beginning to the end of the engagement of Arrow's special production "The Innocent Cheat," packed the house to the doors.

"The Innocent Cheat" was created by Ben Wilson. It is a powerful story of a powerful love and deals forcefully and yet delicately with one of the most pertinent questions of all times.

"Ben Hur" Continuity Is Progressing

Although work on the continuity for Goldwyn's production of General Lew Wallace's world-famous novel, "Ben Hur," has been underway for but a short time, excellent progress is being made and the outlook is that it will be completed much earlier than was anticipated. The continuity is being written under the supervision of Paul Bern, Goldwyn's editor-in-chief, and his two associates and they state that it is shaping up the skeleton of a photoplay which, when completed, should be the last word in motion picture art for years to come.

Speculation in Hollywood and in all sections of the various film colonies in and about Los Angeles is rife about "Ben Hur" and who will be selected to direct it and to whom will fall the plum of the title role. Never before has interest been so keen about a production. "Ben Hur" as a motion picture has gripped the imagination of the motion picture world.

Robert Ober Won Over to Screen Work

Robert Ober, who has played in many big New York successes of the legitimate stage, including "Fair and Warmer," "What's Your Husband Doing?" "Princess Pat," "She Walked in Her Sleep," "The Brat" and "Sonny," has been won over to the screen.

Ober, several weeks ago, closed an engagement at the Mason Opera House in Los Angeles, and took a role in Cecil B. DeMille's Paramount production, "Manslaughter." This was followed by a part in Irvin Willat's production, "On the High Seas," and now he is playing the principal heavy role, that of Horace Bennett, in support of Rodolph Valentino in "The Young Rajah," adapted from the play by Alethea Luce and the novel, "Amos Judd," by John Ames Mitchell.

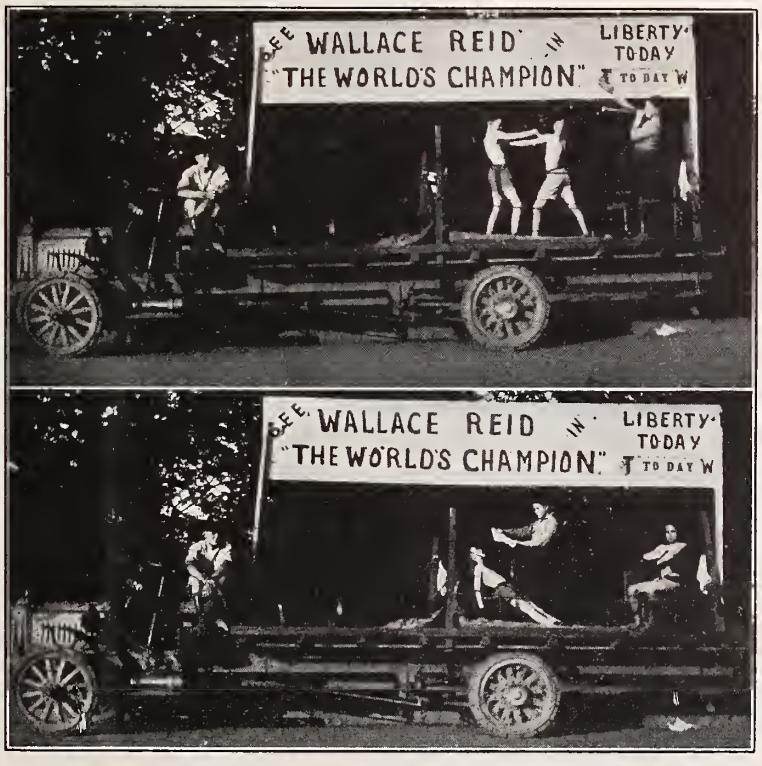
"Smilin' Through" Is Hit

First National Reports Exceptional Runs in Houses Throughout Country

"THE cleanest and most beautiful picture of the year!"

This is the verdict of exhibitors throughout the United States and Canada on Norma Talmadge in "Smilin' Through," the powerful First National Attraction, according to the First National office. Most of the houses which booked "Smilin' Through" for one or two days, or for a week, played to capacity, obtained extensions of their bookings, and did a capacity business on their extensions.

Released only a few weeks ago, "Smilin' Through" has been in demand everywhere. Here are official reports, gathered by First National, as to what the Talmadge picture is doing:



Colorado, played two weeks at America Theatre, Denver; Idaho, Boise, seven days; Iowa, Strand Theatre, Cedar Rapids, ten days; Strand, Waterloo, ten days; Palace, Burlington, five days; Kentucky, Mary Anderson, Louisville, two weeks, Kentucky, Louisville, one week; Ada Meade, Lexington, seven days; Louisiana, Strand, New Orleans, two weeks; Minnesota, Strand, St. Paul, second run; Blue Mouse, Minneapolis, second run; Massachusetts and Rhode Island. Following houses played extended runs: Park, Boston; New Park, Worcester; Park, Taunton; Merrimac Square, Lowell; Olympia, Lynn; Olympia, New Bedford; Rialto, Fall River; Imperial, Pawtucket; Park, Woonsocket; Maryland-District of Columbia, Virginia, Rivoli, Baltimore, two weeks; Metropolitan, Washington, two weeks; Broadway, Richmond, Va., one and a half weeks; Nebraska, Strand, Omaha, sixteen days; Ohio, Colonial Theatre, Columbus, two weeks; Cincinnati, Strand, two weeks Tennessee, Knoxville, Riviera, six days; Chattanooga, Tivoli, seven days; Utah, American, Salt Lake, one week; Washington, Centralia, five days; Aberdeen, five days; Spokane, Liberty theatre, one week; Canada, Allen Richmond theatre, Toronto, two weeks.

Expedition Off for Tahiti

"Captain Blackbird" Company Leaves Coast to Make South Sea Picture

A PICTURESQUE expedition left the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, Cal., last Wednesday when Director R. A. Walsh, his technical staff and the members of the cast engaged to act in Carey Wilson's story, "Captain Blackbird," took train for San Francisco en route to Tahiti.

A brilliant all-star cast will appear in the photoplay. House Peters will play the title role. Antonio Moreno and Pauline Stark have leading romantic roles. Others in the cast are George Siegmann, William V. Mong, Rosemary Theby, Mary Jane Irving and Carl Harbaugh, William Haines, recently selected out of 2,000 New York applicants for a motion picture acting job by Robert B. McIntyre, Goldwyn's casting director, will go along as understudy to Mr. Moreno, while Myrtle Lind will understudy the leading woman.

Select Product Is Sold for Foreign Fields

E. J. DOOLITTLE, who includes in his work for the Select Pictures Corporation the supervision of foreign sales, has just closed a number of important foreign distribution contracts with the David P. Howells.

With these contracts closed Select product released prior to September 1, 1922, has been sold to the Howells people for distribution in the following territories: Mexico, Brazil, Japan, Holland, Spain, Portugal, South Africa, India, Burmah, Siam, Straits Settlements, Federated Malay States, Ceylon, Dutch East Indies, China and the Philippine Islands. This new deal with Mr. Howells takes the pictures distributed by Select into practically every corner of the civilized world.

"Nero" Company Returns from Rome

Violet Mersereau and the company that has been making "Nero" and "The Shepherd King" aboard for William Fox returned last week from Rome. With the exception of Miss Mersereau, who made a flying trip home last Christmas, the company has been in Europe for more than a year.

J. Gordon Edwards, the director, did not return but went to Paris to confer with Mr. Fox, where the latter went after his visit in London with A. S. M. Hutchinson, the author of "If Winter Comes," which the Fox organization is filming as a big special for the coming season.

The conference of Edwards and Fox will probably result in further plans for special productions of the "Nero" and "The Shepherd King" type. Mr. Fox left the entire company for "If Winter Comes" at London and Canterbury, where scenes are already being taken. With Harry Millarde as the director, all exteriors of the adaptation of the famous novel will be made on their original sites in England, the interiors being reserved for the New York studios. Percy Marmont, the celebrated Ben Greet player, and Ann Forrest, well-known star, are the principals of the cast.

"Knighthood" Scenes Show Some Real Thrills

Marion Davies, star of Cosmopolitan Productions' million-dollar photodrama, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," returned this week from Kingston, N. Y., where some remarkable exteriors for the picture were made by Director Robert G. Vignola.

The most sensational of these scenes is a thirty foot leap from a bridge into a river, which is made by half a dozen riders, including Miss Davies, on horseback.

In order to have the bridge conform architecturally to the fifteenth century period, Director Vignola had the entire structure rebuilt.

Herrmann Heads Big "U" Exchange

William C. Herrmann, former Service Manager and head of the Short Subjects department of the Universal's "Big U" Exchange, has been selected to succeed Charles Rosenzweig as General Manager of the "Big U" Exchange, it is announced at the Universal Home Office. In his four years as Service Manager, Herrmann has succeeded in placing the "Big U" Exchange on a firm and sound business basis and established an organization, recognized throughout the industry as one hundred per cent efficient.

One of the many innovations already put into effect by Herrman is the separating of New Jersey from the existing "Big U" territory, Louis Kutinsky will henceforth be in charge of distribution in that locality. Another change in the personnel of the Universal's New York Exchange is the promotion of David Brill to Sales Manager of Universal Jewels and Universal Attractions.

Barbara Bedford Cast Opposite Tom Mix

Barbara Bedford, who has starred in several William Fox productions, has been cast to play opposite Tom Mix, the celebrated Fox star, in a picture made under the working title "Romance Land."

Bruce Is Making Desert Picture in Oregon

Robert C. Bruce has just completed a brief stay in the neighborhood of Bend, Oregon, where he has been working on a desert picture for his next series of Wilderness Tales for Educational.

Another picture, "Jenkins and the Mutt," in which Mr. Bruce used what he claims is the homeliest dog that ever appeared in a picture, has been finished.

"Treasure Bound," the final picture of the 1921-1922 series of Mermaid Comedies, has been finished and prepared for early release by Educational. It is the seventh Jack White production of the series, the six other pictures in the year's Mermaid Comedy group having been Lloyd Hamilton pictures.

Lige Conley, Otto Fries, Jack Lloyd, Harry Seymour and Elinor Lynn comprise the cast for "Treasure Bound."

Clergyman Praises Arliss

Declares "The Ruling Passion" is Nearest to Perfection in Pictures

IN a letter to Distinctive Productions, Inc., Dr. Henry R. Rose, the Newark, N. J. Clergyman censorship fighter, laid special stress on "The Ruling Passion," the current George Arliss screen vehicle, a United Artists Corporation release, calling it the "ideal motion picture."

"If I were asked to name the ideal motion picture," Dr. Rose wrote, "the one that comes nearest to perfection in cleanliness, humor, sentiment, delightful surprises and splendid moral lessons for business men and for youth, I would unhesitatingly select George Arliss in 'The Ruling Passion.'

"It is a picture that captures every lover of good drama and will surely grow in popular demand. If I were an owner of a motion picture house I would feature and advertise 'The Ruling Passion' in such a way that it would become the rage of the town, for it surely would appeal to any community if the people only knew of its delightful and wholesome qualities.

"Another thing is this—Mr. Arliss is so natural that you forget this is a motion picture and actually think you are attending the spoken drama. Greater art in motion picture work has not been achieved by anyone. It marks a new step in pictures. Mr. Arliss achieves this amazing result by facial expressions, slow movement and reality of personality. It is a picture every maker of motion pictures and every motion picture actor might well study."

Famous Actors Laugh Over Hamilton

LLOYD HAMILTON, who is putting the finishing touches on the first of his new Hamilton Comedies for Educational release, numbers among the enthusiastic followers of his pictures two of the most famous actors on the American stage. Recent expressions from Frank Bacon and Guy Bates Post show that these two artists are agreed that Hamilton is one of the leading comedians of the screen

Regarding Hamilton's latest picture, "Poor Boy," the final Mermaid Comedy in which Hamilton is to be featured, Bacon said in a letter to his son, Lloyd Bacon, who is a scenario writer for the comedian:

"Saw Hamilton in 'Poor Boy' and it was very funny He is as clever a man as we have on the screen today. There are many big laughs. I don't think I ever saw a funnier comedy."

Guy Bates Post was just as enthusiastic over Hamilton after seeing "The Rainmaker," the last Hamilton picture before "Poor Boy."

National Campaign for Christie Comedies

Such prominent Christie Comedy stars as Dorothy Devore, Neal Burns, Bobby Vernon, Viora Daniel and Vera Steadman are appearing in July and September in pictorial advertisements in the Saturday Evening Post and the Ladies' Home Journal,

These comedy players pictures are the basis for national advertising of Christie Comedies distributed through Educational Film Exchanges. The Educational and Christie companies are planning this year to make Christie Comedies better known than ever, and encouraging the public, through widespread advertising, to go into the theatres which advertise these short subjects as a part of their show.

"The Real Adventure" Stands N. Y. Run

The Associated Exhibitors' feature, Florence Vidor in "The Real Adventure," has begun a run of the Loew time in Greater New York. It is being effectively exploited and large houses have greeted the picture wherever it has been seen so far.

N. M. Schenck, booking manager of the Loew Enterprises, picked this film as a winner and reports that it is going over in great shape.

Prison Knowledge of Meighan Used

THOMAS MEIGHAN played a dual role in the filming of a portion of Cecil B. DeMille's Paramount production of "Manslaughter." Only one of these dual characterizations appears on the screen, however.

In addition to playing the role of the young district attorney in Jeanie Macpherson's adaptation of the Alice Duer Miller story, Meighan served as an ex-officio technical expert on the prison scenes in which Leatrice Joy and Lois Wilson were the principal players.

Meighan gained his knowledge of the inside of prisons from his work in "The City of Silent Men" much of which was filmed at and about the famous Sing Sing prison. In the course of his work on this picture, the star made several visits to the prison and was permitted to study details of prison routine and customs at close range.

April 27, 1922

Gentlemen:

I have just read that the single reel SCREEN SNAPSHOTS is to be released through your organization and want to congratulate you on its acquisition.

I consider "Screen Snapshots" the greatest single reel on the market and my patrons look upon it as a real feature, come to see it regularly, and talk about it in the highest possible terms.

Personally, I never miss seeing it myself and on the days "Screen Snapshots" plays my house, am sure to be in the audience to see it at least once.

You have a big thing in this reel.

Very truly yours,
Charles C. Goldreyer.

Radio Set Figures in Brownie Picture

There is a smattering of science in the latest production of Brownie, the Century Dog with the college education. A big radio set finds Brownie and his two chums, Johnny Fox and Jackie Morgan, listening in with an eye to mischief. They plan to steal some pics from a nearby farm, but the farm owner listens in himself on his radio set and overhears them. So he lays for them and they are only saved by the cleverness of Brownie.

They fly to the city and get jobs in a shop where the faithful Brownie watches over them. The irate farmer, who has suffered much from their mischief, finds them and again Brownie comes to the rescue and brings as proof one rubber boot and part of the farmer's trousers. After which they all live happily. In part of this film Brownie is rigged out with a radio apparatus harnessed to him.

Lovers' Garden Built for "Omar"

Much of the action of Guy Bates Post's second film vehicle, "Omar the Tentmaker," the Tully production now being made at the United Studios, for First National release, takes place in Shireen's garden. It is part of the house belonging to her father, the Imam Mowaffak, the wise man who teaches the young Omar. It is the scene of many beautiful love passages between Omar and Shireen in the days of their youth, and when they are reunited after two score years of separation.

In erecting this particular set, Producer Richard Walton Tully, who was the author of the stage play and is also responsible for the scenario of "Omar the Tentmaker"—instructed art director Wilfred Buckland to make it the visualization of all the lovers' gardens, and the result proves again the genius of Buckland and Tully in their fields.

Burr Makes Producing Plans

Will Make Six Features With Johnny Hines First in "Sure Fire Flint"

C. C. BURR, independent producer and president of Affiliated Distributors, whose foresight was responsible for the phenomenal success of "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," the first Johnny Hines feature and "I Am the Law," is off again on another campaign of far reaching dimensions.

In view of the highly successful sales and exhibitor and trade welcome accorded these pictures, Burr decided on his program to produce six features this year that would be equal if not superior in story and box office value to "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" and "I Am the Law." With that end in mind Burr has made preparations for the biggest plans of his producing career, the first evidence of which was noted last week when he decided to take the popular Johnny Hines out of the "Torchy Comedies" and star him in such feature vehicles as would allow Hines' manifold comic qualities every opportunity for expression.

Accordingly, Burr will start selling the first of his Big Six productions by featuring Johnny Hines in a story by Gerald C. Duffy and titled, "Sure Fire Flint," published in the magazine Ace High.

In order to give "Sure Fire Flint" its best possible interpretation and to further assure its success C. C. Burr engaged Dell Henderson to be director in chief.

Assisting Johnny Hines will be a capable staff of players, whose individual characterizations and names are practically bywords in the industry. In view of the excellent support rendered Johnny Hines in "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," by Edmund Breese and J. Barney Sherry, C. C. Burr contracted again for the services of these well-known characters of the stage and screen.

Coincident with the production, C. C. Burr has mapped out a publicity and advertising campaign that will carry the message of Johnny Hines in "Sure Fire Flint" to every important exhibitor and exchange in the United States. Extensive advertising will be placed not only with the trade papers but with the regionals and key-city newspapers as well.

The following territories have already been closed on "Sure Fire Flint": West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania, to Jos. Skirboll of Associated First National Pictures; Ohio, to Wm. Skirboll of Skirboll Gold Seal Productions; Northern Illinois, to Roy C. Seery; Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas, to Abe Blank of Associated First National Pictures; California, Arizona, Nevada and Hawaiian Island, to Louis Hyman; Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, Utah and Southern Idaho, to M. A. Klausner of Mountain States Film Attractions; Oregon, Washington, Montana, Northern Idaho and Alaska, to Mountain States Film Attractions; Eastern Pennsylvania, to Dave Segal of Royal Pictures, Inc., and the entire New England states, to Sam Moscow of Moscow Pictures Corporation, Boston.

Goldwyn Policy Approved

Plan for Reduced Output But Specials of First Rank Well-Received

A STATEMENT from the Goldwyn headquarters declares that its recently announced policy of "reduced output but with each single work a smashing motion-picture achievement" has been received enthusiastically by exhibitors all over the country. The Goldwyn office further states that this endorsement is an approval of what is virtually an "exhibitor-made policy," as the plan was adopted only after thousands of opinions from individual exhibitors were collated and tabulated at the home-office of the Goldwyn Corporation. In connection with its announced policy of productions "with fine dramatic merit and human appeal" and concentration of advertising on each individual picture, the Goldwyn statement cites the following pictures:

There is the first Marshall Neilan picture which will be a long step in advance of anything he has previously attempted. His new arrangement with Goldwyn gives him unlimited financial backing.

"Hungry Hearts" was directed by E. Mason Hopper from Anzia Yezierska's great book dealing with Russian immigrants and the American melting-pot,

"The Christian" was a big novel of its time and it is being produced for Goldwyn in a big way by Maurice Tourneur in its original English settings.

"Remembrance," written and directed by Rupert Hughes, has all of the drama and heart interest and humor that Mr. Hughes wrote into his triumphant "Old Nest."

"Captain Blackbird," R. A. Walsh's first big picture for Goldwyn, is a smashing action-adventure story of the South Sea written by Carey Wilson.

"Broken Chains," the $10,000 prize winning scenario, has been given to Allen Holubar to direct.

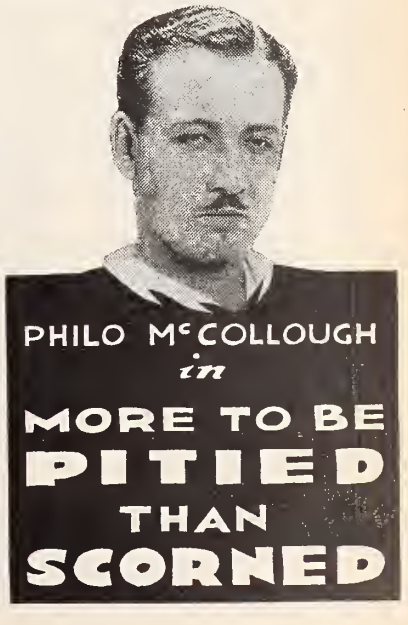
"Brothers Under the Skin" is worthy to rank among Goldwyn's Big Twenty because of its powerful theme and its striking treatment. It was written by Peter B. Kyne. E. Mason Hopper directed.

"The Sin Flood" was directed by Frank Lloyd. "The Bitterness of Sweets" is another original screen story by Rupert Hughes, who directed it. "A Blind Bargain" is one of the most thrilling and amazing mystery stories ever transferred to the screen. Lon Chaney is superb in two great dramatic roles.

Ottawa Productions' Picture Success

It is fitting that from the capital of Canada, the much-heralded picture "The Man from Glengarry" should be successfully filmed. Its completing moments were crowned with triumph by a unanimous vote on the part of the directors of the Ottawa Film Productions, Ltd., to "carry on" with the same organization under the able direction of Henry MacRae, in the making of the "Glengarry" sequel, known to lovers of Ralph Connor's works the world over under the title of "Glengarry School Days."

Pauline Garon has been re-engaged for the leading role in "Glengarry School Days." World's rights to both pictures will be available in September.



Harry Morey, the sterling actor and long-time star on Vitagraph pictures, has been signed for the role of "Clark". An excellent supporting cast including Mary Astor star of "The Beggar Maid," has furnished and the actual shooting of this picture will occur during the months of July and August.

Harold Lloyd's Latest Nears Completion

According to a report received by Pathe from the Hal Roach Studios, Harold Lloyd has nearly completed a new multiple-reel comedy which bears the working title of "Doctor's Orders."

This, says Pathe, is the first of the series of six Lloyd features contracted for when the comedian visited New York early in the winter. It shows Lloyd to be well ahead of his production schedule, for its immediate predecessor, "Grandma's Boy," last of the Associated Exhibitors series, will not be released until September for general distribution.

The release of "Grandma's Boy" for important Pacific Coast cities has resulted in reviews remarkable for their unanimity of enthusiastic approval.

Frank Mayo Starts on "Wolf Law"

"Wolf Law" is now in production at Universal City and provides Frank Mayo with what is probably the most intensely dramatic vehicle of his career.

"Wolf Law" was Hugh Pendexter's story. Charles Sarver prepared it in scenario form.

To provide the story with every possible advantage, Universal assigned a top notch director to film it and chose a cast of seven people. Stuart Paton directs Mayo. Sylvia Breamer, Nick de Ruiz, Fred Kohler, Herbert Fortier, Harry Carter, Frank Weed and Ed Moncrief in the opening sequences of the story. More players will be added later.

Irene Castle Picture to Have Thrills

A thrilling story of romance and intrigue is promised by Pathe in "The Hillcrest Mystery," the new Pathe playlet starring Irene Castle, which has been scheduled for release the week of July 23rd.

The offering has been re-edited to three reels from one of the star's most successful vehicles and is crammed full of mystery and tense moments. A remarkable cast is seen in support of Irene Castle, including such people as Ralph Kellard, Wyndham Standing, J. H. Gilmore and Joe Cuny. The photoplay was written by Ouida Bergere and directed by George Fitzmaurice.

Second National Sells Picture Rights

SECOND NATIONAL PICTURES CORPORATION announces that A. Markowitz, doing business as California Film Distributors at 168 Golden Gate Avenue, San Francisco, has been granted distribution rights for the twelve photoplays provided for release in the current season.

Negotiations are nearing completion for the establishing of a Second National branch exchange in Dallas, for the state of Texas, which, it is said, will practically complete the organization for the distribution of Second National pictures in the United States.

The corporation reports satisfactory hot weather business in showings of "The Night Riders," from the Ridgewell Cullum novel; "Her Story," with Madge Titheradge, and "David and Jonathan," picturization of the novel by E. Temple Thurston, featuring Madge Titheradge, the first three releases, and rapid booking of "Broken Shadows," an Irish romance of the screen from the popular novel by Charles Garvice, the fourth release.

Norma Talmadge Makes Prediction

Norma Talmadge makes a prediction. It is that within ten years every big public library in the country will have its film vault in which will be stored prints of the film dramatizations of classic novels and dramas. These films will be available for literary clubs, social organizations and dramatic circles.

"There are a score of literary classics already filmed," says Norma. "Take for instance, 'The Three Musketeers,' 'The Last of the Mohicans,' 'The Old Swimmin' Hole,' 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse' and 'Peck's Bad Boy'—I could name a dozen others worthy of permanent safeguarding in the Library of Congress. The libraries of the country should start collecting prints of these classics.

"I am going to try to make my next picture, 'The Duchess of Langeasi,' in such fashion that it will be worthy to be kept as a permanent record in any library as a photodramatization of Honore Balzac's classic story."

Fox Announces 2-Reel Comedy Schedule

Fox Film Corporation announces a schedule of two-reel comedies for the season of 1922-23. The group is comprised of six distinct series including the comedies of Lupino Lane, the latest acquisition to the Fox constellation, Clyde Cook, Al St. John, the Lee kids, Sunshine Comedies, and Mutt and Jeff Cartoons.

This array of productions, made under the direction of the most capable comedy directors, offers the exhibitors a program of unrivaled box-office merit.

Heading the procession is the Lupino Lane series. Members of the trade have long waited for a glimpse of the screen work of this famous English pantomimist who won a place in the hearts of Americans by his remarkable performance in the Broadway, New York, run of "Afgar," the great pageant of English talen brought to this side of the Atlantic by Morris Gest.

Pearl White Returning for New Serial

Pathe announces through Producer George B. Seitz that Pearl White has cabled from Paris that she is returning to America on the Olympic, due to arrive on July 11th. In a previous cable to Producer Seitz, Miss White expressed her entire approval of the story specially written for the forthcoming Pathe serial in which she is to star. Mr. Seitz reports sets made and minor scenes now being filmed.

The latest Paris newspapers received in New York describe at considerable length the ovations received by Miss White from audiences at the Casino de Paris, following the announcement that she was shortly to return to the United States to resume her work as star in the Pathe serials.

Broadway Stars Are Pictured

WITH the first seven issues of the series of Starland Revue already released, the Film Booking Offices of America, which is releasing this one reel novelty, announces that the exhibitor interest has been increasing steadily since April, when the first subject was issued. Starland Revue is devoted exclusively to stage stars and plays, showing all the heroes and heroines of American drama in back-stage and off-stage poses, as well as illustrating tense moments from Broadway theatrical successes. It is produced in New York by Jack Cohn.

Starland Revue No. 7, which is the next release, shows some especially interesting views of the recent Actors' Golf Tournament at Garden City. Otto Kruger, star of "To the Ladies"; Bobby Ames, late of "The Hero"; Oscar Shaw, of "Good Morning Dearie"; William Kent, and John Price Jones, make their appearance on the links, while Frank Crumit of "Tangerine" spends his time between rounds in the club restaurant.

"A Play in the Making" is the title given a subject showing "The Hotel Mouse" cast and principals. "The Mask and Wig" club of the University of Pennsylvania makes very attractive "girls," and back stage scenes of Violet Heming in "The Rubicon," as well as actual scenes of the show, are illustrated.

Unique Plot for Alice Calhoun Picture

Alice Calhoun's new picture, "Little Wildcat," is said by those who have seen it to be quite the best thing Miss Calhoun has done.

The story is rich in human interest. A wealthy club man, scientifically inclined, decides upon a practical experiment in support of his theory that there is a divine spark in all womanhood, no matter what the environment, that needs only the chance for expression. On the spur of the moment, and fired by a heated argument with his friend, the cynical Judge Arnold, he selects "Mag o' the Alley" to prove his point.

How such a character is carefully remolded, and emerges a complete justification of her benefactor's theory, has furnished the director with quite an order, which, according to critics, he has fulfilled.

New Travelaugh Shows Quaint Old Munich

"Such is Life in Munich" is Hy Mayer's latest contribution to the short-subject program of the Film Booking Offices of America. It is the seventh of the Hy Mayer Travelaughs and is to follow "Such Is Life Among Alpine Sports."

INDIANAPOLIS

Business for theatres continues to be reported unsatisfactory from most every part of Indiana. It is no different in Indianapolis.

From Noblesville comes word A. M. Jones is closing up the Olympic and Wild Opera House until September 10, leaving the town without movies for the first time in eleven years. Mr. Jones and his family will motor to California. He said he had been operating at a loss for several weeks. Hot weather and the automobile were responsible.

There are a number of evidences in Indianapolis the slump is not because people have not money to spend. As in a number of other large cities all building records have been shattered. The previous record for a month's issuance of building permits was exceeded by almost a million dollars in May and June came close on its heels.

Perhaps the fact the city has gone into the free theatrical business, playing to 3,000 to 4,000 people five nights a week may be a contributing cause here. It appears this competition may be done away with, however. The city has two stock companies giving free open air performances in Brookside and Garfield parks. The Garfield place was just opened last week.

CANADA

J. P. O'Loghlin of Montreal, managing director of the Canadian Releasing Corporation, which is allied with the American Releasing Corporation of the States, has announced that "Shattered Idols" will be released in Canada through his company.

The Montreal Theatre Managers' Association, through Secretary B. M. Garfield, has made an official protest to Mayor Mederic Martin and the Montreal City Council against travelling carnival shows and has demanded that formal consideration of the subject be made by the civic administration. This follows closely upon the decision of the exhibitors in Winnipeg, Manitoba, to fight the carnival competition.

L. E. Ouimet of Montreal, former president and general manager of Specialty Film Import, Limited, now merged with Regal Films, Limited, is back in Montreal for the summer months with his family. Mr. Ouimet is now head of Laval Photoplays, Limited, which has been producing its first picture at Los Angeles. This will be released in the fall, it is announced.

The other picture was "Island Wives," which has been modified slightly.

Major Arbuthnot, former film exchange man in Canada, has organized the Radio Manufacturing and Distributing Company, Limited, and is arranging to open offices or agencies in Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Vancouver and Moncton. He proposes to supply theatres with radio receiving equipment.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Assistant Cashier Samuel P. Middleman of the Pathe Exchange, was married Sunday, July 2, to Miss Lucille Adler, formerly of the Universal Exchange, the wedding taking place in Philadelphia.

Miss Edna Burke, employed by Manager Robin of Pathe, is another bride in the ranks. Her marriage with Dwight Manbeck was celebrated June 17.

Among callers at the new plant of Ben Lust, equipment dealer, 706 Mather Bldg., were two motion picture theatre owners from western Maryland, Mr. Evans, owner of the two theatres at Lonaconing, and Mr. Decker, owner of the Empire Opera House, a Frederick, Md., picture play house.

Milton Simon, manager in this territory for R-C and U. F. B. O. A., who has been out of the city in connection with the Baltimore exhibitors and other Maryland business of Robertson-Cole and affiliated producers, returned July 7.

Owing to some unknown differences of policy between various executives, Manager Glick, of the local office of Universal Films, the Washington Film Exchange, resigned Wednesday evening, July 5, and District Supervisor Jules Levy of the South Atlantic region, hurriedly came to town with Harry S. Brown, as Mr. Glick's successor.

Henry I. Coleman of the Seaboard Film Corporation, a state-right exchange, makes the following announcement regarding his time-saving device, for which a patent has been sought: "I have perfected a machine to replace broken sprocket holes in motion picture films. The working model has fulfilled all expectations, but, pending issuance of final letters-patent, it is not my intention to place it upon the market."

E. Carl Wallen, formerly of San Francisco, who has been filling in for J. C. Brown, of the Washington office of International News Reel, returned Thursday from the Centennial of Marion, Ohio, he having accompanied the presidential party there from Gettysburg, where he filmed the battlefield maneuvres of the Marines of the 5th and 6th Regiments.

All Washington exchange men and exhibitors are interested in the outcome of the Nixon-Nordlinger injunction against the Film Board of Trade of Philadelphia, and the Hoy System of New York. A decision in favor of the Hoy System may effectually discourage any further attempts to shift contracts from one house to another, in the same chain, without the legal sanction of the exchange owning the release, and the approval of the Hoy System.

The Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company of Washington and Baltimore, serving the states of this region, has taken up the advanced visual method of instruction, and is now showing motion pictures in combination with its switchboard lectures.

WESTERN NEW YORK

The new and magnificent Strand will open in Niagara Falls, N. Y., around August 1, according to R. W. Thayer, manager, who comes to the Cataract City from Merriton, Conn., where he was manager of a Paramount house. He has been connected with the Paramount theatre department. The new Strand will be one of the most elaborate picture houses in the state. It will cost, when completed, over $1,000,000 and will have a seating capacity of 2,200. The Strand policy will be pictures exclusively. The Cataract will have vaudeville and pictures.

Mike Bloom, manager of the Quirk theatre in Fulton, N. Y., has purchased a new Marmon. George A. Hickey, manager of the Goldwyn office in Buffalo, has offered to teach Mike how to run the machine.

Exhibitor should be interested in the announcement of Sydney Samson of the Grand & North exchange in Buffalo. Syd declares that he can book a show and guarantee a profit during the summer. Exhibitors insist that Syd must be offering film free.

It is reported that George Walker, a nephew of M. Shea, has been appointed manager of the Shea North Park, effective September 1, when Arthur Amm, present manager, will leave to assume the duties of house manager of the new Eastman theatre in Rochester.

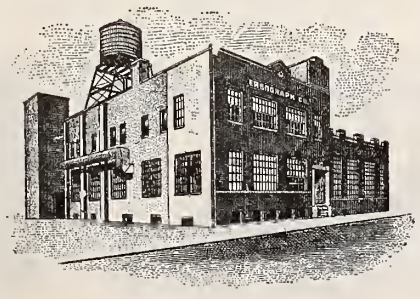
Harry Rose of the Flash theatre, Tonawanda, N. Y., is now giving radio concerts in the lobby of his popular Lumber City house. Harry finds that it is an aid to business as many come to hear the new wonder and buy a ticket to the show.

SAN FRANCI CO

Eugene W. Castle of the Castle Film Corporation, who was appointed official "film photographer" for the Shrine Convention recently held in San Francisco, took at least 50,000 feet of Shrine pictures. This included the big parades. Mr. Castle made reels of each of the Shrine organizations from the different cities of the United States and Canada, depicting them in the parades and other places. Each of the larger Shrine Temples ordered one thousand feet, while the smaller ones took home with them only those reels in which they were prominent.

Elizabeth McQuillin, who is associated with Adeline Alvord in motion picture enterprises at Hollywood, was in San Francisco recently, conferring with production interests on the motion picture rights to several well known books and stage plays. She also interviewed local authors in search of unusual screen stories for a number of Hollywood producers.

Frank Devlin, formerly president of the California Railroad Commission, has been appointed attorney and general advisor of the Picture Theatre Owners' Association of Northern California.



OKLAHOMA CITY

Manager J. Pierce of the Erie theatre at Antlers, Okla., recently offered free admission to this theatre to each boy or girl bringing 200 or more dead flies to the box office. More than 13,000 dead flies resulted in free admissions to about 65 boys and girls. Another swat-the-fly campaign will be put on by Mr. Pierce in the near future.

ST. LOUIS

The Pershing theatre, Delmar boulevard near Hamilton avenue, the property of the St. Louis Amusement Company, may play dramatic stock next season. Spyros Skouras admitted a few days ago that such plans were being given serious consideration. Several years ago a dramatic stock company that alternated between the Pershing and Shenandoah theatres did very well. The Pershing has not been a success as a moving picture theatre or combination house. It is too close to the Pageant theatre, which is controlled by the same interests.

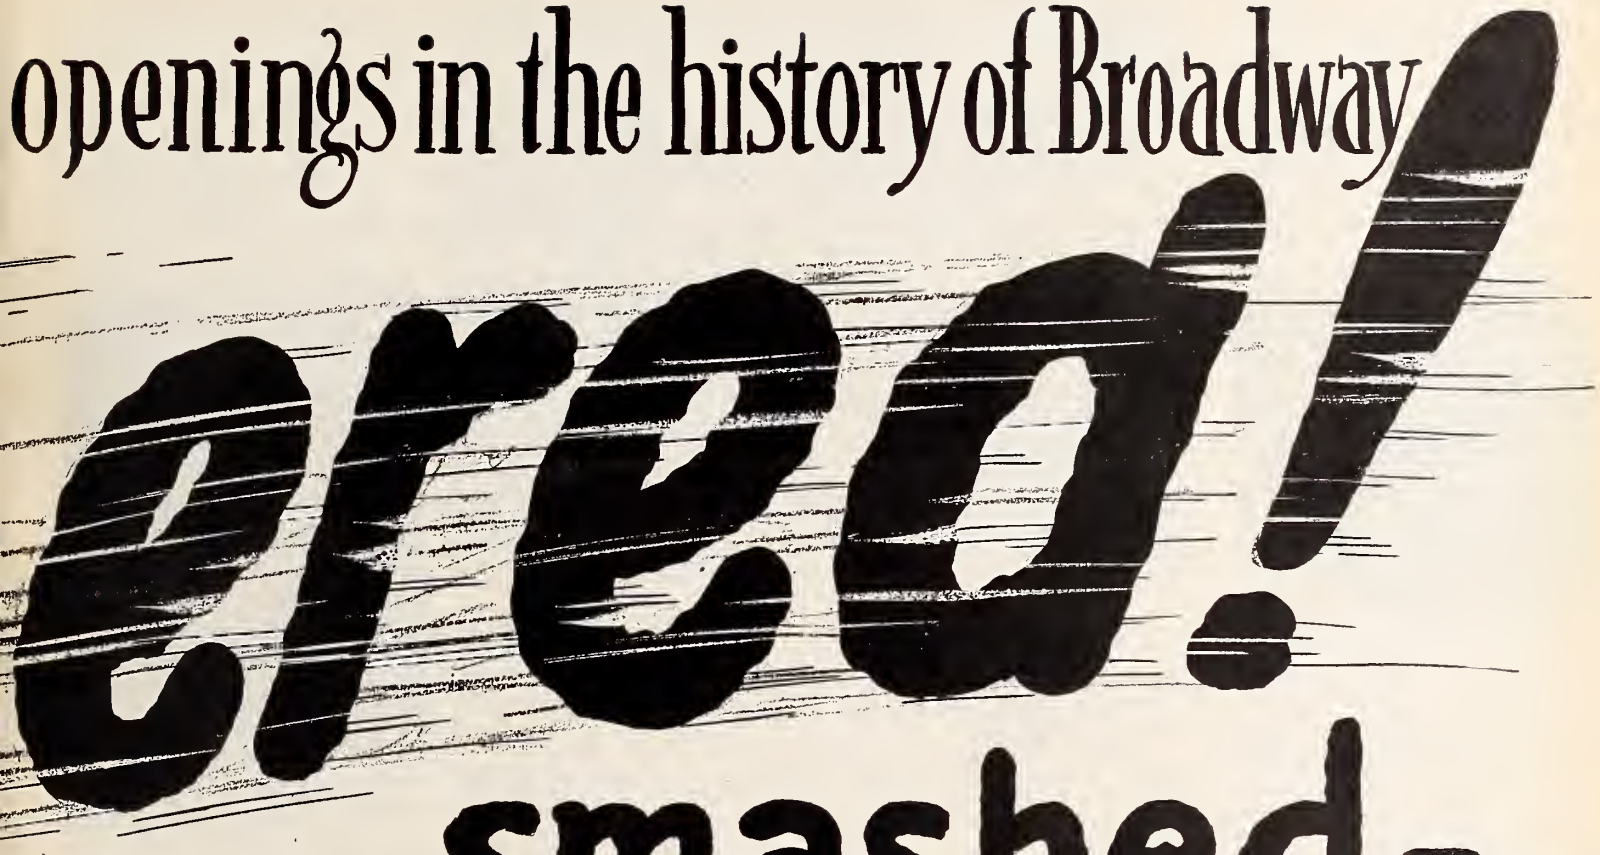
All attendance records for summer



Broken—Smashed—Crashed—Busted into bits—
Shattered into smithereens, were all cash attendance records for ANY motion picture in all the history of theatrical business in New York City for a summer opening in July, by F. B. O.'s colossal success, "IN THE NAME OF THE LAW," at the Geo. M. Cohan Theatre July 9th. A double line crowd massed itself from the theatre entrance to the 43rd street corner. So dense was the crowd that merchants along Broadway called the police to move the throngs away, and we had to swing the crowds down to 42nd street. WE TOLD YOU WE'D DO IT IN FORMER TRADE PAPER ADS. WE'VE DONE IT, and this is only a marker to what will be done in every State in the Union in thousands of theatres. "IN THE NAME OF THE LAW" is immense. The biggest smash of the season as a picture.

And Oh Boy—What exploitation—You've never in all your life, in the motion picture business or out of it, seen such a simply staggering exploitation campaign behind any picture ever released. Recall in your mind the BIGGEST exploitation campaign you ever heard of on ANY picture, then multiply it by 5 and you'll have only part of the positively unique and absolutely sensational exploitation all ready for "IN THE NAME OF THE LAW." Exploitation that doesn't "promise" sensational results to exhibitors—but that GUARANTEES RESULTS. We absolutely guarantee to crack your town wide open as never in your history with "IN THE NAME OF THE LAW." We've done it in the biggest and toughest town in the world, New York. Other towns are like "shootin' fish" compared to exploiting New York. Write, wire, call in person or long distance call your nearest F.B.O. exchange NOW. Don't blame us if you muff it. Big Producing Plan for "Main Street"

To produce the forthcoming Warner Bros. production, "Main Street," written by Sinclair Lewis, Jack and Sam Warner are reported to have begun the most ambitious producing plans ever undertaken for the completion of a motion picture. In order to fully realize the tremendous possibilities contained in the novel from a production, exploitation and publicity standpoint, the Warner boys have engaged the best talent on the west coast to whip the story into shape, it is said.

As the opening gun in the tremendous advertising campaign to be launched in behalf of the picture, Eddie Bonns, Director of Advertising and Publicity, is said to have successfully completed negotiations for the publication of the song based on the film—"There's a Main Street In Every Town, but There's Only One Broadway"—with M. J. Mintz, president of the Camco Music Publishing Co., New York.

Arrow's Advertising Is Appreciated

That Arrow's advertising and publicity are proving successful to independent exchange men as well as exhibitors was conclusively demonstrated this week when W. E. Shallenberger, President of the Arrow Film Corporation, received a letter from Mr. Charles R. Gilmour, General Manager of Arrow Photoplays Company of Salt Lake City, Denver and Seattle, in which Mr. Gilmour said:

"May I congratulate you on the effort you are putting forth at this time to advance the cause of the State Rights market. Your campaign of advertising, your exceptional array of pictures and your enduring efforts to place the independents in an enviable position are appreciated, I know, by every independent exchange in the country. Keep up the good work. We are going to give you every co-operation possible in the future."

Curwood Productions Sold

Arrow Completes Deal With Syracuse Man for Rights to Four Pictures

A. N. WEBSTER of Syracuse, N. Y., has secured from the Arrow Film Corporation, the rights to the four James Oliver Curwood productions, produced by Pine Tree Pictures, Inc., for upper New York State, and will form a company to handle these.

Webster is one of the best known film men of upper New York and has for many years operated in that territory, releasing many of the more important independent productions.

The first of the James Oliver Curwood productions secured by Webster is "God's Country and the Law," the picture playing at the New York Strand this week. The second and third which have already been completed are respectively "The Girl from Porcupine," featuring Faire Binney and William Collier, Jr., and "The Broken Silence" with Zena Keefe, J. Barney Sherry, Robert Elliott, Gypsy O'Brien and many other well known players.

The fourth of this series, "Jacqueline," is now under course of production in Maine where it is being directed by Dell Henderson, the man responsible for the direction of "The Girl from Porcupine" and "The Broken Silence." "God's Country and the Law" was directed by Sidney Olcott.

The name of the company that Webster is organizing will be Progress Pictures Company. He will make his headquarters in Syracuse, with probably branches in Buffalo and Albany.

Harry Cohn Back on Coast

C. B. C. Production Chief Returns to Continue Supervision of Productions

HAVING set the Summer and Fall schedule for the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, Harry Cohn, head of the production forces of that company, returned to the West Coast this week to continue supervision of studio and production activities.

During the two weeks since Cohn has been in the East he has been busy going over distribution plans and outlining production on C. B. C.'s own new product as well as on various outside product which will be taken over and distributed through C. B. C. He has also been conferring with exchanges and exhibitors in nearby cities for the purpose of determining their needs and the brand of releases most in demand in the various localities.

The result of his observations has convinced him of the ever-growing need for good two-reel comedies and short novelties and so, in addition to the new series of Percy and Ferdie Hallroom Comedies and the Sunrise Comedies, which are now under way, plans have been outlined for another series of comedies, to be made in accordance with ideas outlined by exhibitors and several of the leading exchange men and territorial buyers throughout the country. Cohn is taking back with him several new scripts and ideas for comedies which have been worked out here under his supervision.

"Cap'n Kidd" Exploitation

Star Serial is Planting Additional Ideas as Territories Are Sold

A REAL understanding of the psychology of exploitation is being employed by the Star Serial Corporation, distributors of the serial "Cap'n Kidd," starring Eddie Polo, with word that the company has this week completed and ready for use some new window-cards and banners on this chapter-play.

These are in addition to the full line of exploitation aids that were prepared when Star Serial first announced distribution rights on "Cap'n Kidd," and, when most distribution organizations are letting up on their work of pushing exploitation, since almost the entire territory has been sold 100 per cent. on the Eddie Polo picture.

According to Joe Brandt and the other company officials, however, the real secret of good exploitation is the constant infusing of new ideas.

Agnes Cobb to Handle Iroquois Product

The Iroquois Productions, Inc., of Chatham, New York, have chosen for their distributor Agnes Egan Cobb, who has signed to place their product on the market throughout the world. Mrs. Cobb is now represented in Yokohama, Japan; London, England; Montreal, Canada; Los Angeles, California; Indianapolis, Indiana, and Chicago, Illinois.

Caryl Fleming has been chosen to direct a series of six northwoods productions annually for the Iroquois Productions, Inc.

The first production of the series has been finished and is entitled "Northwoods Vengeance." Norma Shearer plays the female lead.

Will Theda Make Same Style Pictures?

No similar announcement during the past month seems to have occasioned as much discussion throughout the motion picture industry as that made by Myron Selznick with regard to the forthcoming return to the screen of Theda Bara.

The leading question seems to be, will or will not Miss Bara play the type of part which made her famous? This particular matter, in addition to inside comment in motion picture circles, has received editorial attention in several metropolitan newspapers.

Selznick left for the West Coast Studios of the company without committing himself specially regarding the question of Miss Bara's histrionic efforts of the future.

Warners Complete Sale of Entire Series

HARRY M. WARNER, of Warner Brothers, announced this week that two big deals were recently consummated for the entire series of productions being made for the forthcoming season. The deals were closed with the Independent Film Corp., Philadelphia, and the Regal Films, Ltd., Toronto. According to Mr. Warner the series of seven productions are being sold in group, and not individually.

The pictures include three Harry Rapf features, "Rags to Riches," "Little Heroes of the Street," both featuring Wesley Barry, "Brass," the novel of marriage and divorce by Charles G. Norris, and four productions being filmed by S. L. and Jack Warner—"Main Street," Sinclair Lewis' novel of small town life, "The Beautiful and Damned," the novel dealing with the modern flapper written by F. Scott Fitzgerald, "Little Church Around the Corner," an adaptation of the stage play of the same name, and the completed wild animal feature film "A Dangerous Adventure," with Grace Darmond.

Real Hollywood Life in Newest Picture

In "Night Life in Hollywood," which is now ready for release, Mrs. A. B. Maescher, producer, and President of the De Luxe Film Company, has used Hollywood and its leading film stars in a combined effort to present to the public a picture that will show, for the first time, life as it really exists in the film city.

Mrs. Maescher has just arrived in New York with her manager, Eugene Evans. She is here for the premiere of the picture. She has become interested in pictures through building the homes of most of the celebrities at Hollywood and Beverly Hills. Charlie Chaplin, Tom Mix, Mary Pickford and many other film stars have had their homes built by Mrs. Maescher who is one of the southland's biggest business women.

In "Night Life in Hollywood" many notables participate, among whom are Wally Reid and family, Bryant Washburn, Sessue Hayakawa and his Hollywood castle, Theodore Roberts and William Desmond.

J. Frank Glendon, well known actor of "Yankee Doodle Junior" fame, plays the rube from Arkansas. He sees in a dream Hollywood as a lurid, sensual Babylon, with its alleged debauches of depravity and wickedness, with the result that he migrates to Hollywood, the motion picture capital of the world, where he meets world famed celebrities in a story that will grip and hold you to the finish.

No distributing arrangement has been announced by Mrs. Maescher.

Warner Picture Going Fast

Wild Animal Feature Appeals to Buyers in Nearly All Territories

MORE than three-fourths of the state right buyers in the key cities throughout the country have purchased the exclusive territorial rights of the Warner Bros. wild animal feature, "A Dangerous Adventure," with Grace Darmond, according to Harry M. Warner.

The Canadian rights to the feature have been purchased by the Regal Films, Ltd., Toronto, and the latest purchaser in the states is said to be the Independent Film Corp., Phila. Warner is authority for the statement that other deals are now in process of materialization, and these will be announced as soon as they are completed.

"A Dangerous Adventure" is announced as the first of seven features to be released by the Warner Brothers in the fall. The feature is declared to bring to light some of the most startling and thrilling scenes ever filmed for a picturepiay. It is described as a novelty sensation, and according to Mr. Warner it will prove to be a revelation in picture making to all those who will be privileged to see it.

"Wild animal feature pictures," said Mr. Warner, "are few and far between, but when one comes along that without exaggeration is as different as day is from night, then picture fans can expect to see something that will make them sit up and take notice. In all my experience in the film business I have never seen anything more thrilling and sensational as this wild animal picture."

Grace Darmond, in the role of the scientist's daughter seeking the treasure, is supported by a large cast of screen players. Among the more prominent members of the cast are Jack Richardson, Philo McCullough, Robert Agnew and Derelys Purdue. The story was written by Frances Guihan, and it was directed by Jack and S. L. Warner.

New Series by Geographic

Sixteen Expeditions to Film Races and Tribes of World, Says Russell

THE Geographic Film Company, Inc., producers of "The Voice of the Land" series of 52 reels, showing the real Bible land, have decided on a new series of productions.

E. B. Russell, manager of distribution for the corporation, in an interview, gave a general outline of their future plans.

Russell said, "Through the use of the motion picture camera we are going to prove conclusively to the world that the Darwin theory has no foundation—that man did not originate from the monkey and that there are tribes existing on earth today having less intelligence than the ape and that there is not a particle of evidence to be gathered among the tribes of the world to prove the Darwin theory to be correct."

"Sixteen expeditions will be sent to all parts of the world to film every race and tribe. In order to carry out this idea, it will take at least three years. Each expedition will be accompanied by scientist and expert camera men. While each race will be filmed, so will the tribes and sub-divisions or branch offs of each tribe be caught by the camera."

Russell states that one expedition has already left for Siberia, and that within three months every company will be well on its way. One expedition will follow Stanley's trail through Africa. This company like the outfits which will travel the arctic and antarctic circle promise unusual material for the screen.

'Wild Youth" Completed for Fall Release

"WILD YOUTH," Ivan Abramson's latest contribution to the Independent Market for early fall release has been completed and will soon have its first private showing, according to announcement made at the Graphic Film offices. The film has been cut and titled, the only remaining work being completion of the art titles.

The feature is in six reels and said to be by far the greatest work under Abramson's production and direction. In addition, it contains a more impressive cast than any previous Graphic production heretofore noted including the late "Bobby" Connelly who died of acute bronchitis at his home suddenly on Thursday night, Virginia Pearson, "Sunshine" Mary Anderson, Julia Swayne Gordon, Harry T. Morey, Thurston Hall, Joseph Striker, and others who have been more or less familiar figures on both screen and legitimate stage.

New Bobby Dunn Comedy Is Announced

The latest Mirthquake Comedy produced by Eddie Lyons and released by Arrow was received at the home office this week and will be released in the very near future. The title of this production is "One Stormy Orphan," and it is said to be based on a very unusual theme and to be replete with novel situations and many laughs. It stars that diminutive comedian, Bobby Dunn, and once more demonstrates Eddie Lyons' ability as a producer to deservedly occupy the front rank in the making of comedies.

"The Broken Silence" Shown in Boston

Independent Films, Inc., of Boston, Mass., released the third James Oliver Curwood production, "The Broken Silence," last week playing day and date at the Beacon Theatre and the Modern Theatre, both houses operated by Jacob Lourie.

Arrow Executives Will Hold Conference

IT is understood that the Arrow Film Corporation is actively engaged in preparing a campaign for the coming season and as a part of this campaign has called a conference of the executives and special representatives, to be held at the home office next week. Special representatives J. S. Jossey and Thomas A. Curran are on their way to the home office now, Mr. Jossey coming from Chicago and Mr. Curran from Dallas, Texas.

Dr. Shallenberger will hold a series of meetings which will be attended by special representatives, sales manager, advertising manager, and salesmen, at which the plans for the Fall season will be outlined and announcement made of the forthcoming attractions.

New Talent Is Added to Century Comedy

During the past week new talent was added to Lee Moran's latest Century Comedy which is being directed by Arvid Gillstrom. Beside Ena Gregory the Century beauty and Blanche Payson its giantess are included Jack Henderson, Percy Pembroke, Tom Dempsey, Bill Irving and Max Mogi.

William Duncan Sails for Hawaii

William Duncan, Vitagraph star, and Mrs. Duncan, known on the screen as Edith Johnson, are on the Pacific, Hawaiian bound for a two weeks' vacation. This sea trip is by way of finishing a toning up course undertaken by Duncan, following the filming of his last picture, "The Fighting Guide." Immediately following his completion of the picture he spent several weeks in the hot springs of Southern California.

Before sailing, Duncan was given the script of his new picture, "When Danger Smiles." Immediately upon his return he will begin work on this feature, which promises to furnish all the thrills that even a Bill Duncan demands.

Harris Writes Song for "Slim Shoulders"

An announcement of special interest to exhibitors is contained in a report issued by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation this week to the effect that Charles K. Harris, the noted song writer, has completed a special song entitled "Slim Shoulders," which will be distributed through the country in conjunction with the release by the Hodkinson organization of the forthcoming Irene Castle production, "Slim Shoulders." This is the picture which was made at Miami, Fla., under the direction of Alan Crosland.

"The supporting cast includes Rod La Rocque, Mario Carrilo, Warren Cook and Marie Burke.

"Madame Sans Gene" To Be Filmed

Madame Sans Gene, the great romantic, historical play which has enthralled audiences for many seasons in all parts of the country, is at last done in motion pictures.

Great secrecy has been maintained in the production of the picture, which will be presented by Aubrey M. Kennedy, through the Producers Security Corporation as agents. The medium of distribution has not yet been selected.

"Christian" Company Is Back on Coast

Evidently association with the more leisurely methods of the English has not affected Maurice Tourneur or members of "The Christian" company, who returned to the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, last week, after ten weeks spent in London and vicinity, and the Isle of Man where the exteriors were made for Sir Hall Caine's famous novel, which will be a Goldwyn special production.

Arriving in Los Angeles at 7.30 A. M., the company proceeded at once to Culver City, where, after an hour for making up, work was begun on the interior settings, which include the theatre, hospital and monastery scenes. The returned travellers include Tourneur, Richard Dix, who plays the role of John Storm; Mae Busch, J. J. Cohn, business manager, and Chas. Van Enger, cameraman.

Mooney Is on Tour for "One Clear Call"

Paul Mooncy, General Manager of Louis B. Mayer Productions, Inc., is making a tour of First National Exchanges. The purposes of his trip is to confer with First National Branch Managers and with exhibitors regarding the big demand for "One Clear Call," the John M. Stahl Production which is scoring a success all over the country.

Mr. Mooney's first stop on his swing around the Exchanges is at Cleveland. He then goes to Cincinnati, St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Chicago.

"The Storm" to Open New Theatre

Port Huron, Michigan, will honor one of its favorite sons on July 28th, when a new half million dollar picture theatre will open its doors. The son is Langdon McCormick, famous author-inventor whose greatest dramatic triumph "The Storm" was filmed by Carl Laemmle for the Universal Film Company.

The initial attraction will be this Universal-Jewel version of McCormick's "The Storm." McCormick will journey out to Port Huron to be met by a band and leading citizens. There will be speeches and other forms of "Welcome home" mediums. McCormick will officially open the theatre.

Save Dates for the Big Ones— or You Lose!

THE SADDEST showman this year is going to be the fellow who ties himself up to a long string of pictures — the exhibitor who signs a profit-eating contract for a season's or a half-season's supply.

This fall more than ever before the market is going to be swamped with pictures. Some will be fair. Some will be good. Some will be flops.

The moment any exhibitor puts his John Hancock to the dotted line of any long term contract, he sells, gives and parcels away all his rights to his theatre and what shall go on his screen.

He signs away his right to play the best pictures on the market every week.

He sells his right to show the pictures the people want — when they want them.

He parcels away all privileges to his individuality.

He makes himself a caretaker instead of an active manager of his theatre.

He closes his doors to any and every good picture other than those that may come under his contract.

He deprives himself of profits and patronage by COMPELLING people to go elsewhere to see good, big productions from other companies.

He encourages and invites the strongest kind of competition.

He denies himself the right of every exhibitor — to show the best pictures at any time, no matter who the producer may be.

He pays for 27 or 29 pictures on the lone chance that he will get four or five or possibly ten good ones.

HE BUYS PICTURES ON SPECULATION — NOT ON MERIT!

Look me in the eye and tell me this: What are you going to do when, after getting all set with 27 or 29 bookings, along come such big ones as those mentioned on the following pages?

THINK NOW! LOOK BEFORE YOU BOOK!

It's in the air! It's everywhere!

Sizing Up the Box Office Appeal

A Genius for Finance Who Makes Progressive History for Universal

HOW CARL LAEMMLE, THROUGH HIS CONFIRMED HABIT OF OBSERVATION AND HIS STILL FIRMER HABIT OF PUTTING HIS OBSERVATIONS DOWN ON LITTLE SLIPS OF PAPER, HAS MADE PICTURES MORE HUMAN.

MANY kinds of ability go into the making of motion pictures. Carl Laemmle's abilities are popularly supposed to run in financial lines. Of his genius for finance there are evidences on every hand in the progressive history of the Universal. Not the least of these was the signal accomplishment of taking a million and a quarter dollars out of current business to make "Foolish Wives" in the worst year the industry has seen. Not a dollar was borrowed for this stupendous production. Now that this money is coming back to him in a steady stream from exchanges, it is a wonderful relief to be able to put it back into production for better pictures for next year instead of having to give it to a lot of bankers, however, much you might like the bankers.

Now that everyone is talking about the wonderful pictures that Universal has for Fall, and saying and thinking that this is a Universal Year, it is well to pause a moment and consider another of Carl Laemmle's varied abilities. His faculty of observation and the ability to turn his observations into ways of making better and more human pictures is one of Mr. Laemmle's greatest assets. This ability is just being appreciated.

It all started through the habit Mr. Laemmle formed of slipping into one of the side rear seats of the Central Theatre and listening to the comments of the audiences, although it really goes back to Mr. Laemmle's exhaustive habit of observation. No one imagined the quiet little man was the president of the company; no one thought anything unusual when now and then he would draw a piece of paper from his pocket and make cabalistic signs on it. These loose slips of paper in Laemmle's right hand pocket are just as necessary to him as his glasses. His secretary purchases pads exactly the right size and tears the small squares off, so all he has to do is to put in his hand and draw one out, and by these scraps of paper is Universal praised, blamed and directed, for on them is jotted the memoranda of what its president does and does not like.

Mr. Laemmle, who wanders about a good deal like Haroun al Raschid without giving any one due notice, has made it a habit to slip into theatres playing Universal pictures and to find out what made the audiences laugh and what made them sad, what interested them and what left them indifferent. The results were so surprising that he went night after night and his observations, written on these same scraps of paper, went flying out to the coast to the Scenario Department and the directors there, in the shape of terse comment and criticism.

Some of the effects the company had spent the most money on left the audience cold, while instead of gorgeous sets a simple country scene with hills and woodlands in the distance made them murmur with appreciation. He discovered that a moving picture, contrary to screen prejudice, could have as few characters as a play, yet through the sincerity of its acting hold the interest every moment,—that the most wonderful captions of his highest paid title writer did not evolve a ripple of emotion compared to simple ones like those he had written for "The Storm," for instance.

The result of his observations was embodied in great part in the last named picture and all the Fall Universal pictures like "Human Hearts," "The Flirt," and "The Kentucky Derby," show the principle he found to be true; that the big spectacle is second to the heart interest—even to that in homely lives which possess in addition the dry humor that comes so close to pathos.

He discovered that it was the men and not the women who laughed the hardest at the comedies, and that the feminine portion of the audience were the ones to see the subtle humor in the love making. In fact he was so impressed by the reactions of the lookers-on that he traveled all over the city to the principal moving picture houses and listened in to what made the audiences crowd around the box offices or stay away—perhaps because the feature has not been chosen with a proper regard for that portion of the city, perhaps for a dozen other reasons. Thick and fast came the memoranda and then his idea was born.

"While I am away I want a thorough canvass to be made not only of the theatres, but of their audiences, all over the country," he told R. H. Cochrane, the vice-president who represents him in his absence. "I don't want men sent out who understand nothing but film; I want those who know human nature. We have left reports largely to the exhibitor. Now I want to hear what the audiences have to say; lots of times they don't tell the exhibitor. Send out those young men to be the ears of the company, to listen in at all the shows, to find out whether humor in the North West is the same as it is in the South, and if not why not; and if the Middle West want vamp or sea pictures. And I want these young men," concluded Mr. Laemmle with a twinkle in his eye, "to take along plenty of loose paper pads and not to be afraid of scribbling on them. We are going to make pictures in future from those notes, and many a man has owed his rise to his knowledge of human nature; in fact, I predict that it is going to be the raw stock on which Universal pictures are built from now on."

So, orders have gone forth for each exchange to choose from its staff the most observant person and to make regular reports on the famous little slips of paper, which in turn can be used to make the future pictures made at Universal as good as, or better than the wonderful Fall product of this year. When these pictures are seen, remember these little white slips of Carl Laemmle.

Thus it is that Carl Laemmle through his confirmed habit of observation and still firmer habit of putting his observations down on paper, even though these observations be only memorandums, that Universal pictures are made more human—and therefore more entertaining and satisfying to audiences.

Universal's Prospectus of Short Subjects

Hoot Gibson

The Mirror Universal Novelty

INTERNATIONAL, which will issue as last year, two releases of International News a week, has a novelty which has already been proven a tremendous box-office attraction. It is called "The Mirror." It will take the place in the film world of the department in so many newspapers known as "Twenty-five Years Ago in—." Very few negatives of news events that happened 25 years ago are extant, but International was fortunate in being able to get hold of a negative which shows the inauguration of President McKinley on March 4th, 1897, to start the Mirror series. There will be either 8 or 12 of these Mirror releases, each one showing an interesting news event which happened in the time when the screen was considered more of a novelty than a staple amusement. Among the subjects are: The Inauguration of President McKinley, March 4, 1897, the Lusitania breaking records across the Atlantic 1907, Coronation of King George 1911, the Czar, at the height of his power 1908, King George with the Kaiser 1908, with Theodore Roosevelt in Africa 1910, famous ring champions of other days in action, Jeffries, Johnson, Gans, Nelson, 1904, San Francisco earthquake 1906, through the Panama Canal with President Taft 1912, the funeral of King Edward VII. 1910.

Fifty-Two Star Comedies Scheduled

IN the single-reel comedy field, Universal has two stars who are rapidly establishing a reputation for themselves in their various departments. One is Neely Edwards, whose tramp make-up and unique impersonation of Nervy Ned have assured success of the series of comedies in which he will be released; and the other is Roy Atwell, whose forte is the hen-pecked husband style made popular by the late Sidney Drew.

Universal also promises a novelty in Charles Molina, a toreador of national fame in Spain. The comedies will be built around the bull fights, as they never were conducted in Spain or any other place. Gil Pratt has been engaged to direct the comedies, and adequate casts will be chosen.

Universal Has Definite Mission This Fall

UNIVERSAL feels that it has a definite mission to perform in the Short Subject field the coming year. More and more exhibitors are relying solely on the Universal to supply them with comedies, tabloid dramas, specials and news reels. Never before was Universal in such a favorable position to supply this increasing demand. With a two-reel Century Comedy each week, a single-reel Star Comedy each week, a two-reel out-door Action drama each week, two International News Reels a week, and six serials made to their natural story length, Universal would have a superb opportunity to meet the exhaustive demands which are going to be made on it this year.

In addition, however, to the schedule outlined above, Universal will release six more of the Leather Pusher series with Reginald Denny, eight Baby Peggy Special Century Comedies, and twelve novelties in the shape of news reels depicting the long ago. These, so far as moving pictures are concerned, are unique. This novelty is entitled "The Mirror."

Forthcoming Serials

UNIVERSAL has embarked upon the second period of its constructive serial history. In days gone past, the well-known serial was the weakest point in the armor of any moving picture company, although it frequently was the most profitable one. But as the old serials were constructed, it was not possible for anyone to take a great deal of pride in them. and there is no denying the fact that they were the cause of a great deal of censorship difficulty. In taking the lead in reconstructing the serial, Carl Laemmle has shown himself a true pioneer, a real constructive force, an originator of a connecting link between education and amusement, which has already been deeply appreciated and recognized by men prominent in educational affairs throughout the United States.

The first step taken was the entire elimination of the old blood-and-thunder type of serial and the making of a chapterplay in its stead. "Winners of the West" was the first of these chapterplays and it sounded a keynote as an educational-historical work. For once, reform and profit went hand in hand, for "Winners of the West" made a tremendous amount of money.

The second step, which has just been taken, is the making of serial stories in the length required by the value of the story, instead of arbitrarily setting them at a pre-determined length and then sretching the story to cover the contract sold by the exchange-men.

"In the Days of Buffalo Bill" starts the Fall season for Universal, as far as chapterplays are concerned. This successor to "Winners of the West," by Edward Laemmle, has already earned for him two loving cups, one from the members of his company and the other from the president and officers of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, in appreciation of his very definite and very praiseworthy contribution to motion picture history. "In the Days of Buffalo Bill" is a story of a Union scout in the stirring days of 1861-71, the days which saw the great Rebellion, the reconstruction period as it affected the great untravelled west, the construction of the first trans-continental railway, the subjugation of Indian territories, and the triumphal march of civilization toward the great West. The story brings into high relief the personalities of President Lincoln, and President Johnson, Genera's Grant, Lee, Grenville Dodge, Custer, Phil Sherman, Durant, John Wilkes Booth, Admiral Farragut, Custer, Sitting Bull, and a number of other national and internationally known men, as well as the great Buffalo Bill, whose exploits form a constant running thrill to the chapterplay. Art Acord plays the role of Scout Taylor, the fictional character about which the actual story is written; Duke Lee plays Buffalo Bill, and Dorothy Wood plays the role of the daughter of a Southern veteran attempting to reconstruct his fortune in the Great West.

The second serial for Fall will be "The Radio King" in which Roy Stewart will star, supported by Louise Lorraine, Sidney Bracey, Al Smith and Clark Comstock. The serial is being directed by Robert Hill who, with Edward Dillon, has been feverishly studying radio ever since the startling developments of this year brought it into such prominence.

"The Radio King" will give every one of the millions of people interested in radio a real radio thrill and a mighty interesting glimpse into the future.

Virginia Valli

Another "Leather Pushers" Series Planned.

UNIVERSAL takes great pleasure in announcing a second series of twelve two-reel "Leather Pushers" stories. The success of the first six, which virtually introduced Reginald Denny as a box-office attraction, was so great that the demand for another series became over-powering. As soon as Denny is finished with "The Kentucky Derby," in which he is being featured, Harry A. Pollard, who directed the first series, will start the second at Universal City.

Hayden Stevenson has already arrived at the capital of the film world to start the first of the new series in his character as "Monty," Kid Roberts' manager. The first series were made in New York City, but with the greater facilities which are offered at the Coast studios and with a new crop of Frisco and Los Angeles pugilists, Pollard expects to far outdo the success of the first series in the second.

Out Door Two Reelers

TO start the season of two-reel action dramas, Universal has announced three series of virile stories in tabloid. There will be eight in each series and they will be sold in series. The pictures in these series will alternate in release. One series will be designed for Art Acord's use and will be known as the "Lumber Jack Series." The stories will be written in the Universal City Scenario Department and will be produced in locations that will bring out the story atmosphere to the full.

The second will be a series of stories from Jack London's famous Fish Patrol yarns, purchased for this purpose. They offer novelty and action to the London degree. The third will be a series of Harry Carey western stories. Some of them will be two reelers already used when such are up to the high mark demanded but most of them will be five reelers cut down and retitled in two-reel form. Other series will be announced as they are required.

Universal's Expectations Fulfilled in "The Storm"

"The Storm is a film that will appeal to man, woman and child"

"THE STORM" as a Jewel picture has more than fulfilled every expectation. After a week of the best June business that the Capitol Theatre in New York ever did, it has entered upon a long run at the Central Theatre, which bids fair to be a record for Broadway. Hot weather seems to mean nothing to "The Storm." It is breaking box office records in the face of alternating heat, humidity and downpours of rain.

Universal paid a big sum of money for "The Storm" in the face of croakers on all sides, who declared that it was merely a mechanical melodrama with a remarkable fire illusion scene. But Universal felt that this could not explain the long and successful run which "The Storm" had enjoyed as a play. Although Langdon McCormick devised the stage spectacle, he certainly wrote a human and appealing play to surround it. Under the magic hands of Reginald Barker, the director, and with a superb cast including House Peters, Virginia Valli, Matt Moore, and Josef Swickard, "The Storm" as a photoplay rounded into absolutely perfect proportions.

So entirely satisfactory did it prove at the Capitol Theatre, accompanied by Samuel Rothafel's incomparable music, that Universal feels it has the master picture of the year in "The Storm."

Although "The Storm" classes as melodrama, its tempo is so well controlled that the spectator is held enthralled in the magic grip to the last happy sequence. Its story deals with three strong emotional natures shut up in a storm-bound cabin in the forest. One of the natures, naturally, is a woman and that causes even a greater storm within the cabin than rages without.

Langdon McCormick, after seeing "The Storm" in the projection room, said:

"After doing fire and storm scenes for the stage for fifteen years, I am frank to say that I have just witnessed the finest and most spectacular set of scenes in my life. I am frank to say the Universal production of 'The Storm' was far beyond my hopes."

"Under Two Flags" Priscilla Dean's Best Picture

No story could offer better screen drama than "Under Two Flags"

OF all of the wonderful stories written by that remarkable woman whose pen name was Ouida, none has proven more popular or been more widely read than "Under Two Flags." It was for that reason, as well as the fact that it presented an unrivalled opportunity for the display of the remarkable emotional ability of Priscilla Dean, that Universal chose this as a starring vehicle for one of the most versatile and accomplished women on the screen today. Having decided on a vehicle, Tod Browning was chosen to direct it. Browning had already put over two remarkable pictures with Miss Dean, "Outside the Law" and "The Virgin of Stamboul." The cast chosen included James Kirkwood, himself a motion picture star and director of prominence; Stuart Holmes, John Davidson, and Ethel Grey Terry—a cast to conjure with.

"Under Two Flags" is the story of a French girl whose lot was cast with the Foreign Legion in Algiers. In her particular character as the daughter of the regiment, Cigarette is enabled to save the honor of the man she loves and at the same time thwart a treacherous plot against the French Colonial troops in Africa.

The role of the dashing Cigarette fits Priscilla Dean like a glove and gives her the opportunity for the display of her rich emotional nature, in which she will go straight to the hearts of her millions of admirers.

Five months of painstaking construction and research work were devoted to making "Under Two Flags" as nearly comformable to Ouida's book as possible, and all of the works on Algiers and Northern Africa were searched for character types, architectural features and the costumes of the Arab and Berber tribes. Nothing was left to chance. Much of the picture was developed away from the studio on the desert at Oxnard and other points. Wonderfully picturesque action stuff and colorful scenery have been taken with exquisite skill and lighting which make them doubly effective.

"Human Hearts" Splendid Drama of Mother Love

"Human Hearts" Grand old play that has made a great film

IN bringing masterpieces of the stage to such permanency as the screen offers, Carl Laemmle feels that he is doing the present generation of theatregoers a real service. "Human Hearts," one of the best remembered of the late Hal Reid's great dramas, has been put into superb moving picture form by King Baggot and a company of well-known players, including House Peters, Mary Philbin, Edith Hallor, Gertrude Claire, George Hackathorne, Ramsey Wallace, Russell Simpson and Snitz Edwards. "Human Hearts" as a Universal-Jewel, will take its place among the great dramas of mother love and home.

King Baggot enjoyed a distinct advantage in producing "Human Hearts," through having played in it on the stage. Yet for all the wonderful heart interest, directors have been very reluctant to stake their reputations on a picture in which heart throbs took the place of spectacular melodramatic stunts. But Baggot succeeded so well that Charles Larkin in the Motion Picture News, in pre-reviewing the picture, speaks as follows of it:

"Never has a sweeter, more wholesome, thrilling, entertaining story been told on the shadow stage. . . . Here is real life, its joys. sorrows, despairs, its sunshine and shadows. . . . The plot holds from first to last enough dramatic situations for several five-reelers. Baggot put some surefire heart-throbs in it. . . . Only the hard-boiled, ivory-topped will be able to hold back the tears. . . . The photography is unusually fine and the continuity excellent.

"We would say that 'Human Hearts' approaches 100 per cent. as a picture play. . . . That also goes for its box-office appeal. If this is an example of some of the pictures we may expect this fall—well, exhibitors better install larger safes in their houses to hold the receipts. . . . The cast of 'Human Hearts' is one of uniform excellence. It's a cast that sets a pace for others to follow.

"Good old 'back home' stuff, filled with heart-throbs, thrills, comedy, excellent character portrayals. . . . A picture that meets the demand for cleaner, better films. . . . Look up all the superlatives in Webster's and use them on this one. . . . It will stand up under the strongest plugging."

Famous Old Racing Play Makes Wonderful Photoplay

Scenes were filmed right in the Blue Grass State for "The Kentucky Derby"

ALTHOUGH "The Kentucky Derby" has plenty of stars of its own, it will have a peculiar significance for all lovers of horse racing, as the star two-year old of this year's season, Morvich, plays an important role in the production. "The Kentucky Derby" is founded on Charles T. Dazey's famous melodrama, "The Suburban Handicap." Universal has owned the picture rights to this famous play for a number of years. Several times the author has attempted to buy them back, but Universal was only waiting a season like the present one to add this further clincher to the wonderful series of twelve Jewels which will be life-savers to many exhibitors during this coming year.

In order to get the full benefit of the wonderful Kentucky atmosphere, King Baggot took his company to Louisville and Lexington, and the main portions of this famous racing melodrama were filmed at Churchill Downs during the actual running of this year's Kentucky Derby. All of the stable scenes, the atmosphere of the famous blue-grass state, have been actually filmed from life. The latter part of the picture was taken at Universal City and on the Pacific Coast, Catalina and Long Beach.

In the cast will be found Reginald Denny, who made a tremendous name for himself in "The Leather Pushers" series; Lillian Rich, Kingsley Benedict, Gertrude Astor, Lionel Belmore, Walter McGrail, Emmett King and Wilfred Lucas. One unusual feature of "The Kentucky Derby" is the fact that Kingsley Benedict, who plays a very important role, played the same role in the original production of "The Suburban Handicap" at its world premiere in Chicago. For a number of years after that, he played the role and later utilized it. later as the basis for a vaudeville sketch.

Thirty-Four Inches of Comedy

THEY call her thirty-four inches of comedy, but she's Century Comedies' littlest—and biggest star. We know her by the name of Baby Peggy and she's three years of age.

Her few years have been spent practically all of the time with Century Comedies. Her first opportunity was a comedy in which Brownie, the wonder dog, was the star. Her cuteness, her difference in acting, her naturalness, took her immediately out of the cast as co-star, and transformed her into a star.

She has appeared in exactly twenty-five Centuries. Those already released have been hailed as the comedy hits of the year.

Plans for Century's Eighth Anniversary

By Julius Stern

President of Century Comedies

WITH the coming of Century Comedies' eighth anniversary our next season's lineup should be the greatest in our history. My brother Abe and myself intend to make 1922-23 a banner year, and we shall start the ball rolling with pictures such as "Little Red Riding Hood" and "Jack and the Beanstalk," each completed with Baby Peggy in the title role. Others along these lines will be "Hansel and Gretel," "Alice in Blunderland," "The Little Match Girl" and "The Little Mermaid." Baby Peggy will star in each of them. These Centurized Fairy Tales will mean much to Century, and to every theatre that plays them.

Our five stars, Baby Peggy, Brownie the wonder dog, Lee Moran, Johnny Fox and Queenie, the human horse, are among the biggest comedy drawing cards in the field. We have three of the best known comedy directors on our "lot"—Arvid Gillstrom, Alf Goulding and Al Herman.

Al Herman is in charge of our all-animal series. These series are very well liked by houses which cater to mixed, intelligent audiences, such as first run houses, vaudeville and so on. They are really the hardest type of comedy to produce, and require weeks of great patience. Two of his finest novelties are "Cured" and "Just Dogs." "Just Dogs," for instance, took five weeks of night and day work, and is one of the finest and greatest novelties ever produced by Herman.

Alf Goulding has been placed in charge of comedies that will star Baby Peggy, and will personally write and direct the entire series of Centurized Fairy Tales. Two have already been completed, with others to follow. Several Peggy pictures will also be made up in Yosemite Valley by Goulding.

Arvid Gillstrom has to his credit two of the funniest Centuries Lee Moran has made to date. They are "Foolish Lives" and "Some Family," and are considered the best things Moran has appeared in since "The Straphanger." Mr. Gillstrom, in all likelihood, will handle all of Moran's Century Comedies, although we will also let him make a series of Brownie comedies, something on the order of "A Radio Hound."

Queenie, the human horse, and Johnny Fox will also add to our crop with ten comedies apiece. Both of these stars have made a name for themselves in comedies we have already made with them. Fox, particularly, has made countless friends, and we are having several special stories prepared for him by a prominent writer of boys' stories.

My brother and myself want to, and will, uphold the prestige and reputation we've made. We've worked hard for it—and every year will mean more to all of us.

Each year my brother and myself visit the larger cities of Europe to get a new grasp on life and its situations. This year I will take Lee Moran with me, and we will use the beautiful backgrounds of London, Paris and Berlin for a group of comedies now being written for Mr. Moran.

Abe Stern and myself have been exhibitors. We know the exhibitor's trials and tribulations, and that is why we know how to help meet them for the showman.

We've got the stars, the directors, the stories—and the prestige. We'll continue to serve with these four graces, for we want Century to mean, to comedies, what Tiffany means to jewelry!

Lee Moran and His Century Lineup

LEE MORAN needs no introduction. But we do want to let you know what he has done—and what he will do—for Century Comedies.

Plans are now completed by Julius Stern to bring him to London, Paris, Berlin and other large European cities this summer to film several Century Comedies with these cities as backgrounds. His current pictures are now nearing their finishing under the direction of Arvid Gillstrom.

Moran's first picture for Century was "The Straphanger." Then followed "The Touchdown," "The Rubberneck," "Upper and Lower," "Red Hot Rivals," "Ten Seconds" and "Apartment Wanted." Others now in New York ready for release dates are "Foolish Lives" and "Some Family" and "Hickville Romeo." "Ladies First" and "Not Guilty" are now finished and titled and will be sent East very soon.

Seventy-five percent of Moran's pictures have been directed by Arvid Gillstrom, and the entire series will be directed by Gillstrom.

The 1922-23 schedule has an excellent lineup of Lee Moran comedies, and he will continue with Century for some time to come.

Johnny Fox, Century's New Juvenile Star

TWELVE year old Johnny Fox is Century's newest addition to the comedy ranks. His own, original style of humor has made him very popular in the short time he has been with Century.

Johnny received his first opportunity in a Brownie comedy. The picture "Some Class" showed Julius Stern, president of Century, that splendid talent was ready to be developed, so Johnny became a co-star in pictures with Harry Sweet. Plans are now being formulated to make a series of detective and messenger boy stories with Fox, and with the coming season Century intends to play Johnny Fox up big. Johnny is of the freckle faced type, and is promising for his boyish comedy work.

Wonderful Cast Appears in "The Flame of Life"

The author of 'The Flame of Life" describes the film version as perfect.

ANOTHER famous authoress takes her place in the ranks of Jewel contributors in the person of Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett. "The Flame of Life," is the name chosen under which to release Mrs. Burnett's novel of the Lancashire coal mining region, written as "That Lass O' Lowries." The famous author of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" has portrayed in "The Flame of Life" a true picture of a locality where life is serious and existence even must be fought for to be obtained. Naturally, the story in a setting as gripping and relentless as this, must be equally strong and compelling. In developing this story for the screen, Hobart Henley has taken the salient points and, if anything, intensified the situations contributed by Mrs. Burnett into as vital and gripping a drama as any which will be released this year.

Priscilla Dean is cast in the role of an ordinary pit girl cursed with a father who is the bully of the mine and of the district. At home, she is his abject slave, merely because he is the stronger. She, however, has inherited her father's dominant traits, and at the pit she is as much master of the other women workers as he is of his own home. Stern in character as they are, they are equally pitiless with one of their own sex who has gone astray. Joan alone shows compassion to such a girl, and the resultant disturbance brings her to the notice of the foreman, where complication of deadly intensity takes place, through Lowrie's attempts to murder the foreman, and Joan's efforts to protect him. The cast includes Robert Ellis, Beatrice Burnham, Kathryn McGuire and Wallace Beery.

When shown the picture at a private pre-view for that purpose in the Universal projection room, Mrs. Julia R. Tutwiler, who handles Mrs. Burnett's film interests, was very enthusiastic and declared the production intensely interesting and Miss Dean's performance capital in every particular. She praised particularly the splendid direction and was greatly pleased that the atmosphere had been portrayed with such exactitude.

"The Flirt" Is Greatest Drama Henley Ever Made

"The Flirt, a famous novel, made a film that is a winner.

A GREAT deal of talent has been collected to interpret for moving pictures Booth Tarkington's famous novel, "The Flirt." The all-star cast includes Eileen Percy, who has been starred for several years by William Fox and prior to that played in a number of Universal pictures; Helen Jerome Eddy, equally prominent as a star and leading woman, whose highly dramatic ability has taken her far along the road to success; Lydia Knott, one of the famous mothers of the screen; Buddy Messenger, Edward Hearn, Harold Goodwin, Nel Craig, George Nichols, Tom Kennedy, Bert Roach, Dorothea Wolbert, William Welsh and John Cossar. In this cast there are five players who have been starred in various productions. "The Flirt" is directed by Hobart Henley.

Booth Tarkington's novel is so well-known that it is almost superfluous to give any detailed synopsis, and the thousands who have read this popular novel will be overjoyed to have such a painstaking and thoroughly sympathetic interpretation as Hobart Henley has made. Tarkington took a page out of the life of an average middle west family and out of it constructed an epic of human nature and soul development which will live long in the memory of the reading public.

Hobart Henley's moving picture epic, far more graphic than the written word, is a picture that no one who sees it will ever forget. There is no great mechanical or physical thrill, no "stunt," no playing to the gallery. "The Flirt" is not a melodrama. But it contains some of the most basic, most human drama ever written. It is the every day drama that every boy and girl can understand, drama that many of them have acted themselves. The popularity of Tarkington's novel showed how universal this drama could be. Henley shows it even more vividly on the screen.

Forthcoming Unversal Jewels and the Winning Nine

THE list of forthcoming productions from Universal includes many pictures to both exhibitor and the public. Some are already completed at Universal City and others have reached the New York Office.

Among those not completed is "Merry Go Round," Von Stroheim's next production to follow "Foolish Wives" which is included in the Fall Universal Jewels.

Lon Chaney

Von Stroheim is already working hard on "Merry Go Round." Arms, uniforms, insignia, and accoutrement have been pouring into Universal City from Vienna in the endeavor to make "Merry Go Round" as complete a reproduction of the Viennese capital as "Foolish Wives" was of Monte Carlo. The cast will include a number of players who were in "Foolish Wives," as well as Mary Philbin, who has the type of beauty and personality to fit her eminently for one of the very important roles in this picture.

Lon Chaney is hard at work on "Bitter Sweet," under the direction of Lambert Hillyer. "Bitter Sweet" is a story of San Francisco's underworld and the gigantic undertaking of reproducing San Francisco's earthquake and fire is being attempted by the confident Mr. Hillyer. Chaney is surrounding himself with a cast which is headed by Virginia Valli and Jack Mower.

Gladys Walton

Virginia Valli will also play an important role in another Jewel, the title of which may be changed. This Jewel is Jack London's story of the prize ring, "The Abysmal Brute," and will feature Miss Valli and Reginald Denny who, above all men, is qualified to play the hero in this picture.

Priscilla Dean will start in a few days on the production of "Trimmed in Scarlet," a play first produced in New York with Maxine Elliott.

Harry Myers

Edward Laemmle is making the twelfth Jewel picture in Europe, using for his subject George Barr McCutcheon's "Castle Craneycrow." It will be released under the title, "The Prisoner," with Harry Myers in the stellar role and the majority of the cast recruited in Europe.

The Universal Attractions will this year be released in blocks of nine. Four stars will alternate with two all-star companies in a release each week. The stars who will be in the group are all well known and their drawing power amply proven: "Hoot" Gibson, Gladys Walton, Herbert Rawlinson and Frank Mayo. In the all-star combinations the best stars available will be assembled.

The first block of Universal Attractions will be called "The Winning Nine" and will consist of the following pictures:

Herbert Rawlinson in "Don't Shoot," a film version of George Bronson Howard's original story, "Hand's Up," directed by Jack Conway. In the cast are Edna Murphy, Wade Boteler and George Fisher, Duke R. Lee and Fred Kelsey.

Eric Von Stroheim

"Paid Back," with an all-star cast which includes Gladys Brockwell, Mahlon Hamilton, Stuart Holmes and Kate Price. Directed by Irving Cummings.

Gladys Walton in "Top O' the Morning," Anne Caldwell's famous Broadway play of the same name, directed by Edward Laemmle, with a cast which includes Harry Myers, William Welsh, Harry Carter, Ethel Shannon and Richard Cummings.

Hoot Gibson in "The Galloping Kid," by Wm. H. Hamby, directed by Nat Ross, with a cast which includes Edna Murphy, Lionel Belmore and Percy Challenger.

Frank Mayo in "Caught Bluffing," by Jack Bechdolt, directed by Lambert Hillyer with a cast which includes Wallace McDonald, Edna Murphy, Jack Curtis and Ruth Royce.

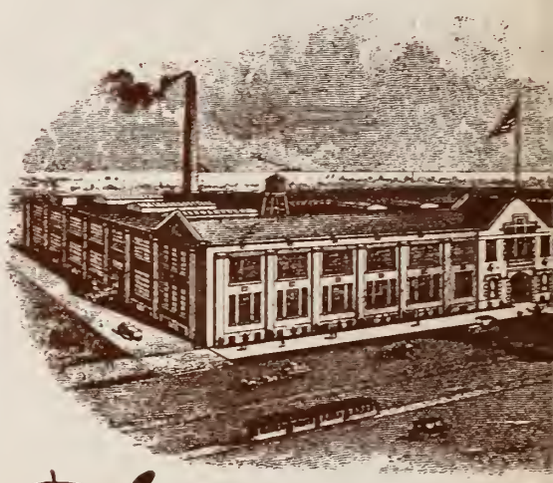
Frank Mayo

Herbert Rawlinson in "Confidence," by Bernard Hyman, directed by Harry A. Pollard, with a cast which includes Harriet Hammond, the bathing beauty; William Robert Daly, Hal Cooley, John Steppling, Otto Hoffman.

An all-star production of "The Long Chance," by Peter H. Kyne. Directed by Jack Conway. The cast includes Henry B. Walthall, Marjorie Daw and Ralph Graves.

Gladys Walton in "The Girl Who Ran Wild," adapted from Bret Harte's "M'Liss," directed by Rupert Julian, with a cast which includes Vernon Steel, Joseph Dowling and William Burress.

Hoot Gibson in "A Long Hand," by Ralph Cummins. Cast and director have not been chosen yet.



The productions mentioned are only a few of a pretentious list of subjects that Universal intends making for the coming season. Other releases adapted from the pens of popular authors, whose names insure the unusual, enacted by capable casts, will round out a schedule which promises to surpass anything that this company has ever accomplished.

New York, N.Y.

Gentlemen:

I can recommend very high the Power's G.E. High Intensity Lamps furnished by you which I have been using at the Central Theatre for several months.

They have a very high quality of light and are wonderfully constructed. I find that they give better results with the amperage which I have been using than any other lamp in the market. As far as I know, any practical operator can operate one even though they require attention on the part of the operator in order to get the best results.

Very truly yours,

Universal's Cooperation and Exploitation Creed

IF Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., ever needed to sum up his personal policy it could readily be covered in three words, "Nothing is impossible." How many times he has justified himself and the Universal in this since the early days—even before the formation of the present organization, thousands upon thousands of his friends the exhibitors will testify profusely and gladly.

That this was neither boasting nor bluffing is disclosed by the simplicity of Mr. Laemmle's methods. First he discarded the locution "Keep step with progress"—which means literally "eyes right" on the other fellow—never ahead nor behind—a method that kills inspiration, initiative and resource.

It is not surprising therefore, that when the inevitable "moving the goods" from the Exchange shelves became an acute problem, Carl Laemmle was ready with the remedy.

"Why not help the exhibitor make a big success of every Universal release he books?" said Mr. Laemmle. Then and there was born the twin-six, 100-horsepower advertising and publicity forces that long antedated the adoption of the terms "Exploitation" and "Exploitation Department." That was early in the game when the problems created by competition were new. They have been growing more and more acute ever since.

Chronologically, Universal was the first producer to use a nation-wide, large-space newspaper campaign—in 1915; subjects, Universal pictures and Universal City. The year following Universal first advertised direct to motion picture patrons through a nation-wide campaign in the Saturday Evening Post, popularizing brands and individual releases, and directing their attention to the local theatres.

The comment in film circles, caused by these, then, innovations, was as nothing compared to the 1916 announcement of the placing of a publicity man in each main exchange, thus antedating the general movement by some six years.

While Carl Laemmle was, as frequently he is, ahead of his time, the experiment was thoroughly tried out. Since that time all the larger exchanges have been developing along the present exploitation lines—that is, making "help the exhibitor" the keynote, and locally intensifying and expanding in each territory the work of the Home Office publicity and advertising departments.

Gradually, as the work and the opportunities developed, a permanent publicity director of high character and wide experience was placed in each main exchange. So thorough has been the training of these men that during the past season they have been entrusted with the direction of such special representatives as were engaged for "Foolish Wives"—during its triumphant tour of the United States and Canada.

With its varied program of releases of everything an exhibitor could ask for—from a one-reel comedy, a news weekly, two-reel comedies, novelties, westerns, five-reel one-a-week releases, Jewel features and Super-Jewels. These field men, regardless of their individual experience, found opportunities such as no previous berth had ever given them. Thanks to the high standard set in their selection, the results were not only gratifying but surprising. The Home Office Publicity, Advertising, Poster and Supply Departments were flooded with helpful suggestions. Exhibitors began to take notice and catch the enthusiasm of Universal "exploiteers."

This co-operative movement, under the skillful management of P. D. Cochrane, Director of Exploitation, grew to such proportions that Mr. Cochrane, who is also Secretary of Universal, felt the need of shifting the burden, and to that end selected as Exploitation Manager, Raymond Cavanagh, who is now directing from the Home Office the work of the field men.

Since Mr. Cavanagh's appointment and the centralization of effort completing the development of the exploitation plans upon which the Universal has been working for the past six years, thus rounding out its pioneering endeavors, the field force has received a new impetus. The first effect was the gradual systematization of the routine publicity work in each exchange, to the end that more time could be given to individual exhibitors.

Exhibitors have always credited Universal Press Books with setting the highest standard, but with the correlating of the efforts of the entire field force, a wealth of exploitation ideas, suggestions and tried and proven exploitation methods are now setting a new and even higher standard.

Six years ago Carl Laemmle threw a bomb into film circles with his pronouncement, "We will help every exhibitor of Universal pictures to make big money with them"—and today a selected corps of keen, trained, tactful, resourceful men, equally at home about the theatre or the newspaper, are making good Carl Laemmle's historic words, and again justifying his faith that "nothing is impossible."

Here are the instructions of Raymond Cavanagh, Universal's Exploitation Manager:

"Your business is not to tell the exhibitor his, but to exert your own skill, experience, resources and initiative for his benefit.

"You report to and keep in close touch with the Home Office for the good of the department. Your chief is your exchange manager, but your real boss is the exhibitor.

"Always remember that an exhibitor is the safe guide to local conditions. You have a certain knowledge of scores of other local conditions. Bring this experience to bear upon the problem of any locality and you will find that 'there is always a way out.' The place where you are exploiting a picture is your 'home town' for the time being.

"In the summer season your work should take on a bigger and broader character than at any other time. When a house manager is confronted with the problem of 'to close or not to close' you have not merely an exploitation problem on your hands—if you are going to be of real assistance—you have a business problem, but you always have this advantage, that you've done it before, and you can do it again.

"Don't let that word 'exploitation' blind you to any portion of your duties. It is the current word now, and when properly understood it is all right. Don't forget that exploitation is something—yes, a whole lot—more than stunts and ballyhoo. You are a motion picture evangelist; you are preaching an appreciated gospel; you are known and judged by your works. Among the reports on my desk now are examples of the dozens of things that can be done. For instance, one of the boys not only worked out a plan for keeping a house open, but jumped receipts 35 per cent the first night of the operation of the new plan. Another patched up a difference of long standing between a manager and his local editor; another found a whole newspaper staff down with the flu. He pulled off his coat, and with some volunteer helpers got the paper out. Another in a town where absolutely no signs or street stunts of any kind were allowed had the whole police force pulling for him because he discovered a loophole in the city ordinance. It's all in the day's work, you're always helping the other fellow, that's what makes your work interesting."

A Broad Policy and a Helpful Creed

THE broad and generous policy of the Universal's Exploitation Department is right in line with that of the organization as a whole. There is no petty quibbling over what shall or shall not be done. "Go the limit" is the watchword, and this is acted upon and lived up to in every exchange. Something of the activities of the field men may be better understood by the following extracts from the code prepared for their use by Raymond Cavanagh, Exploitation manager, Home Office, New York City:

"Your business is not to tell the exhibitor his, but to exert your own skill, experience, resources and initiative for his benefit.

"You report to and keep in close touch with the Home Office for the good of the department. Your chief is your exchange manager, but your real boss is the exhibitor.

Universal Pictures Circle the Globe

UNIVERSAL is one of the world powers in the film industry. Wherever a picture is shown in practically any part of the universe there will be found an executive through whom service will be extended. Whether it is in the United States, Czecho Slovakia, Canada, Ecuador, Egypt, Java or New Zealand, Universal is represented.

The great Universal organization has been carefully and painstakingly built up with the idea of rendering the best possible service. Each representative was chosen because of his knowledge of the picture industry, and because of his ability to effectually put that knowledge to the best advantage.

Following are the addresses of the offices that make the Universal a world power.

Note.—Where the name of the exchange is not given the branch is maintained in the name of the Universal Film Mfg. Co. The other branches are designated as indicated by the various individual designations given.

Lambert Hillyer Director of "He-men"

LAMBERT HILLYER is known as a director of great actors. He first gained fame as the man who directed twenty-five William S. Hart pictures, and at the same time wrote fifteen of the continuities himself. He is a double-barreled genius, in fact, for he has not only directed, but written, most of his screen productions.

Following Hart's temporary retirement from the screen Hillyer was chosen by Thomas H. Ince to direct two of his biggest special productions which will be released early this fall "Skin Deep," and "The Brotherhood of Hate."

It is significant of Hillyer's ability that he wrote the scripts for both of these special productions. And now he has been selected to direct Lon Chaney in "Bitter Sweet" a Universal Jewel production. Hillyer and Chaney have been enthusiastic boosters of each other since the latter left Universal to support Bill Hart.

Explanation of Process Employed in Making Natural Colored Film*

Gelatine Acquires Curious and Valuable Property of Absorbing Dyes

*By Wm. V. D. Kelley

TO many persons not actively engaged in some branch of the motion picture business who are usually only casual visitors to the cinema theatres, a colored film may mean one using one or more of the following methods:

(a) Tinting.
(b) Toning.
(c) Hand coloring.
(d) Stencils.
(e) Impressions from matrices.

All of which make use of the ordinary black to white film and are colored by means within the scope or taste of the individuals doing the work.

Generally the results are in the nature of mass effects, although the stencil and printing systems do select and color portions of the scenes—usually the still portions—quite accurately. In the Pathe stencil process the costumes and very fine details are often remarkably well done.

Consider that the total area of the scene on the films is less than 0.75 inch by 1 inch; that the magnification is more than 200 diameters; that there are sixteen complete pictures showing each second and 16,000 pictures in a single reel; that the slightest variation in tint, or shade; or wandering, of the color is visible to the audience and one will begin to realize some of the difficulties encountered in coloring lengths of films.

Natural Color Pictures

The process that is the subject of this paper differs from all of the above in that the work is mechanical, chemical and optical. The choice of the colors and the final results depending on the accuracy of the plans.

In the words of Professor Louis Derr of Massachusetts Institute of Technology:

"1. The process is well founded and carefully built upon a sound scientific basis, and is scientifically up to date.

"2. Some colors are excellently produced, but not all in a given area. By the use of special filters in the taking camera, particularly subjects of limited color range can be almost perfectly reproduced. The process should be of particular value in scientific films, advertising films and films involving portraits. The 'feature film' which does not demand violet and bizarre lighting effects also seems to me to offer a particularly inviting field.

"3. The product can be used in the ordinary motion picture projector without change or modification of any kind in the mechanism and requires no special skill on the part of the projectionist.

"4. The process is mechanically simple, and presents no difficulty in the way of quantity production."

In other words, we do fairly accurately what every user of a camera has desried, namely, to take the pictures in the negative so as to reproduce on the positive the scenic view or object as one sees it on the ground glass or view finder—that is in the colors of nature.

Scientists do not agree as to the actual means by which colors are produced or as to why we see them as we do. We do know that as a practical proposition white light may be divided into three parts—red, green and blue—and that with these three colors plus white or black, one can reproduce all shades or mixtures of colors.

We also know—practically—that with a complementary pair of colors—for example a red-orange and the complementary color of green-blue—mixtures of these two colors will give all of the colors found preponderating in nature—the weakness appearing in yellows which show as orange yellow and purples which show as browns. But here, even, the inaccuracy is not noticeable if the colors taken in association are suitable.

The above statement merely means that any one pair of colors will not reproduce every color in any one picture area. However, in making motion pictures one is not confined to any one pair of colors throughout the reel, and by using filters to suit the scene or objects being photographed, he can in a reel or film show every color and shade that the eyes will perceive.

To reproduce every shade and color in any one picture area would mean dividing the spectrum into three parts. In motion picture photography, due to the facts outlined in the above paragraph and also due to practical considerations, we have found that by dividing the spectrum into two parts we are able to produce satisfactorily all that is required for our work.

Taking the Pictures

In such a two-color process the pictures are taken in pairs on a single width film, one over the other, or on double width film, the images being side by side, one picture being taken through a red-orange filter and the companion picture through a blue-green one.

The negatives are developed in total darkness or by means of a safe light, which is green and not red. Otherwise, they are handled exactly as ordinary films, being passed first through a developing bath then through a fixing bath and finally given a wash.

After being dried the negative is used for printing on to the positive. The positive may have a single coating of the sen-

ALTHOUGH natural colored motion pictures have become more or less familiar to every one, nevertheless little is known of the process used in producing these pictures. Wm. V. D. Kelley, president of the Prizma Company, Inc., New York City, presented a most elucidating paper on this subject before the New York and Philadelphia sections of the Illuminating Engineering Society. This paper, which is herewith reprinted, outlines the general process. However, as very rapid progress has recently been made in this art, a few of the most modern details of the process differ slightly from those outlined by Mr. Kelley. Mr. Kelley himself is largely responsible for the recent advancement in this field.

While no one claims that natural colored motion pictures have reached a state of perfection, yet pictures have been recently produced that clearly show the great future of the natural colored film.

Largest Theatrical Enterprise in World Embodies Two Houses in One

WHAT is claimed to be the largest theatrical enterprise in the world, the State-Capitol Twin Theatres, at Union Hill, N. J., is now well under construction and from all accounts will be ready to open to the public by early fall.

These two theatres will occupy a ground area equalling a whole city block, being two hundred and fifty by two hundred and fifty feet square with frontage on Bergenline Ave., the main thoroughfare of Union Hill.

The State Theatre, which will seat two thousand, will be devoted exclusively to the presentation of high class motion pictures and the Capitol, which will seat twenty-five hundred will present only the world's finest vaudeville.

Instead of having separate lobbies for the State and Capitol, there will be one grand lobby for entrance to either of the Twins having a width of over fifty feet, which will be the largest theatre lobby in the world.

In addition to the theatres there will be eight beautiful store rooms facing on the main street and forty-five spacious offices on the second and third floors, all with outside windows and so arranged that they can be rented singly or en suite.

In the basement there will be bowling alleys, billard and pool parlors and a barber shop.

Ground was broken for this gigantic structure on January 15th, and even though the contractors encountered some ten thousand square yards of blue rock which had to be blasted in excavating, causing considerable delay, the building will be completed and opened by October 1st, which establishes a new record for rapid contruction.

On May 19th, Gov. Edward I. Edwards, of New Jersey officiated at the cornerstone laying of the "Twins," which ceremony took on the form of a huge celebration for the entire eastern section of the State. Many of the mayors and prominent city officials of every town of consequence in Hudson Country attended this celebration. This marked the second occasion that a Governor of New Jersey ever laid a cornerstone for a theatre, the first being the laying of the cornerstone of the State Theatre, Jersey City by the Governor last Fall.

The State-Capitol Twin Theatres, of which Frank G. Hall is president, were entirely financed through a membership plan, making the theatres practically community owned.

These theatres when completed will be another link in the Hall chain of million dollar theatres.

Percie A. Vivarttas, architect of the State Theatre, Jersey City, is also the architect for the "Twins." This fact is mentioned because architects and theatre-owners from every section of the United States have made it their business to see the many innovations in theatre contruction inaugurated in the State. Architect Vivarttas has also completed plans for the Capitol Theatre another million dollar edifice to be built by Frank G. Hall, on Monticello Ave., Jersey City, ground for which will be broken within the next few weeks and which is to be ready for opening in the early spring.

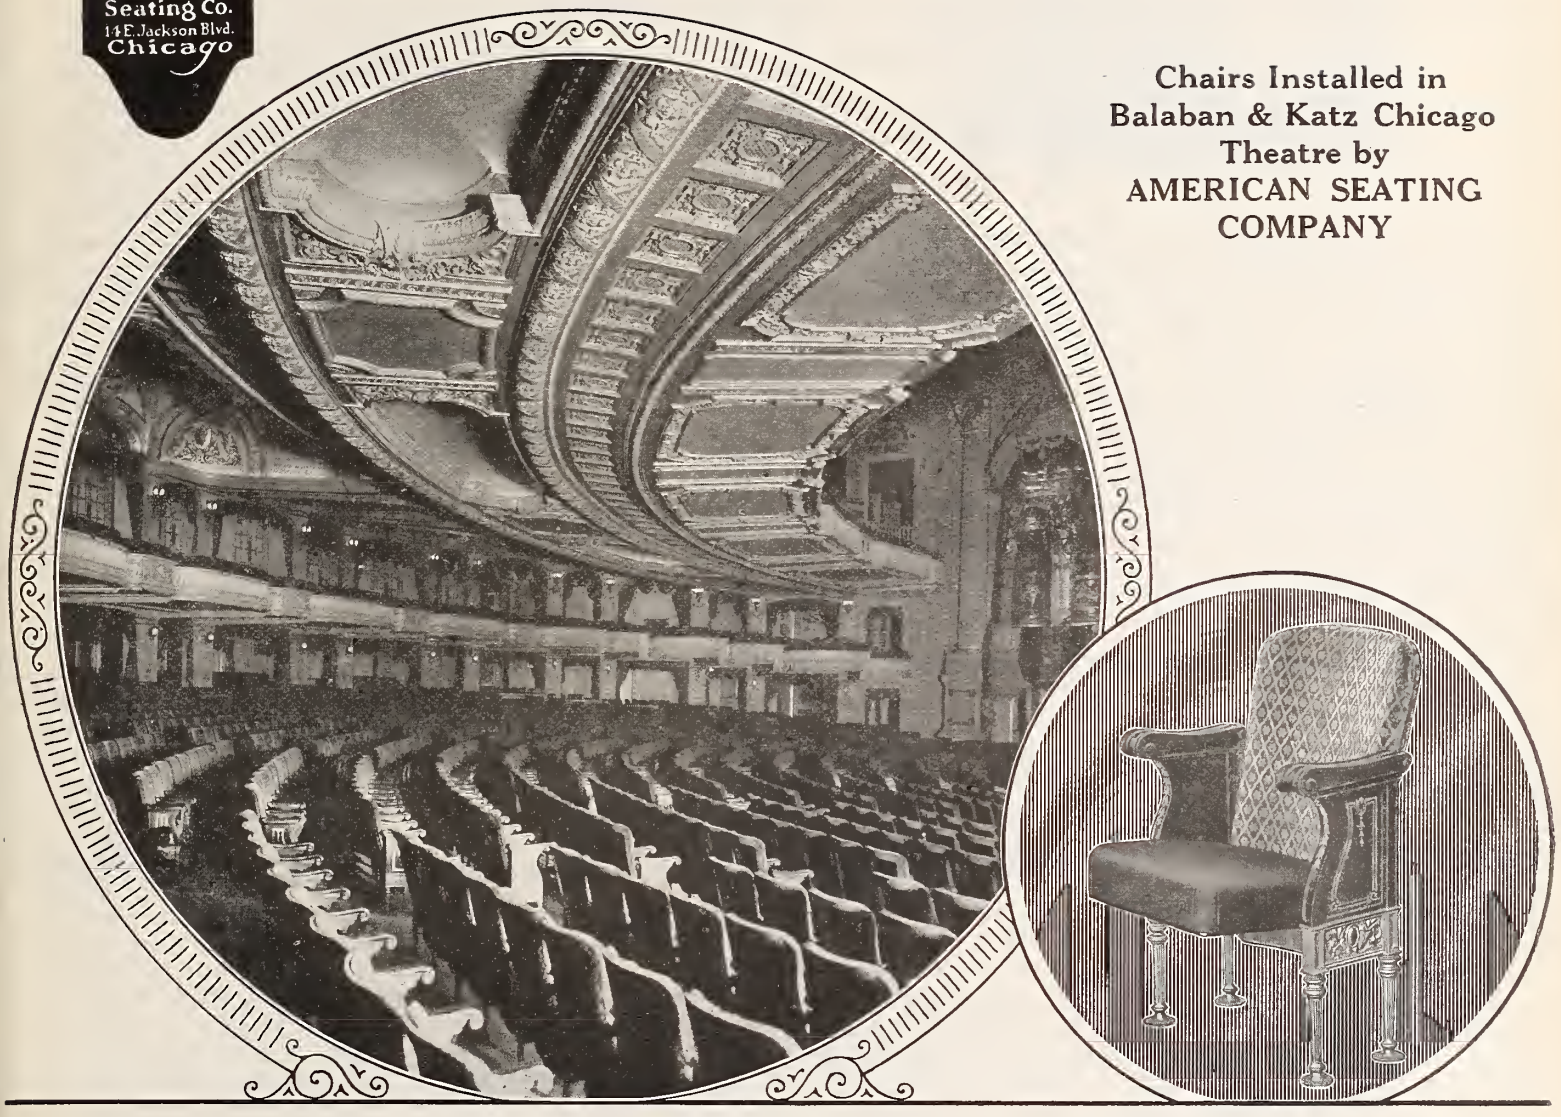
With the Ritz Theatre and the U. S. Theatre also under Mr. Hall's direction in addition to the houses above-mentioned and other million dollar theatres to be built, the Hall circuit is looming up as one of the most powerful chains in the country.

Waterloo, Iowa, Sets New Mark in Theatre Service

The Rialto Theatre has made a new and unique addition to their musical program, i. e., the $1,400,000 Lyradion Concert Grande Phonograph, the first to be installed in the state of Iowa and the third in the U. S. A. In addition to listing the film which was shown during the evening, the new July Victor Phonograph records were also listed on the program and played on the Concert Grande. The following week Brunswick records will be played and following this, time will be divided between Columbia, Edison and Okeh current releases. The plan works out something like this: Each week as the current releases are played, anyone desiring any particular record played need only check name and number of the record on the program and hand the program to the usher on the way out. The management of the Rialto will forward these reservations to the local record company representative where the reservations will be given preference. Briefly, it means that the theatre patrons are going to have an opportunity of hearing at every performance, the musical creations of the world's greatest —operative, concert and popular—the world's best bands and the best orchestra selections.



Washington Dealers Report Good Business

Local equipment dealers all report good business, many new non theatrical customers, churches, colleges, schools, etc. being recent purchasers. It is announced that the United States Navy recently purchased 14 Motiograph projectors from Mr. Claflin while the University of Maryland, the oldest university in the South, and the greatest State university in the middle Atlantic area, has purchased one Motiograph from the Claflin agency for use at the main plant at College Park, Md., a suburb of Washington. Nineteen small type semi-portable projectors and 5 stereographs were recent sales of the Claflin equipment house to other customers in this territory.—Knappen

In America's Foremost Theatres

THE public-wise manager knows that an audience comfortably seated is half won. He knows, too, that with the other elements of attraction more or less evenly balanced, the more comfortable seats of one theatre will easily swing the decision of "where to go" in its favor. Seating that was tolerated five and ten years ago is endured under protest now or altogether avoided.

Our Theatre Engineering Seating Department will be glad to consult with any theatre owner or manager on new installations or renewal of old. We can show you without obligation how your theatre can "cheat old age" and revive its youth for further years of service.

Rotary Shutter

Figure 26 shows a typical rotary shutter which is placed in front of the objective lens and adjusted so as to cut off the light from the screen during the period that the film is in motion. The blade is made of such a width that the film starts to move before the light beam is entirely cut off and the blade also starts to uncover the beam before the film is stopped. The period during which the stationary film is being covered and uncovered is thus reduced to a minimum; the small amount of light reaching the screen during the short period of exposed film movement is not noticed.

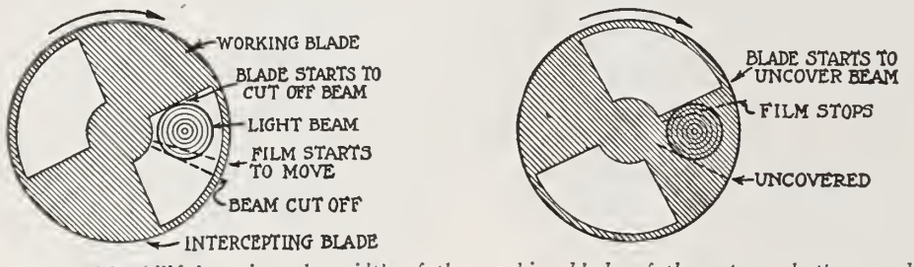

Fig. 26—With skillful setting, the width of the working blade of the rotary shutter can be reduced so that the film starts to move before the beam is entirely covered, and the blade starts to uncover before the film movement has stopped

Interruption of the light sixteen times per second would result in pronounced flicker, therefore one or two blades are provided in addition to the working or "travel" blade that cuts off the light during the film movement. These intercepting or "flicker" blades can by skillful design be made narrower than the working blade and thus the loss of light may be reduced. The number of blades required depends on the brightness of the screen. At ordinary intensities of screen illumination a two-blade shutter interrupting the light thirty-two times per second at normal projection speed eliminates flicker; but with a very bright screen a three-blade shutter interrupting the light forty-eight times per second is required. The two-blade shutter can in most cases be employed with Mazda lamps.

It is of interest to note that due to the heat storing capacity of the heavy filament wire used for mazda motion picture lamps, the illumination produced by the lamps does not show a cyclic variation on alternating current; the illumination is steady even on 25-cycle circuits and the choice of shutters is therefore not affected by any possible stroboscopic effects.

Since the angular width of the working blade is determined by the ratio of time of film movement to the stationary period, the shutter transmission varies with the intermittent ratio as well as with the size of the objective lens, or the width of the light beam. For best efficiency the shutter should be placed where the beam diameter is smallest. With the condenser spacings used in mazda lamp systems the light beam emerging from the objective lens is smallest in diameter at the lens, so that the narrowest blades can be used when the shutter is placed as close as practicable to the lens holder.

The rotary shutters ordinarily employed have a transmission of about 50 to 55 per cent for the two-blade type and from 40 to 45 per cent for the three-blade type. Successful designs of the former are in use having a transmission of 60 per cent for a No. 2 lens. Skillful narrowing of the blades and their perforation with small holes are methods employed to obtain the higher transmission values. If carried too far with the working blade a "travel" ghost is noticeable on the film titles. Whatever additional light is obtained by such modification of the intercepting blade without having flicker appear on the screen is probably a clear gain, but any light received on the screen through the moving film is a detriment rather than an advantage. A third and interesting means of reducing shutter losses is the use of two disks rotating in opposite directions; the periods of covering and uncovering the beam are thus reduced approximately one-third*, but such shutters require very careful setting and special attention to the mechanism for their operation.

It should be noted that wherever data are given in this bulletin showing the transmission of light through various optical systems they apply for the beam unobstructed by a shutter.

NATIONAL ANTI-MISFRAME LEAGUE PLEDGE

AS a motion picture projectionist who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the projection-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in reasonably good condition, according to conditions of film when received. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother projectionists and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

sitive silver emulsion on one side or two coatings, one on each side. The negative generally used in our work is of the single strip variety with the adjacent images in pairs, one over the other, so that throughout the length of the negative the red picture alternates with the green value picture. The pictures at this stage are in black to gray silver and without color, the color being represented in the values of the amount of silver deposited. The printing machine first prints all of the red value pictures in close succession on the positive, this being done by a device that feeds the negative pictures two areas and the positive one area. The second set of pictures, representing the green-blue ones, are next printd exactly over the red pictures. This work is kept accurate to a very high degree so that the pictures in projection show no offset within the limits of the defining power of the projection lenses. This is a point of very great practical importance, for inaccurate registration of the pictures, which should have a persistent fringe of color, would not only mar the picture but would probably cause eye discomfort to the spectators.

Developing the Films

The positive film is then developed, fixed and washed, after which it is passed through a bath which bleaches or oxidizes the silver so that the film apparently contains no image. The film is then dried. This clearing process is a very necessary step in the conversion of the black opaque silver image into a transparent dye image, the technical term of which is dye-toning. During the treatment in the oxidizing bath the gelatine acquires a curious and valuable property of absorbing certain kinds of dye in proportion to the amount of silver in the image and of holding the dye so that it is not washed out by the subsequent immerging of the film in water for clearing the film of any stains. The particular process used produces unusually clear whites, a valuable function in this kind of work.

Coloring the Films

This is performed in a special machine after the film has been dried. The film passes over baths containing dye, and the entire surface of the gelatine is permitted to touch the dye bath, but due to the previous treatment the dye is absorbed only where the silver previously occupied the gelatine. In this same machine the film is dried and as it emerges is ready for titling and joining into full reels. It does not stop anywhere in its course through the machine and may be examined by daylight at any point in its journey.

Results

Color is physiological and depends on the human element, or the state of one's eyes, or it may be altered by his physical condition. All of us are color blind to some extent, the degree depending on our training. For the same reason, the lower races of man, not appreciating tints and delicate mixtures, select the most gaudy colors for adornment. The same statements hold good in the public showing of our films. The newspaper critics get into print and we learn to know what they like. Others do not get such publicity, but we learn what they think by one means or another. It is surprising. I could give dozens of examples, but just two of wide variety will do. The writer of technical articles and a student of color photography on one of our trade papers says: "We favor bright, vivid colors." While another writer on the New York "Times" says: "And only last week the Prizma Company revealed its best work of the year, a screen version of 'Heida' in colors, which had a chromatic quality far superior to the same company's earlier attempt with Whittier's 'In School Days,'" referring to a three-reel designed to carry soft pastel shades, with no vivid coloring whatever, while the picture, "In School Days," was vivid with color.

Therefore, if the particular picture that you are witnessing jars you in any way, remember your neighbor sees it with another pair of eyes and most likely, differently.

Standardization Needed

If the pictures of the future are to be in color, I hope you will endeavor to standardize the curtain and the source of light—both of which should be kept as nearly as you can to a creamy white, the main variants in this country being the carbons used in the projector which gives tones from yellow to blue and the curtains which show about the same range. These changes act as a tint over the entire film and may make the picture appear either warm or cold.

Dear Editor:

I am writing you just a short letter desiring to state that as a new member of the League, I can hardly understand why I didn't join sooner as I wouldn't feel right to be a non-member now.

I am glad to say that we will soon have as good, if not better, equipment as can be found in this vicinity.

Today we received notice that our generator set was at the freight office. So in very short order we will be projecting pictures from our new booth with practically all new equipment, except the machines which are in excellent condition.

In the May 20th issue of the NEWS we have a letter from Brother D. F. Glancy, Colonial theatre, Jasper, Ala., in which he states that the tin foil used on films for Behlen Signal Warning has a tendency to shorten the life of the sprocket hole on the portion of the film on which it is placed. I beg to differ with him as we have used the Behlen Signal Warning for quite some time and find it is the best device for perfect warning we could obtain. We have also received films that already have had tin foil on and have not been able to detect any defect in the sprocket holes caused from the tin foil. Planning for only one warning for each reel, I believe it is the next best thing to do, to write out your cues on paper but one of many of the advantages of using Behlen Signal Warning is that, besides using it for a "four foot" signal, you can easily, by replacing a strip of tin foil, say ten feet from the end, use it as a warning to light the other light and have a nice white round spot on the aperture for your change over.

In a lot of cases the trouble with using the cues sent by the exchanges is that they have gone through the hands of different projectionists, the end of the reels become short and you will find they are incorrect.

Thanking you for the opportunity of joining the N. A. M. L., I will close.

Very truly yours,
THOMAS H. CRAVEN,
Assistant Projectionist Chaplain's Office, Quantico, Va.

Dear Sirs:

Been intending doing this for about three years, that is, joining your league. Am enclosing 25 cents for button; also send labels, etc. More later.

This is a good time to think it over—

In time of peace prepare for war—in summer plan for winter business—look over your theatre for ways it can be brought up-to-date in presentations. Have you considered how much beautiful lighting effects are used in modern photoplay houses? Practically every house built today makes light an important feature—they invest in apparatus to give them the widest variety of marvelous light blendings.

The Major System of Light Control is used in the majority of the finest theatres everywhere. It is of unit construction fitting every size house, and can be installed without closing the house for a single day. It is pre-selective, remote control, extended remote control, flashless, safe in every particular, reduces fire and panic hazard and is simple to operate. No other switchboard or control has the Major advantages.

Convention Held by Theatre Equipment Dealers to Found National Organization

The motion picture supply dealers and distributors as a unit are now joining the ranks of the progressive, as they are holding a convention at the Claypool Hotel, Indianapolis, Ind., July 13, 14 and 15. This marks the first national step taken by this division of the motion picture industry to organize and put the theatre equipment and supply business on a thoroughly substantial basis. The movement is to be highly commended.

The proposed Motion Picture Men's Association was first conceived by a few dealers in Cleveland, Ohio, as a local organization. However, the idea of confining this organization to local members was soon abandoned as it was found that dealers and distributors from all over the United States were anxious to join. The original meeting was therefore postponed a month and is now materializing at Indianapolis, Ind.

The organization has for its foundation the basic fundamentals essential for the successful and healthy growth of every great industry. This movement is another important element in the general organization of the motion picture industry.

A letter sent out to all those interested in theatre equipment by the special committee of the Motion Picture Equipment Men's Association of America reads in part as follows:

"We have been designated as a special committee to invite and impress upon you the importance of having you attend a national meeting of motion picture dealers, to be held at Indianapolis, Ind., July 13, 14 and 15.

"It doesn't make any difference what machine or equipment you handle, no one has an ax to grind. Let's simply get acquainted with each other and try to put our end of the industry on a better basis and start out this fall to make it a banner year. If you cannot attend please write and express your approval or disapproval.

"When the meeting is in order, the following are a few of the matters that will be discussed and are problems we are all up against from time to time. If there are any more you think of, jot it down or prepare a paper to read at the meeting.

1. Credits.
2. Establish, if possible, a scale of allowance on used equipment.
3. The question of selling on cash or time basis and whether the consumer should pay the carrying charge on long term paper financing the same as automobile accounts are handled
4. After this organization is effected, without a doubt arrangements can be made with a discounting company for handling long term paper which would stimulate our business in general.
5. The film exchanges have had their organizations and district boards of trade and they have worked very effectively.
6. Endeavor to bring pressure in an effort to obtain support of Will D. Hays, who has recently been appointed to better the conditions of the motion picture industry in general. We believe that we supply and equipment men are as much entitled to this support as other branches of the industry.
7. It may be advisable to include in our membership dealers and distributors of all motion picture apparatus and supplies, including those who are specializing in the non-theatrical field.
8. To prevail upon the manufacturers to discontinue the practice of selling direct.
9. To endeavor to obtain closer co-operation from manufacturers of all equipment and accessories.
10. Of quoting educational discounts and the elimination of other practices that have worked a hardship on us in the past.
11. The matter of supporting manufacturers who will give us their undivided support.
12. The organizing and electing of officers of each city or locality so that neighboring competitors can get together and discuss matters in their local territories. All local organizations to be affiliated with the national organization, which will send their own delegates to the national meetings.

",One thousand and one other advantages you can think of and have the privilege of expressing yourself at this meeting.

"Come on boys, don't hold out to see what the rest do but let's get together and put it over. A few of us boys are digging down in our pockets to get this started with a hope it will help us all. The automobile, electrical and many other lines were considered piker lines of business before their organizations were effected. No use kidding ourselves forever, let's look it straight in the face and correct our mistakes.

"A great number of firms associated with the motion picture equipment business have already expressed a willingness to attend this meeting, and we are assured that we will have one or more representatives from the following cities: Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, St. Loius, Boston, New Haven, Conn.; San Francisco, Cal.; Kansas City, Mo.; Dallas, Texas; Seattle, Wash.; Portland, Ore.; Buffalo, N. Y.; New York City, Los Angeles, Cal.; Detroit, Mich.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; Philadelphia. Pa.; Atlanta, Ga.; Toledo, Ohio; Cincinnati, Ohio; Cleveland, Ohio, and Columbus, Ohio.

"Yours very truly,

"Special Committee Motion Picture Men's Association.

"Leo E. Dwyer, Chairman."

A. C. KARSKI, manager of the "Royal Theatre," one of the largest resident section motion picture houses in San Francisco, recently spent $10,000 in fixing up that theatre. In the loge section 125 seats with extra fine velour plush were added and the entire interior of the house was repainted. "I am glad I did this," said Manager Karski, "because I feel as if it pays to keep your house always looking neat and clean. I can see that the people appreciate this cleanliness and that if I would not spend what I did to keep the 'Royal' in order, I feel as if trade would have been lost.

"A clean looking motion picture house always brings people to its doors," added Mr. Karski, "and keeps one from reducing the price of admission. In speaking of admission prices, I wish to emphasize the fact I do not believe it pays to lower them because when one does the public thinks something too cheap of no value is being offered. Consequently I am thoroughly convinced if one offers a good program, especially in a neighborhood house, good prices can be obtained where a commendable program is offered. I have learned this from experience."—Gross.

Circulates Iced Washed Air Throughout House

The Orpheum Theatre at Okmulgee, Okla. has installed a new cooling system that cools. A giant blower and twenty oscillating fans will circulate iced washed air throughout the house. The system will use about 500 pounds of ice daily and the big blower will force the cool air through the mushroom ducts in the floor. A six foot exhaust fan will be placed on either side of it to assist in the air distribution.—Noble.

The Elmwood, Buffalo, will not close during the installation of the new Wurlitzer unit orchestra organ, as at first announced. Shows will continue during the installation. The orchestra will be dispensed with when the big organ is ready.—Taylor

"If You Believe It, It's So"

Paramount—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS picture follows the style of "The Miracle Man" enough to be called a companion story, even though it lacks the qualities which made the Tucker play a memorable achievement. The fine humanity, the spiritual flavor, the powerful love theme, the fitting symbols which were embodied in Frank Packard's tale are just merely approached here.

It is a picture of a crook's regeneration—with the crook reforming too early to make his motive entirely convincing. True he has conflict of soul and he sees the light when he meets a patriarch whose simplicity and faith give the story a humanness. He has picked the old gentleman's pocket in the Grand Central terminal. It is a tremendous shock to the traveler from the country, not only because it disillusions his trust in human nature, but because the theft means his life savings. The pickpocket gives him back his purse and straightway his reformation is in sight. Naturally much of the anticipated suspense is destroyed.

You take interest, thereafter, in watching his reactions to country life and the appeal of romance. There is no conflict in winning the girl—the daughter of a gentlemanly drunkard, and very little physical action is expended beyond a healthy melee when the crook beats up the bartender for insulting the girl's father. The chief interest from this point centers upon the hero's fight to save the villagers from being cheated by a mercenary charlatan—a figure played with broad touches of humor by Theodore Roberts, who has grown, seemingly, a full crop of flowing whiskers, and who masquerades as an itinerant preacher. These crooks have known each other a long time, and the older one cannot understand the processes of reformation working in the young man's mind.

The picture entertains through its intimate touches—showing the raising of the funds by the pseudo pastor, and the attempts of a rural sheriff to graft money away from the erstwhile pickpocket. The city comes in for its customary panning in some philosophic subtitles. And a plot developed to show the hero about to be arrested for embezzlement is exceedingly frail. There is no suspense. Yet despite its shortcomings the picture is surefire audience material. The theme of regeneration attends to that. And Thomas Meighan as the genial crook who sees the light, and Theodore Roberts carrying the feature on his shoulders through his unique character portrayal see to it that it is excellently interpreted. Joseph Dowling, the patriarch of "The Miracle Man," is in a similar role here—a vest-pocket edition of a faith healer. Ed Brady and Charles Ogle provide good atmosphere in their respective roles. The heart interest, the humor and the homely touches will put it over.

The Cast

Chick Harris, a crook.....Thomas Meighan
Alvah Morley, a country girl.....Pauline Starke
Ezra Wood, a patriarch.....Joseph Dowling
Sky Blue, a confidence man.....Theodore Roberts

Constable.....Ed Brady

By Perley Poor Sheehan. Scenario by Waldemar Young. Directed by Tom Forman. Photographed by Harry Perry. Produced by Famous Players

The Story—City crook robs aged countryman, but restores money after hearing hard luck story. Decides to reform in distant town and finally becomes a real estate agent. Meets girl and falls in love with her and frustrates a counterfeiter who has raised a large sum of money. The girl is convinced of young man's sincerity and reciprocates his love.

Classification—Crook story with a dash of human interest and much spiritual flavor after style of "Miracle Man." Deals with crook's reformation.

Production Highlights—Able direction. Heart interest of story. Fine work of cast, particularly that of Dowling, Meighan and Roberts.

Exploitation Angles—Since this is similar to "The Miracle Man" in theme you might dwell upon its highlights of pathos and heart interest. Tell them that the star and his company have been wisely selected. Use the title for a teaser campaign, advising your patrons that if they believe hard enough things are sure to turn out just as they conceived them. Tie up with schools and uplift societies and the clergy.

Drawing Power—This being a crook story of redemption, it is sure to be favorably received. Mentioning the cast will draw a crowd. Will go best in large houses, although heart interest of theme carries universal appeal.

"Her Majesty"

Playgoers Pictures, Inc.—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

THIS is a harmless bit of filmplay which serves to bring back to the screen Mollie King, one of our old shadow stage favorites. Mollie appears in the dual role of twin girls and does some very satisfactory work. She is very easy to look at, wears some stunning gowns and exhibits real emotional ability in a number of dramatic scenes. The story revolves around the romance of two girls, both in love with the same man. This figure played by Creighton Hale, who is not called upon for much but to register "sweetness." Rose Tapley is adequate as the snobbish aunt and Jerome Lawler is a good type as "Slick" Harry. The remainder of the cast is satisfactory.

The story opens in the country on the Widow Canfield's farm, where Ted Harper, our hero, meets Susan. There's some hokum and padding in the scenes between these two which should be edited to speed up the action. The hokum deals with a lot of fairy prince and princess stuff. The snob sister, Rosalie, visits the farm. Our hero sees her in some gladsome raiment, thinks she is Susan and right there falls in love. The Widow Canfield dies and Susan is forced to go to the city. Arriving there she is lured to a boarding house where there are some attempted attacks by the boarding house mistress' son. These scenes should be tamed down a bit. Susan finally finds herself in the home of her sister, where she is "dressed up" and again meets Ted, who immediately proposes to her and plans are made for an elopement. Slick Harry also arranges a Hallowe'en party with Rosalie. Susan mistakes Harry's car for that which Ted promised to send. She goes to Harry's party, but escapes and gets back to the house party. Rosalie soon returns also, after having gone through some stormy scenes in which Harry's true character is brought to light. A Hallowe'en party serves to introduce the two sisters, the introduction being a distinct surprise to all concerned as the twin idea has not been suspected by anyone.

The picture has a number of scenes that are far-stretched and wildly imaginative. Mollie's work in the dual role is the principal thing to play up in this one. All in all it's just an average program picture. The star wears a number of stunning gowns during the action of the piece which may please the feminine contingent. The underworld types have been well selected. Don't use too many superlatives on "Her Majesty."

The Cast

Rosalie.....Mollie King
Susan, her sister.....Mollie King
Ted Harper.....Creighton Hale
Aunt Worthington.....Rose Tapley
Wilfred Parkington.....Neville Percy
"Slick" Harry.....Jerome Lawler

By H. Thompson Rich. Directed by George Irving. Photographed by W. Arthur. Distributed by Associated Exhibitors through Pathe exchanges.

The Story—Deals with the romance of orphaned twin girls, who, separated in childhood, grow up in decidedly different environments. One, having lived in the country, becomes a wholesome, nature-loving woman. The other becomes a snob. The girls, however, are so alike in appearance, that even their respective suitors are not always able to tell them apart and many "situations" develop from this fact. However, in the end the girl from the country, having gone to the city, wins the hero who had been sought by the snobbish sister and all ends well.

Classification—A society comedy drama which serves to bring back Mollie King, a former favorite of the films.

Production Highlights—Miss King's work in the dual role. The settings, both interior and exterior. Good photography. The Hallowe'en party. The attempted attack on Susan by the boarding house mistress's son. The photographic shots showing the sisters on the screen at the same time. The gowns worn by Miss King in the role of the society girl. The underworld types.

Exploitation Angles—The star. Her gowns. The Hallowe'en angle. Might arrange a party for twins, inviting them to a special showing free. Tie up with your newspaper on this.

Drawing Power—Suitable for second class downtown house, neighborhood theatres and the smaller towns.

"My Dad"

Film Booking Offices—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

THERE is no particular difference between "My Dad" and other of the deluge of Canadian Northwest films which have been flooding the market, except that it is not as strong as many of its competitors. It incorporates the ever present character known as the factor of the fur trading post, the fur trappers and others habitually found in this class of production. There is a vein of sentiment that deviates a trifle in that the young hero is a loyal devotee of his father and mother and seeks to clear the family name, which is clouded unjustly and untruthfully. Most of the production being exteriors, the scenic value is good, and the photography pleasant to witness, though the snow covered trails.

Rin-Tin-Tin, an intelligent canine seen recently in other similar productions, is the best actor in the cast. However, the cut and dried melodrama does not demand any extraordinary amount of histrionic ability from the human element. There is a splendid fight scene.

"My Dad" is not a picture deserving of severe adverse criticism, nor one to provoke enthusiastic recommendation. It is commonplace, telling a simple story of the Northwest and would please best during summer's heat, on account of the snowstorm scenes and views of a frozen land. It has been very poorly directed, therefore is lacking in punch, but ought to satisfy patrons of neighborhood houses where the best is not in demand.

The Cast

Tom O'Day.....Johnnie Walker
Barry O'Day.....Wilbur Higby
Mrs. O'Day.....Mary Redmond
Dawn.....Ruth Clifford
La Due.....Les Bates
Rin-tin-tin.....By Himself

Story by Walter Richard Hall. Scenario by Cliff Smith. Photographed by John H. Thompson.

The Story—Tom O'Day, a dutiful son, resides with his parents in the Canadian Northwest. His father lives under the domination of the Post Factor, the reason a mystery to Tom. The Factor's step-daughter responds to Tom's clean affection, but is warned by her lustful step-father to discourage Tom's advances. Failing, the Factor exposes Tom's father as murderer of a man killed in a resort brawl many years before. Tom sets out to clear his father, who believes himself guilty, and is intercepted by thugs in the employ of the Factor, who really did the killing. Tom survives an unfair fight and returns with evidence to clear his father, convict the guilty man, and thereafter win the girl.

Classification — Melodrama of Canadian Northwest locale. Time, mid-winter.

Production Highlights — Great fight scene when faithful dog attacks man who has almost finished his brave master. Cut back to a poker game years before, when man is murdered, and a slumbering unfortunate made to wake up finding evidence of the killing in his own hands.

Exploitation Angles—Use of dog, representing Rin-Tin-Tin, the canine actor, and combine with advertising of comforts for dwellers in the frozen countries.

Drawing Power—While Johnnie Walker is not known as star of dramatic features, his name is best known to picture public of any in the cast. Will draw best where this kind of melodrama is popular.

"Always the Woman"

Compson-Goldwyn—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

HERE is a picture which is difficult to catalogue. Trading on the popularity of the desert story with its Oriental passion and intrigue, it pretends to tell something of sheik love with all the customary trimmings, but it soon becomes hopelessly absurd—so much so that one cannot take it seriously. Its main theme revolves around the reincarnation formula with an Egyptian, traveling steerage, suggesting to a vaudeville dancer that she was once a queen of the Nile, a thousand years ago. He also suggests that the little group of personages which are steaming toward the Orient are only modern duplicates of a set of characters who expressed life in the ancient day. Thus it is made plain to her which man to accept and which one to avoid.

These cut-backs are brought forth on the ship. The story is so topsy-turvy that one cannot make head or tail of it. What is discernible is the fact that an Egyptian prince is bent upon winning her by fair means or foul. And once they reach port a caravan is started for the interior so that the reincarnated girl may find her treasure. There is plenty of intrigue—all of which is so fantastic that it seems like wild fiction. The wealthy globe-trotter is eliminated and a regenerated dope fiend comes to the rescue of the girl in the nick of time. When the tomb is reached the bad men perish along with the dopester's flirtatious wife. And what do you think is the heroine's reward? Ancient treasure? No. Just atonement.

There is an attempt to suggest a note of mystery throughout but the picture seldom succeeds in reaching the mark. There are scenes which are picturesque and the offering at all times provides first rate atmosphere. One of the drawbacks of the story is the inability to follow it and if the spectator is a bit late he will wonder what it is all about. The idea should have been treated less seriously. If a dash of burlesque had been added to show up the sheik stuff which is flooding the screen, the feature would have hit the bull's eye. Betty Compson has given herself too much latitude, a natural thing since it is her production. She only gives fleeting glimpses of her "Miracle Man" talent. Macey Harlam is the truest type in this story by Perley Poore Sheehan.

The Cast

Celia Thaxter.....Betty Compson
Boone.....Emory Johnson
Mrs. Boone.....Doris Pawn
Reginald Stanhope.....Gerald Pring
Mahmud.....Richard Rosson
Vaudeville Manager.....Arthur Delmore
Kelim Pasha.....Percy Harlam

By Perley Poore Sheehan. Directed by Arthur Rosson. Produced by Betty Compson Productions. Released by Goldwyn.

The Story—Vaudeville dancer traveling to Orient gives specialty on ship which attracts attention of Egyptian passenger who steals up from steerage. He informs her that she is reincarnated personality of ancient queen of the Nile. An Egyptian prince and a wealthy globe-trotter also seek her favor. When they reach land a caravan is started for the desert so that the girl may find her treasures of an ancient day. She finds atonement. An American fellow passenger is regenerated and triumphs over the Egyptians in winning her love.

Classification—Treats of Oriental love and mystery with the theme slightly suggesting reincarnation. Very fantastic and improbable.

Production Highlights — The picturesque mounting. The atmosphere. The scenes when the hero triumphs over the Egyptians. The able character work of Macey Harlam.

Exploitation Angles—As this appears to be a day when the sheik type of story is popular you might trade upon the popularity by featuring the picture as filled with Oriental passion, mystery and intrigue. Play up Betty Compson, telling that she gives a good performance. The picture suggests a colorful prologue with Oriental dancing featured. Use such music as Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Song of India." Your lobby can be appropriately decorated.

"Daring Danger"

American Releasing Corporatiaon—5,000 Feet

(Reviewed by Eugene Carlton)

JUST about everything that a good Western needs, nothing new in the way of plot, but directed in such a manner as to make it a good drawing card—that is the summarization of the merits of "Daring Danger," in which Pete Morrison does some of his best work.

With a rough riding hero, a pretty girl and villain in the cast, what does the average patron of Westerns care for plot? This fact probably has been realized long ago by the majority of directors and the above mentioned production is a unique example of good workmanship on an old basis for a plot.

When cattle rustlers menace a community and a two-fisted hero, who is deeply in love with a girl, is called upon to put a termination to the actions of the rustlers, the natural interest in forthcoming results is predominating. But when the leader of the band of rustlers almost wins the hero's girl during the former's absence, then the barometer of interest rises a few degrees.

A series of narrow escapes, followed by a complete victory over the villainous band of outlaws by the hero, brings about the inevitable marriage of hero and heroine, but there are many minor features which lend a stamp of approval to the picture. The devoted companionship between the hero and an unusually intelligent horse, some realistic fistic encounters, and lovemaking that would arouse the wrath of Romeo all combine to make a production that usually goes over big with the Western fans.

The Cast

Cal Horton.....Pete Morrison
Ethel Stanton.....Esther Ralston
Bill Stanton.....Bill Pyno
Steve Harris.....Lou Meehan
Bull Weaver.....Bob Flemming

The Story—Hero, a rough riding knight of the plains who is about to marry heroine, is called upon by government to put to flight a band of cattle rustlers. During his absence, leader of band, who poses as a church member, tries to win the heroine as his bride, but fails, and hero, after series of narrow escapes, captures leader and the band. Hero receives a reward from the government and wins the girl.

Classification—A western drama, containing melodrama and a love story, as well as human interest.

Production Highlights—Scene where hero escapes from river as he is about to go over falls; fistic encounter with rustlers and several other narrow escapes.

Exploitation Angles—Play up physical thrills in the production. Catch lines, "In her heart she loved him—to the world she despised him" and "He believed in the Almighty and cast aside his girl and left home to do right," should go well in copy of advertising.

Drawing Power—Wherever patrons prefer western pictures this one should go over good.

"In the Name of the Law"

Emory Johnson Production-F. B. O.—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THEY have tacked a magnetic, seat-selling title to this picture and with the proper exploitation certain to be given it by those exhibitors who believe in advertising, there is no reason why R-C or F. B. O. should feel worried over the returns. It is a story of home life with a policeman as the hero in place of the usual man of business. And this cop is one idolized by the neighbors on his beat. That policemen possess sentiment and feeling and are not the stern minions of the law usually represented on the screen is brought forth here with emphasis placed upon the heart throb. That the picture is unduly stressed with sentiment and pathos at times does not discredit it.

The only fault which we found with it is the rather arbitrary leaning of the director in shaping a melodramatic finish—a result which reveals the characters as not over blessed with imagination. The story starts off with the policeman and his happy family—a poor, but proud Irish household. There are no recreant children and the parents are not over indulgent. Naturally you will ask—where does the sentiment enter? Well it arrives in the intimate details of the home and in the later sequences showing a court-room scene. Coincidence somewhat destroys the realities here because one of the cop's sons is defending the other on trial for robbery and murder. The young lawyer went to college against his father's advice and found himself accused of theft. But the education served its purpose in freeing the other youth. The lawyer's address to the jury in summing up is too eloquent. He deals in sentimental generalities and before you know he has exploded a bombshell in the way of direct evidence which cleared his brother. The policeman had wounded the boy, who through a trick of fate, was in the immediate vicinity of the bank when the murder and robbery occurred.

The court-room scene is an interesting one and carries suspense. There is a modern touch involved. It shows a mixed jury and the officials from the judge down to the attendant look like the real article. Emory Johnson has certainly been in a court-room, which is more than can be said for many of his contemporaries. There is a dash of convenient melodrama when the real culprit kills himself in court. This is finding a legal solution with a vengeance. The criminal had loaned some money to the adopted sister of the boys and attempted to exact payment through giving expression to lustful desire. It is her evidence which clarifies the atmosphere. The action travels over a score of years showing as it does the children grown into maturity. The policeman has been rewarded and the interior of his home suggests that the city which employs him has treated him properly.

We wish, however, there had been more intimate detail of police life in the station house and on the beat. The story possesses so much possibilities that the author could have introduced a real criminal with his reformation effected by the benevolent cop. However it touches the heart strings and gives the policeman a chance to be characterized as something else than a dread minion of the law. Ralph Lewis makes a life-like individual of him—a simple, honest bluecoat. The best performance is contributed by Johnnie Walker as the youth on trial. You who recall Ben Alexander, the child wonder of some early Griffiths, will be surprised to discover him growing up. He plays one of the children in the fore part of the picture. "In the Name of the Law" is well staged.

The Cast

Patrick O'Hara.....Ralph Lewis
Mrs. O'Hara.....Claire McDowell
Mary (at the age of six years).....Josephine Adair
Mary (at the age of eighteen years).....Ella Hall
Harry O'Hara (at the age of nine years).....Benny Alexander

Johnny O'Hara (at the age of twenty years).....Johnnie Walker
Mr. Lucus.....Dick Morris

By Emilie Johnson. Directed by Emory Johnson. Produced by Emory Johnson. Released by F. B. O.

The Story—Treats of family life of policeman who raises his children to respect the law and honor the home. Older boy goes to college and is involved in theft of which he is innocent, while younger boy works in bank. A robbery occurs followed by a murder, and youth is seriously wounded by his policeman father. He is tried upon circumstantial evidence, but his brother, a lawyer, frees him.

Classification—Heart interest story of family life, the head of the household being a policeman. Develops sentiment and a dash of melodrama involving a court-room scene.

Production Highlights—The able acting of Ralph Lewis and Johnnie Walker. The intimate touches of the policeman's home during early youth of children. The scene when the father shoots his own son. The dramatic court-room scene.

Exploitation Angles—Considerable advertising ideas are being used for this feature. The paper is attractive. Get it. Erect a platform in proximity to theatre with a twenty-four sheet prominently displayed on billboard back of it. Have a quartette dressed in policeman uniforms sing numbers at appointed hours. Tie-up with police department. Run feature stories of traffic cops who are on beat on your main street. Use them to exploit the feature. And run pictures of them for your local papers. A prologue may introduce the same quartette.

Drawing Power—Title big enough to attract anywhere. Should go well in all cities where police power is dominant. Good for week run or longer.

"The Ladder Jinx"

Vitagraph—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

THIS second Jess Robbins production is essentially one of action. That is its biggest asset. The story is a wild one, somewhat drawn out and at time ludicrous, but, withal that, it's entertaining, and inasmuch as it has been made for fun purposes only, one can overlook the impossible parts.

The story deals with the terrible time visited upon a new bank cashier who walks under a ladder and is jinxed. The action is supposed to happen in one afternoon, evening and early morning of the next day, and things sure do happen in that time for the poor cashier. One might say that he has the time of his life. Right out of the bucket he spills a drawer filled with money, then an auto comes along as he is on the way to a party and splashes mud all over his soup and fish front. He goes back to walk under the ladder and "unjinx" himself and is accused of robbing a house because he happens to be at the bottom of the ladder just as the owner comes out and the thief is making his way through the bushes. He keeps his bride-to-be waiting so long that when he does arrive she breaks the engagement, and the pater familias, learning that his intended son-in-law has just broken into a house, kicks him out of the home. Some yeggs try to rob a bank. The hero, happening by at the time, is accused of the "job." And so it goes. The jinx ever pursues our hero.

It all ends happily and there is a novel finale. We are given a shot of the hero and heroine and what is supposed to be a minister. It looks like the marriage ceremony is being performed. Then we are given a full view of the screen and we see the couple giving their order over a quick lunch counter. There are some good characterizations contributed by Edward Horton as Arthur Barnes, cashier; by Tully Marshall as Peter Stalton, by Otis Harlan as the uncle. Margaret Landis is an attractive leading lady. The remainder of the cast is adequate. The direction is satisfactory. The photography is one of the features of the production. This one lends itself to many exploitation ideas. A good orchestra will be able to add much to its entertaining qualities. At any rate, it will keep your audience interested. What more can you expect?

The Cast

Arthur Barnes.....Edward Horton
Helen Wilbur.....Margaret Landis
James Wilbur.....Wilbur Higby
Peter Stalton.....Tully Marshall
Thomas Gridley.....Otis Harlan
Richard Twing.....Colin Kenny
Judge Brown.....Tom McGuire
Officer Murphy.....Will R. Walling
Detective Smith.....Tom Murray

By Edgar Franklin. Directed by Jess Robbins. Scenario by David Kirkland. Photographed by Irving Ries.

The Story—Arthur Barnes has just been appointed successor to the retiring cashier of a bank. He is about to attend a party at which his engagement to the president's daughter is to be announced, when he tells his bride-to-be that that very morning he had walked under a ladder. The bride is superstitious. She demands that he go right back and walk under the ladder again to break the jinx which will surely enter his life. He goes back, walks under the ladder, but the jinx instead of going away, starts an offensive and the poor bank cashier goes through a terrible afternoon and evening, being mixed up in a house robbery, a bank delivery, is thrown out of his sweetheart's home and his engagement broken. Of course it all ends happily.

Classification—A society comedy running six reels when it could be produced better in five. The story is a "wild" one, but the action makes up for the impossible theme.

Production Highlights—The good cast. The meeting of the board of directors of the bank when the retiring cashier tries to put over his nephew for the job. The amusing adventures of the hero who is "jinxed." The trial scene at the end which is rather amusing even if it is impossible. The scenes attendant on the bank robbery in which the president is arrested for the "job." The work of Tully Marshall and Edward Horton. The novel ending.

Exploitation Angles—The superstitions and omens around which the plot revolves offer some good ideas for exploitation. Might offer prizes for the most novel jinx in town. Tie up with the present wave of spirit talk. Get the banks interested. Much of the action takes place in one. Boost this as a fun film with a lot of action. Dress up your lobby with black cats cut from cardboard, witches riding on brooms, etc.

Drawing Power—Should do very well for second class downtown houses and neighborhood theatres. Will fit in fine where you have some strong short subjects.

Reviews of Latest Short Subject Releases

"Friday, the Thirteenth"

(Hal Roach Comedy-Pathe—One Reel)

YOU don't have to look at this title twice to discover that it is based upon the old hard luck superstition. All the familiar tricks are noticeable here from walking under a ladder to spilling salt. Not forgetting the black cat who crosses in front of the superstitious Paul Parrott. He avoids the ladder and the policeman's nose, but gets into a pretty mess when he attempts to lift a horseshoe from under the cop's foot. The sale spilling episode follows—to say nothing of the black cat.

The superstition continues when his girl insists that they be married on Friday, the 13th. The rival swain, appreciating his weakness plants some dynamite in a dummy black cat and brings it to church. The inevitable happens, although the explosion does not prevent the ceremony. There is some amusing incident which closes the picture. It shows Parrott on the dock doing his best to toss over a bag filled with black cats. The gags in this effort are unoriginal, but even through repetition, a few are worth repeating. Put it down as an average comedy.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Dumb Bell"

(Hal Roach-Pollard Comedy—One Reel)

COMEDIES written around the life of a movie actor or director have been used before and it cannot be expected that Snub Pollard would offer anything new in the shape of novel gags. Yet at the same time he gets a lot of fun out of the situations. We see him at the start as a ham actor who is fired by the temperamental director. The big producers arrive on the set and offer Snub the job if he can manage to fire the man with the megaphone. He succeeds in this effort but in assuming the directorship his troubles begin.

Life in a studio presents moments of interest to the spectator. Marie Mosquini plays the role of leading lady in the story and helps considerably in putting over the humor. "The Dumb Bell" is more amusing than some of Pollard's recent efforts and is likely to please those who remain through the entire program.—LAURENCE REID.

"Crime in a Big City"

(Aesop's Fables-Pathe—2/3 Reel)

THE moral of this latest fable which proved that Aesop said a mouthful gives to the world the idea that "those who lay traps for others often get caught by their own bait." The story illustrates how an old farmer goes to the city and his little dog follows him and saves him from scheming crooks and gamblers. Naturally he meets a flapper who cleans out his pockets, but the canine saves his master's property by taking the money from the girl's flapping golashes. The farmer outwits the gamblers in a poker game and escapes to the country. A number of amusing situations are developed from the strip and it is up to the standard achieved in the initial animation. Aesop's illustrated moral will certainly make a lot of the boys watch their step.—LAURENCE REID.

House employees dressed to lend atmosphere, when "A Sailor Made Man," was the attraction at the Palace theatre, Ft. Worth

"Treasure Bound"

(Educational—Two Reels)

SLAP-STICK comedy de luxe. Some of the funniest sub-titles ever. It begins with showing the inventor of a supposed non-explosive gas perfecting his accomplishment, and trying it out by attaching a hose to a mattress, which he pumps full of the composition guaranteed to float anything, any weight, any where. Upon the mattress quietly slumbers the comedian, Lige Conley, who does not awake until the mattress has floated out through the window of the room where he fell asleep. He finds himself floating over the city, in and out of tight places and finally into an alley bedroom, where two negroes are preparing to offset a threatening seven years of hard luck.

The funniest part of the film is after these colored men are introduced and all are intent upon finding the hidden treasure, indicated on a happen-along map. Some of the spoken titles are sure-fire laughs. The use of a lion, a supposed habitant of the cave, increases the comedy and injects a few thrills. The lion, a really vicious looking beast, has not lost the earmarks of the jungle to become a docile, trained motion picture lion. He would frighten a true to life brave explorer and his presence adds decidedly to the entertainment value of the short subject.—LILLIAN GALE.

The Story of the Magnet

(Urban-Science at Home Series—One Reel)

THERE will be many people who see this one of the Science at Home Series, who were not previously informed that the magnet appears in history about 900 B. C., a discovery of the Greeks. True enough, magnets did not hold forth in horseshoe shape at that time, but the principle was laid down, and its progress shown in the footage making up this short film subject. It will likely entertain men more than it will interest women, and should prove a splendid subject for juvenile audiences, especially in schools or children's organizations. This, not because it is a light subject, on the contrary, it is a study of great depth, yet in that it is informative in nature and would fit well with studies of children forging ahead toward high school. There are a great many things most people do not know about magnets told in this film, and its relation to modern construction.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Yellow Face"

(Educational—Two Reels)

ANOTHER of the Sherlock Holmes series, which, if not quite as logical or well worked out as the predecessors, tells an interesting detective yarn about a man, a native of Kent, England, whose happiness is being interrupted. His wife, previously devoted, seems suddenly to have been drawn into some sort of intrigue which she refuses to explain. In desperation, the bewildered man turns to the great detective for assistance. As soon as Sherlock gets thoroughly on the job, things start happening and with characteristic rapidity he fathoms the mystery, whereupon differences between husband and wife are patched up and the "yellow face," which the client complained of as haunting him from a window opposite his residence, is found to be a child in disguise, son of the woman by her first husband. There are some very thrilling moments of suspense and the interest holds out entertainingly. Eille Norwood, who plays the great detective in all of these, and Hubert Willis, as Dr. Watson, are in line for considerable popularity. Both are decidedly convincing.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Cops"

(Buster Keaton—First National)

BUSTER KEATON is traveling high again—scoring a knock-out, as it were, with a funny comedy entitled "Cops." Much ingenuity has been expended upon this effort, the gags arriving thick and fast, and all of them building to a side splitting climax in which the sericus Buster is pursued by hundreds of cops.

You, who have laughed over the Keystone variety, have a treat in store, because there are enough minions of the law to populate a village. The idea centers around Buster finding a purse of money and setting out to conquer the world. His girl refuses to marry him unless he can support her. And the action starts and travels at fast speed, uncorking a delivery of brand new gags, such as Keaton rigging up a pair of ear-phones and clasping them on his horse's head. He rings the phone and tells him to speed on. The noble steed understands.

The chase of Keaton by the cops is one of the high spots in a comedy which is irresistibly funny.—LAURENCE REID.

"Improving America's Sheep and Cattle"

(Urban Classic—Two Reels)

This reel is one that in addition to having a decided entertainment value, also informs the spectator regarding a new industry, which has been added to the furrier's trade by the introduction of Persian sheep into American ranches. Every kind of sheep of which scientific research has told, are shown on the screen. It is interesting to note that as much as eighteen pounds of wool is secured from a single sheep and that there are specially trained goats that lead sheep to their slaughter.

About the cattle, there is shown the methods of prevention of vermin and disease among them, the cruel necessity of branding and what life for cattle means to the welfare of human beings. A good composition of informative nature.—LILLIAN GALE.

The Swiftest Detective Thrillers Ever Produced

"The Tales of the Tenements"

Written by Ross D. Whytock
Directed by William Burt

Detective stories such as the screen never before has seen. Twenty-six of them written by one of America's greatest writers of detective stories. A man who spent years in the secret service and newspaper work.

No greater, thrilling or more tensely interesting stories have ever been screened. Each one is loaded with melodramatic punches. Undoubtedly the greatest two-reel melodramas ever offered the motion picture market.

Each one superbly staged, directed and cast. Big names in each picture and a line of advertising matter that will put them over with a bang.

Territorial rights now selling.

Seven Million People Will Thrill to This Advertisement!

THIS double-spread advertisement in the SATURDAY EVENING POST, September 9, will have approximately seven million readers.

These seven million will thrill to the idea of dashing Valentino as the gallant toreador.

They will thrill to the idea of another greater story by the author of "The Four Horsemen." They will thrill with expectation at the cast, the production.

How many of these seven million will see "Blood and Sand" at your theatre?

Your August Clean-up

VARIETY says
"THE STORM" LIFTS BUSINESS AS OTHER HOUSES FALL OFF
Capitol Gets $41,000 with U. Special—Returns to Central Next Week, with Original Act Added—Receipts Decline in All Other Broadway Houses
Broadway's business as far as the motion picture theatres are concerned took a frightful flop last week with the exception of the Capitol, which advanced about $5,000 over the business of the previous week with the U. production "The Storm" as the attraction. The gross at that house was $41,000, but it was the only house on the street that showed an improvement over the business done the previous week.

READ THIS

From Motion Picture News, July 8, 1922

THERE has been a general call for a "cleanup" in the motion picture industry. Will Hays, Adolph Zukor, the Amerifederation of Women's Clubs have issued edicts which in effect call for cleaner, better, bigger pictures. Carl Laemmle answers this demand with "Human Hearts." Never has a more wholesome, sweeter, thrilling, entertaining story been told on the shadow stage. Here we get back to the "old home folks" those beloved characters which many of us had begun to fear had passed from the realm of screen lore. Here is real life, its joys, sorrows, despairs, its sunshine and shadows; life as it has undoubtedly been lived.

The big thing in this production is its story. It's full of "meat." Although seven full reels in length, one will be surprised at the way the plot holds from first to last scene. There's a host of dramatic situations, in fact enough for several five reelers of average type. King Baggott who directed this one, has put some sure fire heart throbs into it.

We would say that "Human Hearts," approaches 100 per cent. as a picture play. That also goes for its box office appeal. If this is an example of some of the pictures we may expect this fall—well, exhibitors better install larger safes in their houses to hold the receipts overnight.

The cast of "Human Hearts," is one of uniform excellence. So good are they all that one almost forgets that it's just acting after all. First honors go to House Peters, as Tom Logan, who fits the part like a glove. Stepping close on the star's heels for honors are Gertrude Claire who gives to the screen another classic bit of interpretation as the mother; Russell Simpson as "Paw" Logan, whose work as the stern, religious blacksmith of the Ozarks is convincing at all times; George Hackathorne as Jimmie Logan, the half witted brother and Edith Hallor as Barbara Kay who displays histrionic ability of a type that will surprise a lot of folks. Then there is our old friend Snitz Edwards who supplies the comedy relief, Ramsey Wallace in the role of Benton, the convict and little Gene Dawson as Little Barbara. It's a cast that sets a pace for others to follow.

Exploitation Angles—Look up all the superlatives in Webster's well known book and use them on this one. It will stand up under the strongest plugging. Tell your patrons that here is a super-production in the true sense of the word. Play up the fine cast; its mother love theme, its "old home" backgrounds and its abundance of thrills.

Drawing Power—Suitable for the finest houses in the land. Properly exploited it should be a clean-up. Go to it!

CHRISTIE COMEDIES lead the field in appeal to every member of the family — for several good reasons.

There's a real idea behind every one of them — better ideas than in many five-reel serious dramas.

Their humor is that of human interest — their situations are ones almost everyone has been in himself.

Their direction is supervised by a man of common sense and ability. Al Christie has no superior anywhere among motion picture directors.

They are produced with the same care and attention that formerly was given only to feature-length productions.

They present artists of character and ability. Besides Bobby Vernon, Neal Burns, Dorothy Devore and Viora Daniel, there are Vera Steadman, Earl Rodney, Charlotte Stevens and many others in the supporting casts.

Not only Christie Comedies, but ALL motion pictures bearing the Educational Pictures trade-mark are leaders of their type.

An Organization That Has Used Its Brains Instead Of Its Mouth

For seven months American Releasing Corporation has refused to issue "publicity" to the motion picture trade press. These journals haven't given us publicity; we haven't asked for any, or wanted any.

In a business that has been literally "talked to death"; a business that has been greatly damaged in public respect and support by insane publicity and ignorant exploitation of the wrong things to exploit—our American Releasing Corporation has had the sense to work hard, use its intelligence and keep its mouth closed tight.

In the fourteen pages that follow, American Releasing Corporation announces its first fourteen productions for release for the season of 1922-1923 in fourteen consecutive weeks from September 3rd. We announce the gigantic money-earning GEORGE BEBAN PRODUCTION "THE SIGN OF THE ROSE," the sought-after, strived for picture which we have obtained against all competitive distributions and thirteen powerful productions for the first quarter of the new releasing year.

Long before these productions are released we will announce two more units of thirteen productions each and we inform you now that we will release between 60 and 70 productions between September 1, 1922, and August 31, 1923. These are exclusive of the 26 pictures released by us from February, when we started, to the end of August, 1922.

And we do say this to the exhibitors of the country:

American Releasing will match, picture for picture, week for week, all the way down the year the biggest and the best productions of any producer or distributor in this industry. You'll need us this year and you'll want us because in directors, stars and casts, stories, production standards, technical qualities—

We've got the pictures.

The Sign of the Rose with

and a superlative cast

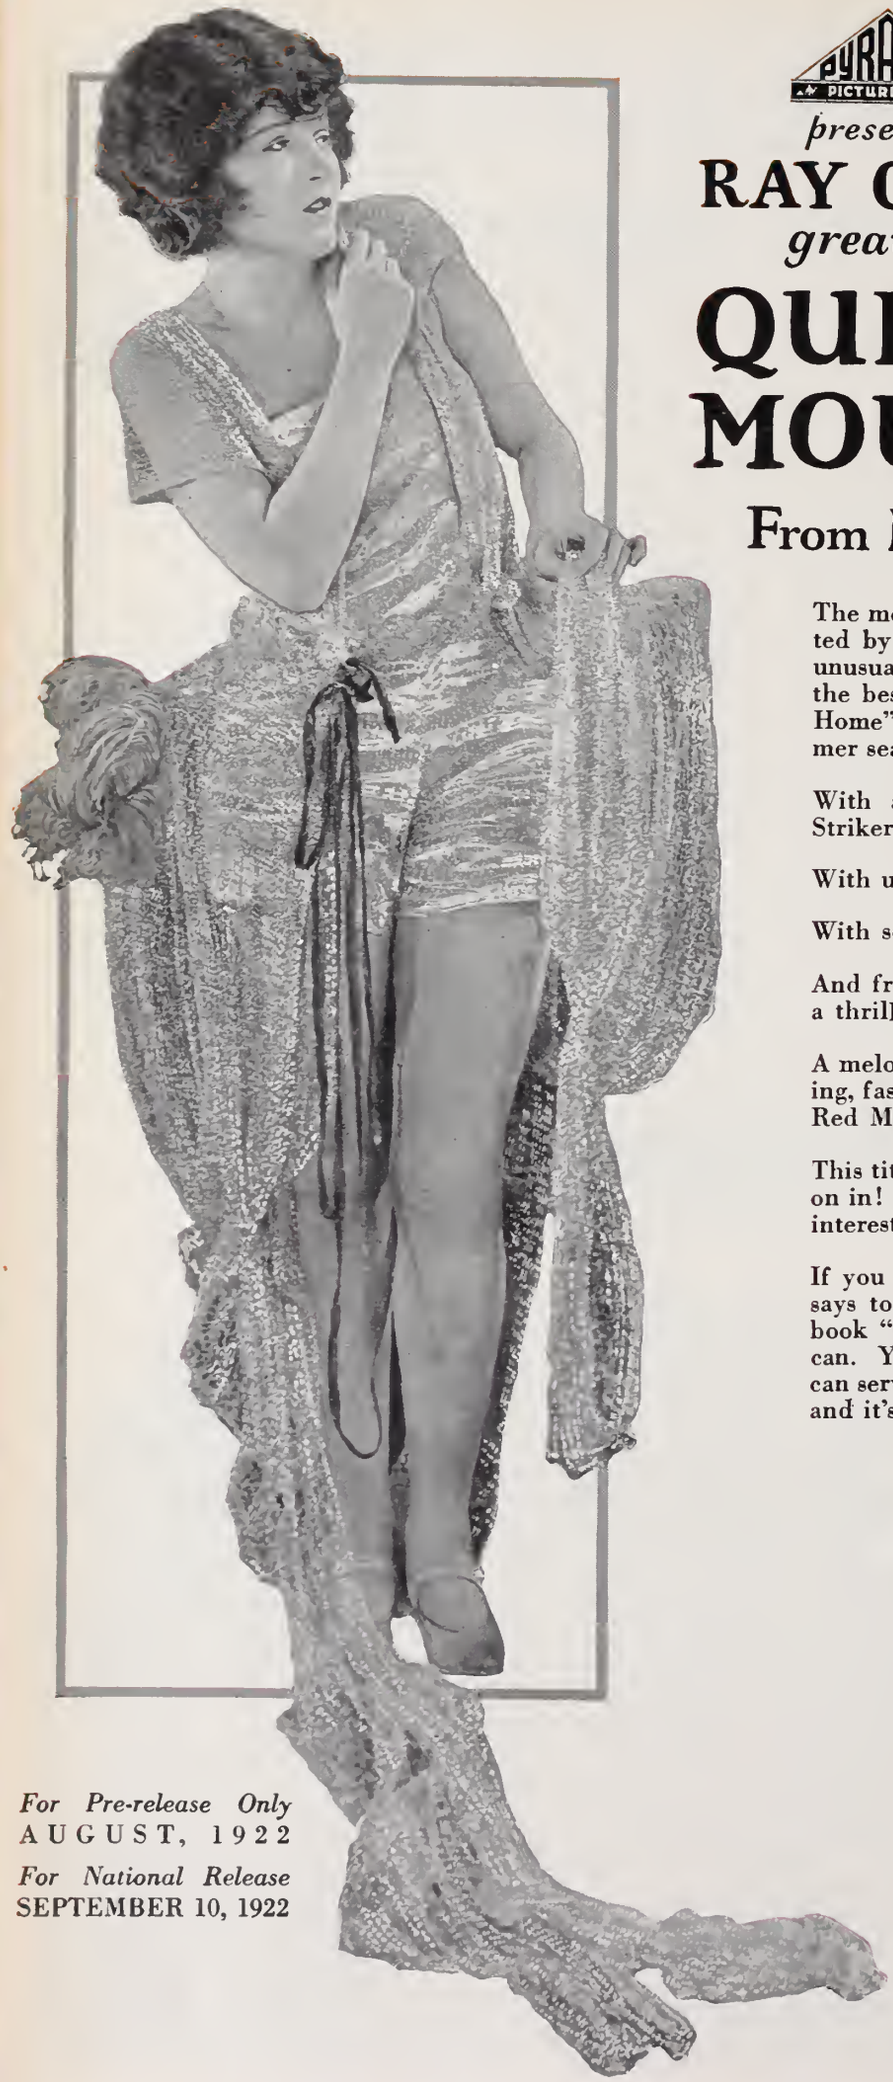
This is the great sensation of the season of 1922-1923. It is the greatest dramatic motion picture ever made. It is overwhelmingly filled with pathos and humanness. It is produced from the act that Mr. Beban has played for fourteen years; one of the most powerful and valuable dramatic properties in the history of the theatre.

It is a proved picture. With Mr. Beban and a company of eight wonderful players acting a twenty minute episode, the unforgettable flower shop episode known to millions, this picture has played 21 weeks in 18 of our greatest cities and largest theatres to larger receipts by 50% than were drawn by the overwhelming runs of "The Miracle Man" and "Humoresque," the giants of the two past seasons.

Before we take a single booking in America of the picture alone and by itself, we are booking "The Sign of the Rose" in conjunction with Mr. Beban and his company of eight, with a carload of scenery and special effects for a thirty weeks season in as many cities.

Not until Mr. Beban and company in conjunction with "The Sign of the Rose" picture have played the largest cities in any zone can or will the picture be booked alone.

Immediately behind Mr. Beban's personal engagement, at the time when everyone in the territory's largest cities is talking about this amazing and never-to-be-forgotten picture we will make it available for exhibitors.



There isn't a picture in all the world to-day one-half as powerful or as valuable to you as "The Sign of the Rose." You had better wire our Theatrical Department to get one of George Beban's thirty weeks of the company and picture combined.

QUEEN OF THE MOULIN ROUGE

From Paul Potter's Famous Play

The most colorful and sensational picture ever directed by a man responsible for many of the screen's unusual pictures and Nazimova's greatest successes; the best work of the man whose "My Old Kentucky Home" has been the outstanding hit of the past summer season.

With a cast that includes Martha Mansfield, Joe Striker and Henry Harmon.

With unusual art direction by Ben Carré.

With scenes taken in Paris and picturesque Quebec.

And from the play that gave American theatre-goers a thrill that they still remember.

A melodrama, yes! A love story, certainly! A moving, fast, panoramic picture of the notorious Parisian Red Mill with all of its excitements and gaieties.

This title says to your public: "Come on in! Come on in! Here's a story and a production to hold your interest!"

If you have booked in some tombstone picture that says to your public "Stay away!" throw it out and book "Queen of the Moulin Rouge" as fast as you can. You better wire for this one. A hundred prints can serve only one hundred theatres at the same time, and it's a big country.

The dearest, sweetest story ever written by the author of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "Mother Carey's Chickens" and two score of the most beloved stories ever written in any language."

If you asked us to describe this story we would tell you that it is indescribable. If as exhibitors you wish something to identify it quickly to you we would say that it is a combination of Mary Pickford's "Rebecca," "Daddy Longlegs" and "Amarilly" all rolled into one.

We selected the girl who contributed the wonderful scenario from which George Loane Tucker made "The Cinderella Man"; we had our hope fulfilled when we got Sidney Olcott to direct the picture, knowing that he loved children and that he made Our Mary's "Poor Little Peppina."

Told simply and quickly this is the story of two kids who wanted a mother and wandered into Maine where they thawed an embittered spinster's heart and attained their wish.

A perfect cast that comprises Helen Rowland as Lady Gay, James Depew as Timothy, Gladys Leslie, Marie Day, Vivia Ogden, Margaret Seddon, James Terbell, Bertram Marburg.

If audiences don't dearly love "Timothy's Quest" then Americans haven't any hearts at all.

A cast headed by Marguerite de la Motte supported by four delightful old scamps in the persons of Tully Marshall, Russell Simpson, Frank Brownlee and Jack Dill.

The story was originally published in Adventure Magazine under the title "Assisting Ananias" and Tuttle, the author, hasn't missed one laugh.

In China when the amused Orientals enjoy a humorous picture they lean forward on their grass mats and bump their foreheads on the ground. Here in the United States audiences will come mighty near rolling out of their seats. Years ago you remember how they howled over Doug Fairbanks' crazy conceit "The Mystery of the Leaping Fish"? Very well, those are the kind of laughs your audiences will get out of "Fools of Fortune."

Belly laughs that start 'way down under the belt and make you rock all over.

Wise old Typewriting Tuttle—way out in California. He sure has started something with this picture. If he writes another one like this they'll run him for President.

THE WOMAN HE LOVED

Directed by Edward Sloman

who made "The Ten Dollar Raise" "Shattered Idols" "The Westerners" and many screen successes

From the story by William V. Mong

And a cast that includes MARGUERITE DE LA MOTTE, WILLIAM V. MONG, Marcia Manon, Mary Wynne, Eddie Southerland, Charles French, Harvey Clarke, Lucille Ward and Bruce Guerin.

We have told you before about Frothingham. He isn't trading on a past reputation; he's making a reputation based on honest work and intelligence. He virtually saved the life of A. P. with a box office picture when it was promising much and delivering little.

He delivered an honest picture that made exhibitors everywhere remember his name and say: "The next time that fellow makes a picture just remember that I want to play it."

A man who works and shuns publicity wins respect and Frothingham is entitled to your respect because he delivers. The same is true of Sloman.

Two men not creatures of publicity and press agents but workers. "The Woman He Loved" proves it. You will want it and be mighty glad you bought it.

RAY C. SMALLWOOD PRODUCTION

featuring

VIOLET HEMING

All star cast including
SHELDON LEWIS and ROBERT FRASER

A sensuous, compelling romance of the burning sands. A story of love and allure.

From the story by Donald McGibney. Not one of the many pictures trailing in the wake of "The Sheik"; a story in every dramatic essential as big as "The Sheik" by an author better and wider known and of long-established success.

A story of passion and deprivation; of love and conquest; of heart hunger and fulfillment.

Backed with the nation-wide audience that greeted the novel. Made infinitely more appealing by the superb art direction of Ben Carre and possessing the increased dramatic power that Ray C. Smallwood's constant growth as a director contributes.

A BRYON DAVIS PRODUCTION

A tremendous he-man story of the great North filled with the action that made "The Spoilers" a three-year sensation that is still remembered.

The principal players in this powerful production are stars loaned to this producer by one of the other great producing organizations, with the stipulation that these names will not be announced before September 1 to hinder the company that controls them in the exploitation of another of the great fall season specials.

By the time you have seen "Fools of Fortune" by the same Producer, the same Director and the same Author, you will know just what "The Pillagers" will represent in cast and production standards.

Hugh Dierker

HUGH DIERKER'S
Story of the home

THE OTHER SIDE

Written by Thelma La Nier and directed personally by Hugh Dierker

This is the first picture made by a young producer since "When Dawn Came." That was a talked-about picture all over the country. Professionals who saw it said: "Here is a director who will bear watching; he will do big things."

The public talked about the picture for months after seeing it and time and again asked exhibitors: "When are you going to have another good picture like 'When Dawn Came'."

But Hugh Dierker didn't hurry. He had stories—good ones. He had ideas—big ones. He had finances and could have started whenever he wished. But he waited—

And he got a bigger story: a bigger theme; a finer, more polished piece of production material. Not until he was satisfied did he move at all.

And then he made "The Other Side." A story splendidly cast and beautifully made; one that doesn't strain after big effects, yet holds you every minute. You will remember "The Other Side" long after you have forgotten all about some of the punch pictures that create momentary sensations.

New York Tribune

As for us, we found the picture perfectly fascinating and we intend to go to the Strand Theatre and see it again.

The Sun

It is a tribute to the extraordinary smoothness of this, the best out and out thriller seen in a long time, that none of the spectacular incidents seem to have been thrown in just to make it harder

Motion Picture News

The gallery gods will stand right up on their hind legs and shout for joy.

Carter's plays carry serial qualities and "The Fast Mail" out-serials any serial for crisp and snappy action.

The New York Times.

"The Fast Mail" at the Strand is an honest motion picture. It is a regular old-fashioned smash-'em-up-and-shoot-'em melodrama and doesn't pretend to be anything else. In this day of cinema sham and charlatantry this is decidedly in its favor. It was made for its scenes of course. These include a runaway and rescue, an accident-strewn steeplechase, a steamboat race, a boiler explosion, the sinking of a river steamer, burning building, several fist and gun fights and a wild dash by the hero, in which he leaps from a railroad workcar to the cab of a tearing train and then from train to a racing automobile. Action? That's it.

NEW YORK JOURNAL

Thrill piles upon thrill with each moment.

The Globe

AND Commercial Advertiser.

One wonders after seeing this feature why the producers do not do this sort of thing oftener.

"A Fool There Was" Scores as Film Feature at the Strand

ESTELLE TAYLOR, in "A Fool There Was," at the Strand Theatre, may unhesitatingly be set down as some vamp. Usually these ladies who break up happy homes look as though they should be knitting flannel petticoats on a Summer porch, but it was otherwise with Miss Taylor. THE EVENING MAIL

Contains some of the finest photography extant—some of the scenes of the burning of Rome are magnificent.

New York Evening Post

No historical photodrama has ever been as smoothly told as this one. It is a joy to see how one event leads logically to the next. If you want to spend a short two hours living through the affairs of state and the heart of an age in which the passage of years has only served to augment interest, see "Nero" by all means.

The World.

Its scenes of the burning of Rome are the finest things of their kind we have seen in pictures. When a motion picture of the quality of "Nero"—always entertaining, often heart touching and nerve tingling, never boresome—comes to town the best thing to do is to advise every one you know to go and see it. This we hereby do.

New York Tribune

"Nero" is a magnificent spectacle for all, with a love story to touch every heart. From the first flicker to the very end it held us spellbound. The direction is perfect and the acting superb. The entire cast is so good that finally you become bewildered with the perfection of it all. Lack of space prevents us from saying all we should like to about this picture. "Nero" is the sort of picture that you want to write columns about and use up all the adjectives synonymous with gorgeous, brilliant and thrilling.

The Sun

Scene after scene passed of almost breath-taking beauty. We fully agree that "Nero" is "the climax of motion picture progress."

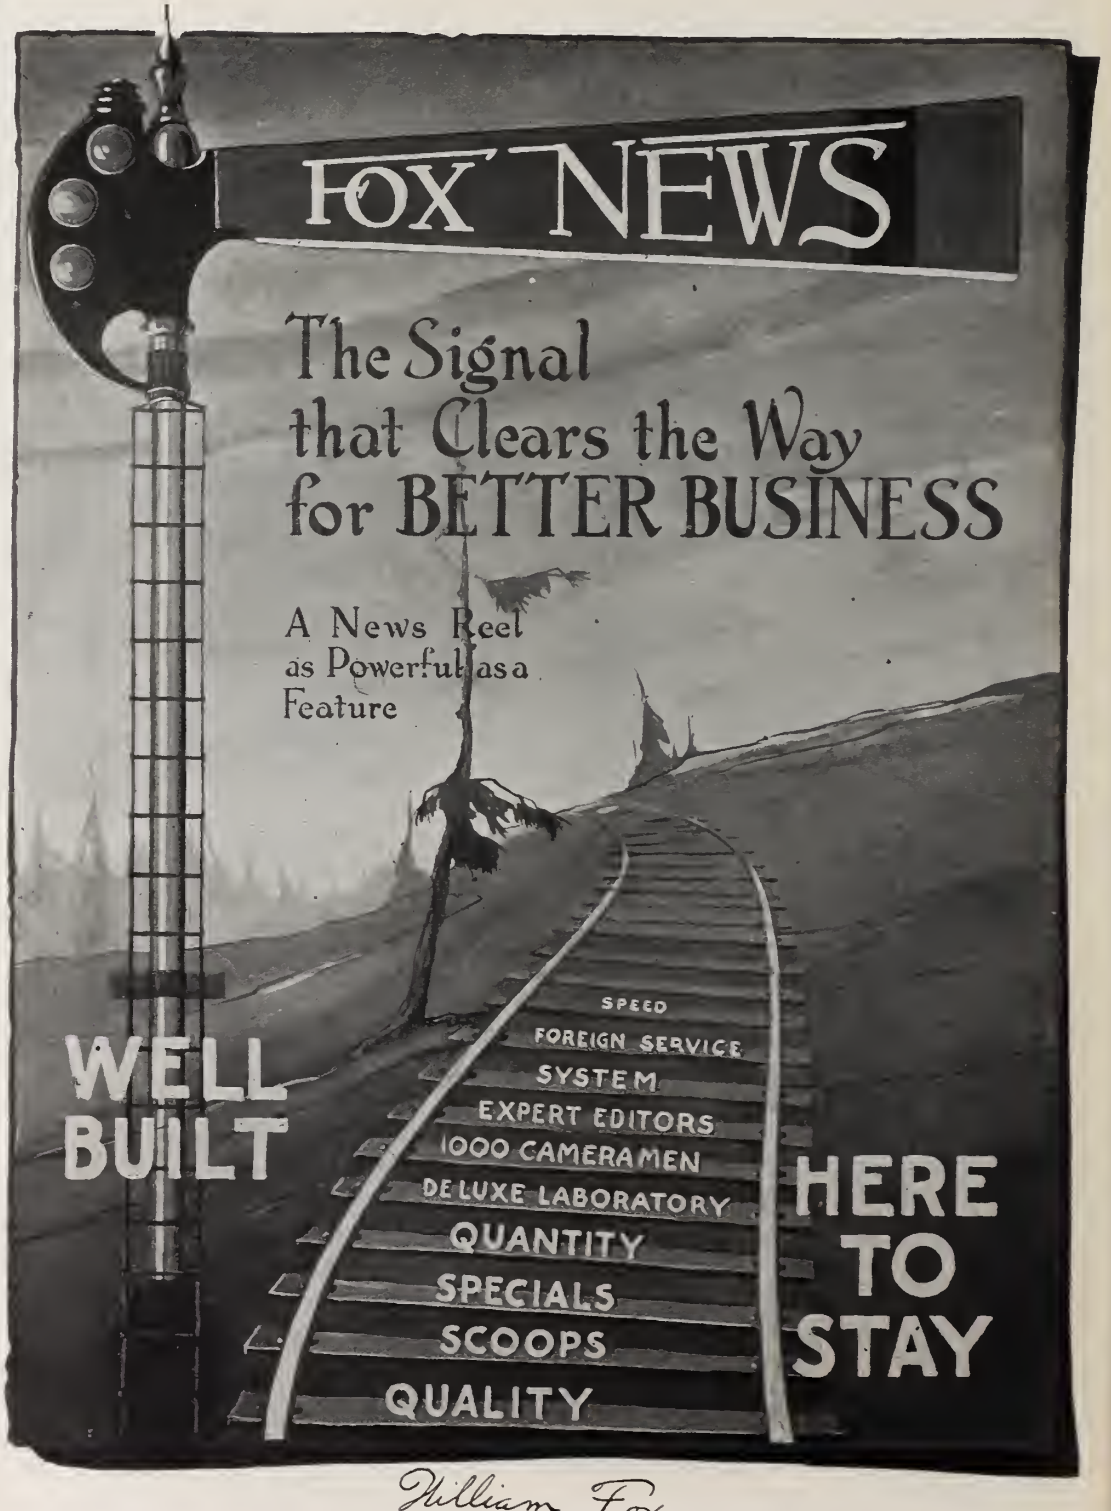
The Evening World.

At last a super picture worthy of its name.
Staggering in its magnificence; gripping in its story; wonderful in the handling of its mobocracy. "Nero" comes pretty near standing alone—the acme of the spectacular in motion pictures.
If you have never seen a motion picture go and see "Nero." And if you are the most blase movie fan in the world and think you have seen everything they can offer on the screen—be SURE to see "Nero."
It is indeed a super-film.

The Morning Telegraph

It has all the gorgeous decadence of setting that made Rome. William Fox has attained the superlative in spectacles.

The Evening Telegram



Mr. Fox in the programme pays a tribute to the skill of Mr. Edwards, and The Evening Telegram concurs with him.

Dear Old Dan Mason—the Frank Bacon of the screen—is the greatest of all rural character actors—As the erratic little "Skipper" of Toonerville Trolley fame, he set the whole nation laughing—not mere titters and chuckles but real, deep "belly" laughs that count at the box-office. As "Pop" Tuttle in a brand new series of Plum Center Comedies he goes a step further—He's a POSITIVE RIOT! A character that will chisel right into the heart of America and broadcast a tidal wave of merriment the country over—Never before has a series of comedies so typically American reached the screen—There's many a laugh in sleepy old Plum Center and "Pop" Tuttle finds 'em all! We'll Let the Other Fellow Say It for Us!

John M. Stahl

Arthur James, as you all know, is the editor of the Moving Picture World. This is an editorial published under his signature in the World of July 15. The editorial speaks for itself—and Arthur James, as you know, is a hard boiled critic. Enough said!

Intelligence—Intelligence!

THE great call for morality in pictures has not been entirely for morality. The poor taste of some pictures, many pictures, has annoyed the screen's critics quite as much as anything else. These annoyances have been included under the general description of "bad moral tone." This problem is quite as great as any that confronts us.

This is by way of prelude to a word or two about a picture that is handled with such intelligence and which tells its story so well that it may well be pointed to as an example of what to do and how to do it. "One Clear Call" is the name of it and John M. Stahl directed it for Louis B. Mayer, who in turn is releasing it through Associated First National Exhibitors.

The matter of titling is so important that we call your attention to what Madge Tyrone and Mr. Stahl and whoever else had to do with the happy result, contrive to show on the screen. It is all so reasonable, so lacking in gush, so strong in its clear interpretation, giving the fine direction and the fine acting a full chance to register without hindrance. Henry B. Walthall, Claire Windsor, Milton Sills and other really fine players contribute wonderfully to the perfection of the story telling, but the good taste, the splendid intelligence displayed in this production is the point we deem of such high importance.

It is not our purpose to additionally review this picture. We merely wish to direct your attention to the type of production which we believe will mean the success of our business. It has heart, it has strength, it is clean and it is neither above the head nor beneath the intellect of the spectator. It is fine entertainment with intelligence, intelligence, intelligence registering all of the time.

ARTHUR JAMES.

The August 4

Aug. 7— JACKIE COOGAN in "TROUBLE"

Five reels of joy and laughter with sometimes a sob. Jackie's biggest and best. Your patrons fell in love with Jackie in "Peck's Bad Boy" and "My Boy." They'll lose their hearts entirely when they see this one. Get this quick.

Aug. 14— GUY BATES POST in "THE MASQUERADER"

This is the wonderful story of Katherine Cecil Thurston. It has been road-showed for four years and everyone is familiar with the stage production. Mr. Post's wonderful acting is known to your patrons and this is considered his greatest work.

Aug. 21— KATHERINE MacDONALD in "HEROES AND HUSBANDS"

Comes the most beautiful woman in the world, so adjudged by the Chicago Tribune and New York Daily News beauty contest, in the latest of her new series of finer productions. We can guarantee that it ranks among the best this star has produced.

Aug. 28— NORMA TALMADGE in "THE ETERNAL FLAME"

This has been called by those who have seen it greater even than "Smilin' Through." That is SOME recommendation. It is the wonderful story by Honoré de Balzac and it gives Miss Talmadge the opportunity for the most marvelous emotional acting of her career.

Here Are the August Comedies

Aug. 14— SENNETT-TURPIN—"HOME MADE MOVIES"

The best the criss-cross eyed comedian has appeared in up to date. It'll bring the roof down when you play it. A good comedy story with all the inimitable Turpin tricks produced as only Mack Sennett can make a comedy.

Aug. 28— BUSTER KEATON—"THE FROZEN NORTH"

Our own frozen faced comedian in a tale of the frozen trail in the Northlands. It is the most novel comedy with the most novel tricks in the most novel settings that you have ever seen. It's funny enough to shake a tombstone with laughter.

True Talk

WE give over this page to Calkins and Holden of New York City because they have told in a little booklet a big business story—better than we could tell it.

The leading newspapers of the country have borrowed and reprinted it.

It will go home to every man in this business—to the exhibitor who is formulating his future policy; to the salesman who talks and thinks only in prices; to the independent producer who wonders why the market is so apathetic to his pictures; to the distributor whose success is dependent upon his customer's confidence in him.

There's a big buried treasure in this business.

Read about it.

The Destructive Force of Silence

"WE have advertised a long while," said a manufacturer who wished to stop. "And have good will. That good will will last us for a long while. We don't need to add to it right now."

To some extent that is so. The flywheel goes on turning for a while after the power is shut off. But not for long. And when it stops it takes more power to start it, by six times, than it takes to keep it running.

One might almost as well say:

"We won't buy coal now that it is so expensive, we will gradually chop up the plant and burn that in the furnace until coal is cheaper. And then we can rebuild the plant."

Good will is a fine thing to use.

But not a fine thing to use up.

Nothing is ever finished—done. Time is destructive. Stop building up and time starts tearing down. Some things last longer than others. But nothing lasts so very long. You think of your plant, for instance, as built. But it only stays built because you are painting and repairing and gradually but continually replacing it bit by bit.

Think how much more rapid the inevitable loss in a thing so intangible as familiarity—as reputation—as good will.

Out of sight, out of mind—not all in a minute but before so very long.

Advertisers who stop advertising expose the advertising structure, on which they have invested much money for many years, to elements quite as destructive and more rapid in their action than those which attack and disintegrate an unfinished, abandoned building.

In almost every community you will find the ruins of an ambitious but unfinished mansion—generally called Somebody's Folly.

Much money went into the work and then financial reverses stopped it all. And the winds blew and the rains descended and the sun warped the wood and the dampness rotted it, and rust and decay completed its ruin.

Now, an advertising structure, dependent on familiarity and reputation, can never be finished even to the extent that a building can be finished. We venture to say that never, in your most optimistic moments, have you felt that your advertising structure was finished and that it would shelter and protect your established business forever after.

No, you realize, when you stop to think, that the work of building must go on until the end of time.

Good will is a fine thing to use.

But not a fine thing to use up.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

WHILE the producers of stage attractions are scouring Europe in search of new plays to give the theatre-going public, the leading sponsors of pictures are reading all the newest fiction in their hunt for the perfect screen story. Some of last season's best sellers have already been purchased with this idea in view. And noticing the trend toward melodrama and the homespun story on the part of the picture patrons, many have gone back to the early days of the road show to find material. Lincoln J. Carter and Hal Reid have been heard from and many of their plays have been produced recently or are in production.

The New York stage is a Kimberly diamond mine—the difficulty attending the search for the jewel which will break house records. It's reasonable to believe, however, that many of the failures could be used for the screen. Inasmuch as the outside world hasn't learned of the hard luck attached, a producer could buy one and put it over. At that it might be more successful than some of the so-called masterpieces with very little local appeal.

No book is sacred any more for production purposes—unless it is the telephone directory. The fiction mart, the song mart have given their contributions. Newspapers have supplied likely stories. Even the Bible has found expression on the screen. There is no definite policy employed as with stage producers. The field is too broad and it must cater to widely varied tastes.

THERE are no pictures being issued these days which the National Board of Review must mark for—Adult audiences only. This sign is becoming almost an antique as that which used to adorn the side door of the corner saloon—Family Entrance. Which proves that pictures are being made with an eye upon the juvenile mind. Among the list selected by the National Board in its latest issue and recommended for the family group are "Forget Me Not" (Metro), "The Eternal Flame" (First National), "The Fighting Guide" (Vitagraph), "Don't Shoot" (Universal), and "Trooper O'Neil" (Fox).

CONTRACTS have been signed whereby William Fox leased from the Messrs. Shubert for the coming season two of their most important theatres for the presentation of feature pictures. The lease upon the Lyric theatre, where "Nero" is playing, would terminate in a few days, and the success of the picture has prompted Mr. Fox to secure a new lease which will carry him through the winter season. "Nero" is expected to continue until Labor Day, after which the theatre will be turned over to "A Little Child Shall Lead Them."

The other theatre leased is the 44th Street theatre, which has housed several big screen productions in the past. Possession of this playhouse will be taken on August 14, for the presentation of "Monte Cristo." Fox plans to present several of its big specials at the two theatres during the coming season, a few of which are "If Winter Comes," a dramatization of A. S. M. Hutchinson's best seller: "The Town That Forgot God," and a picturization of Wright Lorimer's play, "The Shepherd King."

The lease upon the Apollo theatre where "Silver Wings" is appearing will expire the latter week of August.

These are ambitious plans and the pictures loom up big enough to warrant the leasing of these legitimate theatres.

WHENEVER a literary celebrity comes to town his lesser contemporaries welcome him with all the gusto given by the village band for the visiting firemen. They proceed to interview him, not only because he is good "copy," but because they are eager to learn something about the man and his personality to discover the why and wherefore of his style of expression.

H. G. Wells visited New York and the literati dogged his footsteps. They learned something of the impulses which guide him to put his ideas on paper.

Now George Horace Lorimer, editor of the Saturday Evening Post, is going to Hollywood. Which means that the personalities behind the scripts will strive their best to discover what makes his magazine so popular. It will be like Old Home Week in a sense for many of the stories which received his O. K. for the Post were written and are still being turned out by the literati of Los Angeles and environs.

A RECENT arrival in Los Angeles is David O. Selznick, vice-president of Selznick Pictures Corp. He is to enter conference with Myron Selznick, president and production head of the company, regarding picture plans for the coming season. This is David Selznick's first trip to the coast in two years. He will return to New York in about two months.

RC. PICTURES is to do "Uncle Tom," so a story in last week's issue reads. Truly this is an interesting announcement—one suggesting many a retrospective thought and inviting comment.

The fact is if you were to shoot a "Tom Show" cue around any of the picture lots, the chances are that half the crew, from actors to directors, could hand you the line it called for. Many of our "best people" have a past that dates back to a "Tom Show."

Making "Uncle Tom's Cabin" into pictures—looking at it from a layman's viewpoint—seems at present some problems. One is, just what is to go in and what is out.

The play is so familiar—its manner of enactment is such a tradition—that building a motion picture without due regard for the stage version becomes a very fine point for argument. And if you film the stage play will you have a photoplay?

Is "Uncle Tom's Cabin" to be "Uncle Tom's Cabin" or is it to be a picture constructed as pictures should be, bearing the above w.k. and justly famous title?

Anyway, everyone will be interested to know who will do "Topsy," "Simon" and "Little Eva." And what a fine time the exploiteers will have.

YOU who have read A. S. M. Hutchinson's fascinating novel—that marvelously drawn character study and love cycle of Mark Sabre in "If Winter Comes," need not harbor any doubts that this interesting fictional personage will be inadequately interpreted on the screen.

William Fox has made an ideal choice in Percy Marmont if appearances count for anything. Sabre, a subtle, complex figure—an aesthete and idealist—a figure groping for the highest kind of expression in his business and love, this Sabre is difficult for those who expect to find his counterpart in life.

Marmont comes closer than anyone we can think of on the screen. His bearing suggests a search for the ideal—his sensitive face suggests a constant conflict of thought.

WITH thirty-seven thousand feet of productions made in Portugal, the subjects ranging from a serial and five reel pictures adapted from noted Portuguese works to single reelers depicting the dress and manners of the various portions of the country, Luiz Ochea, manager of the Cinema Condes of Lisbon, has arrived in this country to arrange for United States release.

ROY L. McCARDELL, of the New York Evening World staff, and well known as a photo-playwright, and author of the popular "Jarr Family" daily sketches, has been announced as the winner of the United Cigar Stores "How Can We Serve You Better" contest. Mr. McCardell was awarded the first cash prize of $2,500 over some 300,000 competitors.

Mr. McCardell is the heavyweight champion prize winner of the United States. His success in this direction dates back to 1911 when he won a contest for the best advertising slogans. His prizes have run from checks of four figures to silver trophies and motor cars.

The author, photoplaywright, and successful contestor has been particularly fortunate in winning scenario contests. Ten thousand dollars was dumped into his lap in 1915 for the best moving picture serial. Do you remember "The Diamond From the Sky"? Mr. McCardell's total cash winnings, including the value of his prize motor car, amounts to $47,800. Asked how he does it, he modestly admits that he always enters a contest with the full determination to give idea, subject, or service that will be many times of far greater value to those offering the prize than the prize would be to him.

PHOTOPLAY Magazine for August gives a resume of the year's best pictures from July 1, 1921, to July 1, 1922. The list of the eight best attractions is headed by "Tol'ble David" with other selection comprising "Orphans of the Storm," "Hungry Hearts," "The Three Musketeers," "Bits of Life," "The Loves of Pharoah," "Foolish Wives," and "One Glorious Day." MOTION PICTURE NEWS does not take exception to this list. It agrees with Photoplay that these pictures are the exceptional offerings of the year ending July 1, 1922.

WORD comes from Great Neck, L. I., where Samuel Goldwyn has been living in comparative retirement that the founder of the corporation which bears his name has joined the army so ably headed by Mrs. Asquith and Colonel Repington and is busy writing his reminiscences of picture life under the illuminating title of "Behind the Screen," which will shortly begin exclusively in Pictorial Review.

We know of few men on the inside of this industry who are better fitted to write upon this subject than Mr. Goldwyn. From all indications the article promises to be a sensation. By the way, "Behind the Screen" is a mighty happy title, isn't it?

THE Olympic docked the other day. The big White Star Liner brought back Pearl White, fresh from her stage triumphs in Paris. The star has been engaged for a new Pathe serial which is now in course of production at the George B. Seitz studios.

That Miss White has lost none of her popularity—that she still retains the colorful personality which makes good "copy" is attested to by the fact that she was received at the pier by a small army of reporters and a battery of cameras. Let it be said that she seemed in excellent health and spirits—in fact, fit to improve on the "stunt thrills" with which she so liberally punctuated the dozen or so Pathe serials.

But listen to Miss White—"For some time to come I'm all American once more and glad of it. Paris has been tremendously kind to me. It may look ungrateful, but the fact is that I've come over without a 'Paris fashion' except what I am wearing."

The star has great confidence in herself (possessing confidence is one of the best little developers of personality) and she continues with that self-assurance characteristic of her.

"I'm here to work in a serial which will astonish the nation. Having been over the serial production road several times before, I'm in a position to know the public which supports these serials all over the world."

The Pathe star has been appearing during her sojourn in the French capital as headliner at the Casino de Paris. Her act consisted of several imitations of herself.

LOS ANGELES news items "The Los Angeles County Grand Jury returned an indictment here July 14 charging Mrs. Clara Phillips with the murder of Mrs. Albert Tremaine Meadows, a twenty-year-old widow who was beaten to death with a hammer on a lonely section of Montecito Drive, near here, Wednesday, July 12."

As yet no report has come forth that the parties involved were ever in motion pictures, although in all likelihood the amateur sleuth hounds are searching screen records to discver, if possible, any association.

Life with its jealousies and mad passions goes on apace. And one doesn't need to look into the land of Make-Believe whenever a crime shocks the country. If statistics could be drawn up of all the criminal acts which have reached the columns of the press, you would find the acting profession so far down the list as to be almost negligible.

However, when one of its members falls from grace, the public condemns him without a hearing. This is the way of human nature. These people are successful—their personalities, their salaries are public property. Consequently the inferiority complex is registered by those of the work-a-day world. They put the players on a pedestal and then proceed to knock them off.

THAT unjust criticism is still being made of Hollywood and its picture colony is pointed out by Norma Talmadge. The First National star offers a plea for fairness toward the members of the picture profession. And being one of the leaders of her art, it is hoped her remarks will find favor among the scoffers.

"Many a sincere and able motion picture star is paying the price of popularity," Miss Talmadge said. "I have talked with men and women whose art and industry have brought joy and tears to the hearts and eyes of millions. I know how they view the world and their obligations to it. I know how they value their good names and cherish the memories of their early struggles in the game of life.

"Show me a maligner of the cinema who does not blame the whole motion picture industry for some individual's shortcomings and I will show you a reformer who is not really a reformer but a regular human being."

Al Lichtman Talks of Big Industrial Boom

Brings Refreshing Note of Optimism Regarding Conditions in U. S.

AL LICHTMAN, President of the Al Lichtman Corporation, is back in New York after an extended tour of the country which embraced every section except the South. There is a refreshing note of optimism in Mr. Lichtman's observations about general conditions which, by the way, he does not confine to the motion picture industry.

"While I was, of course, primarily interested in conditions in the film business, I could not help but be impressed by the great boom in industrial and agricultural fields," said Mr. Lichtman. "Crops are abundant—larger, I understand, than for some time—and factories in the Middle West are working at full capacity, many running on an overtime schedule.

"As to the film business, indications everywhere point to a return to excellent business when the fall season starts and, even now, where cooler weather prevails, theatres are playing to a most satisfactory attendance. We must not expect, naturally, a return of such business as prevailed during war times, but I think that we all realize now that that was an unnatural peak and that conditions today should not be based on comparisons with that era of unusual prosperity.

"And I want to go on record right here as saying that all this talk about the decline of the motion picture is nonsense. A general survey of the country covering practically all walks of life indicates that most people are thoroughly sold on GOOD pictures. I will readily concede that most picture patrons are definitely through with the stereotyped in motion picture productions, but this was inevitable and apparent to all who had the best interests of this great business of ours at heart.

Al. Lichtman, President Al Lichtman Corporation

"This means, of course, that the selection of story material must be most critical. If you boil down the general complaint against the average picture you will find that, in the last analysis, it centers on the bromidic story. While it is possible to ruin a fine story by poor production methods, if the theme remains the picture will get by, but the finest production quality in the world won't put across a stereotyped story.

"The independent field has long needed a reliable, permanent source of supply in the matter of product and we are going to do our share—a large share—in meeting that requirement. As a matter of fact, unless this market is to have available product in sufficient quantity and quality, it cannot survive.

"I find that most exhibitors are convinced that the time has come when they must select their entertainment with the utmost care, and they are chiefly concerned with picture quality. They are serving a far more discriminating public than formerly, and this necessitates judging each production separately on its individual merit.

"While on the coast I spent a week with B. P. Schulberg at the studios. I found Gasnier and Tom Forman at work on forthcoming productions. We are planning far ahead on production work. For the present Gasnier is at work on 'Thorns and Orange Blossoms,' while Forman starts a production which has for a working title 'Ching, Ching, Chinaman.' A final title will be given this production later. A notable cast is being engaged, one that will compare favorably with that of 'Rich Men's Wives.'"

Asked what he thought was the most important problem from the producer's angle, Mr. Lichtman said: "I think that the producers who will succeed will be those who, at all times, consider the exhibitors' problems, and chief among these is good entertainment at a price low enough to permit of a reasonable profit. Economy in production (understand, I do not at all advocate the type of economy which detracts from the picture quality) automatically should make for economy for the exhibitor. Inversely the producer who turns out productions at a ridiculous expense and gouges the exhibitor beyond all reason is going to find a rapidly shrinking market for his pictures.

Operators Tax Selves to Fight Cut

AT the regular semi-monthly meeting of Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local 306 of New York held Wednesday morning at Mansion Hall, East 8th Street, and attended by close to 600 operators, the attitude of the men was absolute determination not to accede to the demands of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce. This body had offered the operators a 10 per cent. reduction in wages for the year commencing September 1, 1922.

In the opinion of the men emphatically expressed on the floor, the attempt of the theatre owners to reduce running expenses of their houses by cutting the wages of the men in the booths is not only ill-directed but ill-timed as well.

A motion was offered and passed unanimously, whereby the men went on record as willing to pay a self-inflicted assessment of 15 per cent weekly between now and the wage scale agreement to provide additional funds to carry out the policy they have decided upon, namely to accept no wage reduction. It was pointed out at the meeting that this 15 per cent. assessment would work great hardship upon the men but the general attitude at the meeting was to "give until it hurts."

McCormick to Manage Chicago McVickers

S. B. Barrett McCormick is leaving the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, where he has been managing director for the past year, to become manager of the McVickers Theatre, Chicago. The McVickers is one of the chain of Jones, Linick and Schafer houses.

McCormick is leaving Cleveland July 30. He assumes his new duties August 15th, and will do preliminary work around the house prior to its opening in September. The McVickers is a new theatre, of 2,500 seats, located at the intersection of State and Madison Ave., right in the heart of Chicago's famous loop.

Frank Zimmerer, stage director under McCormick at the Allen, is going with him to Chicago.

S. Barrett McCormick was the first exhibitor to show Cleveland movie patrons what is meant by presentation acts, and by musical vizualization.

Indianapolis Puts Ban on Outdoor Shows

THE ordinance prohibiting operation of free open-air theatres in Brookside and Garfield Parks in Indianapolis was passed over Mayor Lew Shank's veto last Monday by the city council. The vote was six to three. The administration announced it would fight the ordinance by injunction.

In connection with the ordinance an opinion of national interest to the theatrical industry, in that it cites decisions from several states to show that neither city council nor state legislature can make laws absolutely prohibiting theatrical entertainments, was given Mayor Shank by Corporation Counsel Taylor E. Groninger, a leading municipal lawyer of Indiana.

Groninger held that the legislature, which made the charter, had power neither to indiscriminately prohibit all theatricals, nor to make such a law itself.

Two stock companies provided the entertainment in the open-air parks, which brought about the ordinance. As high as twelve thousand people a week see the shows.

Cleveland Censorship Reports Are Divided

Municipal Committee Cannot Agree on the Conditions After Year's Study

AFTER more than a year's study of the motion picture censorship problem, the municipal committee of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce has presented divided reports.

The majority report urges the establishment of a national bureau of film censorship.

The minority report, submitted by four of the seventeen members, recommended that all censorship be abolished.

The directors decided to table both reports for three months. Most of the directors concur in the hope that the movie industry, through Will Hayes, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., "would be able to conduct its own housecleaning and thus be spared the expense and annoyance of outside interference in the form of government censorship."

If public sentiment for more rigorous censorship is still as much in evidence this fall as now, and if the industry is not able to keep its house in order, the board will reconsider the reports.

The majority report begins with the spring of last year when A. T. Hills was appointed to represent the Chamber in a series of conferences with the Federated Churches and other organizations, with the view to improving the tone of pictures shown in Cleveland. The inquiry was delegated to the municipal committee on May 11, with a request that the desirability of national censorship be given special study.

"The committee believes that censorship in principle is contrary to the spirit of the American people," says the majority report.

"The committee feels that this function of regulation could best be exercised by the federal government. It is to be hoped that should a federal board be established, the states would not deem it necessary to have their own boards in addition, and that those states already having boards would eventually dispense with them.

"The salaries should be large enough to attract the highest type of civic minded men and women for services on the board. It should be mandatory that the board license all films save those found obscene, immoral or of a nature to corrupt morals or incite to crime."

The majority report says that if such a bill were held unconstitutional on the ground that it violated states' rights, all films would have to be excepted from its provisions save those intended for interstate or foreign shipment. Since films depend for revenue on wide distribution, this would make practically all pictures subject to the law.

"Your committee believes that if such a law were enacted the public would be amply protected from suggestive, immoral and obscene films, and the producer would be subjected to the minimum of inconvenience and his investment would have much better protection," concludes the report signed by Wilber J. Watson, chairman of these members: G. E. Bishop, Irving C. Bolton, P. H. Collins, W. B. Henlon, Theodore T. Long, John G. Lowe, William J. Meade, C. F. Mullen, Charles H. Olds, E. D. Shurmer, Ralph H. West and Frances White.

"We believe the arguments presented to the committee in opposition to censorship far outweigh those presented in its favor," avers the minority report, signed by W. H. Abbott, Ernest C. Dempsey, Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver and E. H. Tracy.

When Vernon M. Riegel, Director of Education, caused the dismissal of Mrs. Evelyn Frances Snow as head of the Ohio Censor Board, there was much rejoicing among film folk. Mr. Riegel sent forth word that he was going to give the censor board his own personal attention until he could formulate a new set of standards by which motion pictures could be censored with more justice than had heretofore been in practice. Among other things, Riegel said that pictures could not be censored by rule. They must be censored by standards. That means simply that what's bad in one context may be all right in another. In other words, it's the combination of the time, the place and the inference that makes a scene right or wrong in the eyes of the censors.

Ohio motion picture men today learned that they rejoiced all too soon in Mr. Riegel's move. They learned it from the following article which appeared as a staff special to the "Cleveland Press":

"Vernon Riegel, Director of Education, since he took over active control of the movie censorship recently, has established a 'standard of eliminations.'

"This is for the guidance of his assistants, Mrs. Mary Barchard Williams, Miss Suzannah M. Warfield and Miss Mary E. Luethi.

"Mrs. Snow, whom he recently deposed from control of censorship, introduced political censorship of the movies by barring from the movies all criticism of movie censors or movie censorship. Riegel extends this in the new 'standard of elimination.'

"He rules that the movies may not deprecate any public official, including himself. It applies to all, from village dog catcher to governor, from constable to United States senator from Ohio.

"At the same time he makes a ruling that bars movies 'which exhibit movie stars who have committed crimes or whose names are in question, judged by generally accepted moral standards.'"

M.P.T.O.A. Is on Record Against Blacklisting

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have issued the following as a result of a development in matters affecting the use of the so-called Hoy System:

"In view of the developments of the past few weeks involving the suit of Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger of Philadelphia against the Film Board of Trade and other agencies there using the so-called "Hoy" System, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America are positively opposed to any blacklisting proposition of this character brought about through the efforts of a self-appointed board of judges who assume to impose their dictum upon the exhibitor without any opportunity of appeal and, as an alternative to obeying their mandates, use the Hoy System and resort to the illegal practice of forcing a dark house upon the exhibitor by withholding film through improper processes.

"It is undeniable that any such line of conduct could be tolerated in this business which, because of its peculiar character, must have mutuality as one of its fundamental features.

"The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America are firmly behind Mr. Nirdlinger in his actions. We stand for fair and square business dealings and honest arbitration with both sides properly represented."

Court Decision Favors Magician

In a decision just handed down by the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court, in which all five judges concur, the Clarion Photoplays, Inc., are restrained from showing the photoplay entitled "Sawing a Woman in Half." The plaintiff was Horace Goldin, magician, who conceived the act and who has profited handsomely by it as a vaudeville venture.

The decision in part says:

"Plaintiff has satisfactorily established that he is the originator of the illusion in question, which has achieved a great success under the title devised by him of "Sawing a Woman in Half" and that his creation of the illusion has been so universally recognized that the title thereof is in the public mind associated with his own name.

"The affidavits lead irresistibly to the conclusion that the defendants have simply sought unfairly and unjustly to profit by plaintiff's success, by adopting the name which he gave to his illusion and by copying his methods an unfair competition and unreasonable interference with plaintiff's rights which the courts should and will prevent."

South Optimistic Over Future, Says Ragland

Associated Exhibitors Executive Finds Customary Summer Conditions Prevailing

RETURNING to New York from a tour of the South and the Southwest, which extended all the way to Texas, J. C. Ragland, secretary of Associated Exhibitors, declared he had found customary summer conditions prevailing, with exhibitors generally showing a spirit of decided optimism.

"The outlook is best reflected in the fact that I brought back a big carpet bag" —Mr. Ragland is a Virginian—"loaded with contracts for the Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors feature, 'Grandma's Boy,'" he said.

Mr. Ragland formed the following conclusions regarding conditions in the South:

"In Washington I found business particulary fine. One of the most important exhibitors in that territory told me he had absolutely no cause for complaint. In Baltimore conditions are slightly below normal but this is partly explained by the presence of a large number of outside amusement places, accessible by trolley, and the proximity of many sea coast resorts. If the statement of the manager of one of Richmond's largest houses that his theatre has not had a losing week in something like 57 be literally true certainly there is no cause for anxiety in the Virginia city.

"In the Charlotte, Atlanta, Birmingham and Memphis territories I heard neither serious complaints nor expressions of great enthusiasm. General comment was to the effect that business is neither better nor worse than might reasonably be expected at this time of the year.

"I arrived in New Orleans in the midst of one of the worst heat spells the city had experienced in a long time, and found business affected also by the recent severe floods. However, the New Orleans territory always recovers more or less rapidly from a setback and I predict that with the coming of cooler weather and the tourist influx business will again hit its former happy stride.

"Dallas territory, too, was suffering from intense heat, but it is gratifying to report the managers of the largest two theatres, the Palace and the Hope, as saying that, season and weather considered, business is quite as good as could be expected.

"In Oklahoma City territory business is moving along on about an even keel for summer, and exhibitors are hopeful for the usual good fall season. My visit to Kansas City was especially satisfactory. I had good talks too with Frank Newman of the Newman and Royal Theatres, and was deeply impressed by the splendid business enjoyed by the Newman Theatre, and the dignified, high class way in which the house is conducted.

"My stay in Omaha, was too brief for a close study of condition, but if the size of the crowd that was attending an Elks festival at Krug Park may be taken as a criterion, the people thereabouts have plenty of money to spend for entertainment.

"In St. Louis the airdromes are doing particularly well and the indoor houses are suffering no more than the customary summer calm.

"To sum up, my observations led me to regard business conditions as a whole as no better and no worse than are usually experienced in the South and the Southwest during the summer months, while confidence in the future is expressed every-where."

Better Pictures Association Program Approved

AT a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Illinois, held at the Chicago headquarters, on July 11th, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Whereas: The Better Pictures Association of the World recently presented to our members, at a general meeting held at the Blackstone Theatre, the following program, for their approval, and with the request that they co-operate in carrying this program forward: and,

Whereas: The said program and request for approval and co-operation were referred to this Board for final action: now therefore,

Be is Resolved: That the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Illinois go on record as being in hearty accord with the program of the Better Pictures Association of the World, which includes the following nine points:

1. To discourage the production and presentation of objectionable Motion pictures.
2. To offer constructive suggestions and criticisms making for greater popular approval and support.
3. To work for the elimination of misleading and untruthful advertising.
4. To strive for betterment generally in the art of making motion pictures, and for this purpose to maintain various departments of service, research, statistics, and information.
5. To safeguard the screen from unreasonable regulations and restrictions.
6. To back up worthy productions through pulpit, press, schools and special bulletins sent out by the B. P. A. and its various affiliated organizations.
7. To award the B. P. A. Merit Seal—a mark of excellence that can always be depended upon—to productions of unusual merit.
8. To enumerate and help, through a service department of experts, the production and presentation of motion pictures that the whole family can enjoy.
9. To prevent as far as possible unfair criticism and propaganda from being circulated against the motion picture art and profession.

And be it further

Resolved: That the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Illinois co-operate in every way to the end that all of the nine points included in the program of the Better Pictures Association of the World shall be carried forward successfully.

Signed:
Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Illinois,
By James B. Dibelka,
Executive Secretary.

Cleveland Agreement Turned Down

Last week the Cleveland Exhibitors' League, upon the written solicitation of the Film Board of Trade of Cleveland, submitted for that body's consideration the draft of a working proposition designed to bring about harmony between the local distributors and exhibitors.

The working agreement was submitted to the Film Board of Trade members at its last meeting and was turned down in toto, with the following explanation tendered by H. W. Christman, secretary of the Film Board of Trade of Cleveland:

"It is the policy of this organization to avoid even the appearance of taking sides in any factional issues that might be existing among the exhibitors in this territory.

"We understand that an agreement to accomplish the same purpose is being drawn up in New York at this time between the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce which, if consummated, will be nationally enforced."

A motion was unanimously passed at the last meeting of the Exhibitors League held Tuesday, July 10th, that:

"The committee shall wait ten days for the progress that might be made with the New York agreement, and in the meantime that a letter from the Film Board of Trade of Cleveland be answered and that said Film Club shall be asked for a definite statement as to whether or not they will allow us to work under the New York agreement from the time of its adoption until such time as a similar contract shall be negotiated with our organization."

Wrong Company Named in Picture Release

In the July 8 issue of THE NEWS it was erroneously stated that "The Man and The Moment" had been purchased by the Al Lichtman Company and would be released through that organization. The Attractions Distributing Corporation has purchased this picture and will release it later, but this company had no connection with the Al Lichtman Corporation and consequently functions entirely separately.

Disabled Veterans Ask Picture Showings

THE COMEBACK CLUB, disabled veterans of Columbia College, with headquarters at Camp Bluefields, Blauvelt, New York, are making an appeal to exchanges to supply them with film for their two weekly showings, Friday and Sunday nights. Leo Bauernfreund is in charge of the motion picture programs and will welcome word from any exchange to the effect that pictures will be furnished.

On the grounds at Camp Bluefields are a hospital and hostess house and the pictures are run in connection with dances held each Friday and Sunday night. Among the pictures that have already been furnished the veterans are: "Molly-O," "The Glorious Fool," "Over The Border Gates" and "The Playhouse."

Goldwyn Official Back from Panama

J. H. Hoffberg of Goldwyn's foreign sales department has just returned from a four months' trip through Central America, Panama, Jamaica, Colombia and Venezuela, where he completed highly satisfactory arrangements for the distribution of Goldwyn pictures. The films will be handled in Panama, Central America, Jamaica and Colombia by the Robert Wilcox Company of Colon, Panama; and in Venezuela by the Sociedad Cines y Espataculous.

Mr. Hoffberg reports that moving picture conditions in the countries visited are at least ten years behind the times.

"Most of the theatres," he said, "are frame buildings—fire traps which would never be allowed in this country. They vary in seating capacity from 150 to 2,000, although some of the open air theatres seat as many as 6,000. Admissions range from five to fifty cents in American money; occasionally, when a big special is shown, they ask as much as a dollar."

Six Companies Launched for N. Y. Business

The past week brought the incorporation of but six companies in the motion picture business of this state, revealing a total capitalization of $71,000. These companies with their directors and the amount of capitalization, are as follows:

Regent Enterprises, Inc., $25,000, Harry Schwartz, Irving Schwartz, Brooklyn; Philip Weisblum, New York City; A. L. Jones, Productions, Inc., $10,000, William Kaufman, Edward N. Bloomberg, Ida Schmuniz, New York; the Glenwood Concession Co., $20,000, David, Mary and Barney Lantinberg, Brooklyn; Jersey Amusement Company, Inc., $6,000, M. M. Immerfield, T. M. Silverman, Benjamin Skolnik New York City; Theatres Finance Corporation, $5,000, Lillian McMahon, Pauline Ettinger, Eleanor Hines, New York; Shaferland Corporation, Syracuse, $5,000, Edward M. Byrne, N. E. Timmons, Syracuse; William H. O'Brien, Jr., Baldwinsville, N. Y.

A.M.P.A. Will Aid in Asylum Drive

The A. M. P. A., representing the advertising and publicity branches of the motion picture industry in the east, has enlisted in the emergency drive for the Israel Orphan Asylum as the result of action taken at the Association's weekly meeting at the Cafe Boulevard July 12.

In co-operation with the most prominent stars in the east and with other amusement interests as represented by the theatrical producers and baseball interests, the motion picture people will give their co-operation in the drive to raise funds in the emergency that faces the orphanage. The asylum, which has been a shelter for more than 200 Jewish orphans who would otherwise be homeless, was totally destroyed in the Arverne fire a short time ago.

Faced by this contingency the backers of the orphanage have formed a permanent committee headed by Judge Gustave Hartman with headquarters at 1540 Broadway for the immediate raising of funds that will enable the orphanage to pass over this crisis, find a temporary home and continue its work of welfare.

Censor Bill Proposed in Georgia

Representative Collins of Cherokee County has proposed a bill to the House of Representatives of the Georgia Legislature for the censorship of pictures in Georgia, with full power of acceptance or rejection of films.

The bill provides for the appointment of a board consisting of three members to view and censor pictures presented in this state, said board to be kept up by a tax of 50 cents per thousand feet of film reviewed.

The bill is very similar to the one proposed last year which failed to pass.

Crandall Warns Against Stock Selling

Harry Crandall used advertising space in the Washington dailies on July 16 to warn the public against moving picture theatre stock-selling promotion. He offered free advice regarding any promotion the public may be invited to invest in, saying that he hoped to protect the good name of the legitimate enterprises in this way.

The advertisement plainly implied that in Mr. Crandall's opinion the announcement of a new theatre near the old Knickerbocker site, a few days before he announced his intention of erecting a theatre, to be known as the Ambassador, on the Knickerbocker premises, was of a dubious nature.

Demand Served on Mayor for Tax Fund

The demand has been served upon Mayor George R. Lunn of Schenectady, N. Y., to turn over to the City Treasurer, the sum of $8,524.02, which was collected from the motion picture theatres in Schenectady during the years 1920, 1921 and 1922. The action against Mayor Lunn was started a little over a year ago by Edwin E. Becker, a taxpayer. The case was carried to the higher courts, the appellate division affirming a decision of the lower court in favor of Becker.

The money was collected from motion picture proprietors as a special license fee for the privilege of exhibiting Sunday nights. At the time the fund was instituted the announcement was made that it was to be used for charitable purposes.

George D. Gould Resigns as News Managing Editor

GEORGE D. GOULD with Motion Picture News for more than five years in various important editorial capacities and managing editor of this publication since the resignation of Robert E. Welsh to whom he was assistant, has resigned.

Mr. Gould has the distinction of being one of the youngest men in the trade field to assume the responsibilities of managing editor, having been but 27 when elevated to the position.

During his years in the business he has made a wide circle of friendships and earned an enviable reputation as a trade paper editor.

Joining Motion Picture News in January, 1917, after a number of years as a newspaper man on the New York American, San Francisco Chronicle and other metropolitan dailies, he later entered the army. After fourteen months in France he rejoined the News upon his discharge from service and has been with the magazine since.

Following a short vacation Mr. Gould will announce his future connections. His resignation becomes effective July 22nd.

Motion Picture News and its editorial staff wish Mr. Gould every success and express appreciation of his ability in his chosen field.

The Reader Has His Say

Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

What's wrong with the movies? There is no question but what the man who can successfully diagnose all the ills of this great industry could name his own price and would be welcomed by every person in any manner interested.

One of the most flagrant ills that strikes me most often and most forcibly is the slanderous use of the terms "motion picture actor," "movie star" and like terms applied to any male or female that in any slight measure is connected with a scandal of national importance.

Several years ago many of our leading citizens of Irish descent suffered embarrassment and were handicapped in the conduct of their business or profession by slanderous terms hurled at them daily in the press and on the stage. The term A. P. A. has been almost completely forgotten in the last decade. Likewise, many important men and families of Jewish descent have suffered embarrassment; were the object of race hatred and bigoted prejudice through anti-Jewish slander unconscientiously and unwittingly used in the coloring of press stories and crude "comedians" on the stage.

Many other classes of our public, fraternities and other organizations have likewise suffered at the hands of unthinking writers. To prevent the innocent (of which there is usually a greater number) from suffering the misdeeds of a guilty few, organizations of Irishmen, Jews, and others formed individual anti-defamation leagues, whose purpose it is to instruct and educate the press of this country in the careful use of the word "Irishman" or "Jew" as the case might be so that the Irish citizenry or Jewish citizenry at large would not suffer for the misdeeds of an individual who very often does not even belong to either nationality, and usually, if he should belong to either class, it is by accident of birth.

Why not an anti-defamation of the motion picture industry. Of this countless number of individuals engaged in the 6th largest industry, how often recently has it been necessary for men and women whose conduct is beyond reproach to alibi for a press story in which some unheard of individual is claimed to be a movie actor? How often has it made the blood of those who stand for the best things in this great industry boil when a wayward girl or a man of loose morals described as being a part of the motion picture industry so that his misdeeds reflect on every person engaged in any manner in it?

An anti-defamation committee could educate the press of the United States to realize the importance of making certain first that an individual thus described actually was a part of the profession and the use of the utmost care in their statements and use of these terms so that a great industry is not seriously harmed. This committee could likewise bring out commendable features surrounding the lives and industry of people engaged in the production and distribution of motion pictures.

In the present depression and reform wave, it is absolutely necessary that every angle that might in any measure injure the business or give weapons to the enemies of the industry be eliminated. Proper education of the press combined with constant vigilance of an organized committee will accomplish this.

As a matter of suggestion, why not make this part of the work of Mr. Hayes' organization and have every exhibitor in the United States a vigilance committee to report violations and unfriendliness.

I have been incited to write this letter by the frequency in the press recently in the appliance of the terms "movie actor" "movie colony," etc., in connection with scandals in which some unknown or unheard of man or woman is the leading character.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) Milton H. Feld,
Managing Director,
Frank L. Newman's Theatres.

Kansas City Plans Year of Progress

The Kansas City theatre owners, in changing the name of their organization to the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of Kansas City, incidentally have planned a year of progress by leaps and bounds.

Following the meeting of the organization at the Hotel Baltimore last week, one of the several important developments has been an invitation from Mayor Frank Cromwell of Kansas City for a committee from the exhibitors' organization to be represented in the mayor's civic body, composed of various civic groups of the city. The theatre owners will participate in all civic and community campaigns in the future.

Contrary to the past, membership to the new body can be obtained only by application, accompanied by $50. The prospective member must be a member of the M. P. T. O. A., as the city organization is in no way a departure from the national association. The by-laws require a monthly payment of $5, while a meeting of the board of directors will be held weekly and, if necessary, oftener. Headquarters temporarily will be located at 811 Gloyd building.

"Go to Movies Week" in Philadelphia

Virtually all the film houses in Philadelphia are making a special bid for patronage this week, with special programs to mark the second annual "Go-to-the-Movies" week.

According to Jules Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America, the plan to stimulate popular interest in motion picture showings during the slack summer months was so successful upon its inauguration in that city just a year ago, that it will probably be made a regular event in the future. The Stanley Company controls all the large motion picture houses but one in the central part of the city, which circumstance gives considerable prestige to its adoption of the "Go-to-the-Movies" week idea.

Business at all the local houses has about struck the stride that will be maintained throughout the "dog days."

Activities of Exchange Managers, Exhibitors, Salesmen and Others

Buffalo

JOHN E. KIMBERLY, one of the best known exchange men in the state, has sold his interest in Nu-Art Pictures corporation, a state right concern here, headed by Fred M. Zimmerman as president and general manager. Mr. Kimberly joined Nu-Art several months ago as executive manager, resigning as manager of the local Vitagraph exchange. He has not as yet made his plans for the future, although he expects to remain in Buffalo. It is probable that he will retire from the film business, however. Mr. Kimberly is known throughout the territory as "Honest John." He has been in the business for the past decade. Mr. Zimmerman, of course, will continue the business, there being no changes in the office staff.

A force of auditors are now cleaning up things at the Educational exchange where District Manager Scully has installed Colonel Howard F. Brink as manager. The office staff is an entirely new one. It is reported that Elmer Dodds, former manager, is about to accept the management of a theatre downstate for Arthur Whyte.

Bernard Frank, formerly with Educational, has joined the sales staff of Film Bookings Offices of America. R. S. Bendell has been transferred to the Syracuse territory. He was formerly in the Utica district, which will now be covered by Frank.

Miss Marie Wheeler, in charge of the Albany Merit office, spent a week's vacation in town. She visited Manager Bob Murphy and the members of the local exchange staff in the Paramount building.

J. B. Reilley, new Select manager, must be prosperous. He has taken unto himself a new Cadillac. Mr. Reilley recently succeeded R. C. Fox, who resigned to become division manager of the Black theatre chain in New England for Paramount under the supervision of Harold B. Franklin.

J. E. Story, general sales manager for Pathe, was in Buffalo last week looking over the new Pathe quarters in the Beyer building and conferring with Branch Manager W. A. V. Mack, who departed last Saturday for a motor trip to New York as a vacation.

V. P. Whitaker, representative for Thomas H. Ince, was in the city for a talk with E. J. Hayes, First National chieftan.

H. E. Hughes, who has been with several local exchanges, is now a member of the Fox Sales staff.

Richard C. Fox

RICHARD C. FOX, manager of the Select exchange in Buffalo, has been appointed division manager of the Black theatre chain in New England. This chain has been acquired by Paramount and Mr. Fox will work under the supervision of Harold B. Franklin, director-general of Paramount's new theatre department and former managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo. The announcement of Mr. Fox's appointment came as a distinct surprise to Buffalo's "Film Row," where "Dick" is one of the most popular managers. He is known to every exhibitor in New York state. Prior to assuming the Buffalo Select office management, Mr. Fox was with the same company in St. Louis. He has also represented the Fox Film company in a sales capacity in England. This is Dick's second connection with Paramount, he having been manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Buffalo exchange for a year or so, before departing for "dear old Lunnon." In his new capacity as division manager for the F. P.-L. theatre properties, Mr. Fox has a big job on his hands. However, his friends knowing his live wire qualities are sure that he will be successful in his new field. Dick has been in the film business since the days when Nickelodeons were "the thing." Mr. Fox expects to leave Buffalo early in July with his family for the city that made beans famous. Boston will be his headquarters. While in Buffalo, Mr. Fox became intimately acquainted with Mr. Franklin, who knows that Dick is a battler. When this new position was created, it is said that Dick was the only one considered for it. It is rumored that Harry E. Lotz, former Realart manager in Buffalo, will succeed Mr. Fox as head of the Buffalo Select office. Sherman Webster has arrived at the exchange in the Queen City of the Lakes to aid in a special sales drive. Mr. Webster comes from the home office. He has been in Buffalo with several companies.

Le Roy W. Alexander

LE ROY W. ALEXANDER, although having been in Kansas City only a few days, as successor of "Curley" Calvert, Kansas City Universal branch manager, already is being called "Alex" by exhibitors and fellow exchangemen alike. "Alex" possesses that rare gift of quickly breaking down the barriers of stiff formality, possesses the art of creating a genuine friendship, free from any commercial tint, and the goal of success for him in the Kansas City territory already is visible.

"Alex" has been with Universal four years, during which time he has been considered a star salesman. For a year he was short subject manager at Chicago, and more recently associate sales manager.

Kansas City

AS F. L. McNamee, who has been doing special work out of the Kansas City Universal office on "Foolish Wives," sat silently with his feet cocked up on the desk last week, his reward for past enegetic services came like a bolt out of the clear sky—a telegram informing him that he had been appointed manager of the Salt Lake City branch. Without waiting long enough to say "good bye" to his friends, McNamee caught the first train for the Utah City. But behind him he leaves a staunch friendship of many exhibitors in Missouri and Kansas.

Missouri and Kansas exhibitors were saddened by the news last week of the untimely death of L. J. Livingston, United Artist representative out of the Kansas City office, who was killed instantly when a train struck his motor car at a grade crossing near Commerce, Okla. Livingston, who had been with the Kansas City Universal branch for more than a year and a half, was one of the most popular salesmen in the territory.

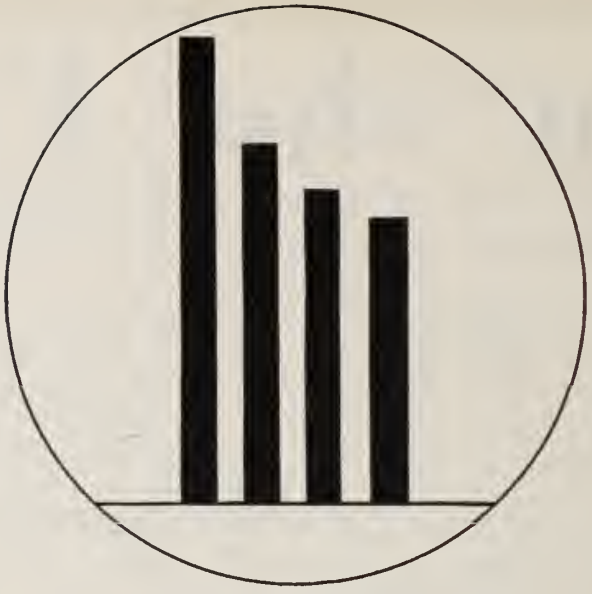
A peculiar sort of a drive is being staged by the Universal Kansas City branch—the Calvert-Alexander drive for business. Here is the way it started:

No sooner had "Curley" Calvert, former manager of the office, received word of a promotion which would take him to New York, than in came a flood of letters from exhibitors expressing their regret at his departure. Another avalanche of letters, letters of congratulations, came to Alexander from Chicago, where he formerly was located, wishing him the best of success. Hence the drive. It is a purely personal affair and, of course, in fact matters not whether the exhibitor does business with Calvert or Alexander, as there is no professional jealousy, but manager and ex-manager have announced that they intend to make it a sort of a "blow out" for the exhibitors by selling them film at a cost that will swoop near the zero mark for the hot weather.

The Elite and Cozy theatres at Pratt, Kans., have been purchased by S. E. Meade and Son from William Kelley.

The Kansas State Board of Motion Picture Review last week eliminated a title in a news reel, connecting union labor with the Herrin, Ill., coal mine troubles. The eliminated title read: "Union Men Set Fire to Coal Loaded on Cars, Mechanical Equipment of all Kinds Demolished." The title, according to the board, was possible of leading to serious results if shown in Kansas, a coal producing state.

Des Moines



MR. PLUES of the Pathe Exchange announces that "Grandma's Boy," Harold Lloyd's latest will show at the Des Moines, Des Moines' leading theatre for the week starting Sept. 10.

A. H. Blank, the largest theatre man in Iowa, and head of A. H. Blank and Company which controls seven theatres in Des Moines and a chain of theatres in Iowa and Nebraska, left the end of the week for New York where he will attend a convention of First National directors.

CIRCULATION ADVERTISING

SUPREMACY OF MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Here's an interesting exhibit!
The circulation supremacy } of MOTION PICTURE NEWS
The advertising supremacy }
Plain Figures! True beyond any argument.

Study them—
just a bit.

THIS CIRCULATION SUPREMACY is the graphic report of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, an agency organized by and recognized by the big advertisers of the United States.

These expert circulation accountants are just like the certified accountants you hire to get the true assets and liabilities of a business you might buy.

These are the figures of exhibitor circulation:

News	8374
World	3875
Two papers make no report at all.

You can now buy known values by the pennyweight—or unknown.

Now—you will note that the advertising supremacy of MOTION PICTURE NEWS doesn't equal its striking circulation supremacy.

Certain film advertisers—Universal, Robertson-Cole, Educational, Goldwyn and to some extent Fox and Paramount give recognition of MOTION PICTURE NEWS circulation supremacy, either because of the A. B. C. reports or because of their own tests, or both; and because they realize that tradepaper advertising must be concentrated to some extent if it is to be made effective.

Accessory advertisers—makers of theatre equipment, and commercial printers—give pronounced recognition of MOTION PICTURE NEWS's superior circulation because they can check results to some extent, and because they buy space for no other purpose than to sell goods.

These are the advertisers who, for the past several years, have caused MOTION PICTURE NEWS to exceed all other papers in this field by from seven hundred to twelve hundred pages a year.

So far this year the following pages of paid advertising have been carried by the four trade papers—through the issue of July 8th:

News	1555¾
World	1217
Exhibitors Herald	1076¾
Exhibitors Trade Review	1077¾

Some advertisers do not as yet buy circulation value. That is why the advertising supremacy of MOTION PICTURE NEWS does not equal its circulation supremacy.

They buy editorial favor.
They buy write-ups.
They buy because they think they can influence reviews.
They buy good-naturedly and indiscriminately as a sort of gratuity to publications which seem to deserve general support.

All this, of course, is the advertiser's privilege.
But—when such things are for sale they are no good.

A trade paper is a merchandising medium or it isn't anything. And its proper use is a mighty serious problem with you—just as serious as selling goods is serious.

You cannot spread a picture advertising appropriation of say $5,000 among several trade papers—equally, indiscriminately—and sell goods. You're licked before you start. Your money is spread so thinly and goes so fast that it is spent before your pictures really begin to circulate.

If, on the other hand, you concentrate, you can, at no greater expense, follow a picture for an entire year, and reach every exhibitor with advertising that will not only sell to him but through him to the broad public.

You can—positively—increase your gross by this means.

This, in a nutshell, is the business story of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.
Your selling problems are of the utmost interest to us. Can we sit in, help discuss them and make suggestions?
Advertising will prove a big factor this year. Don't overlook that.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Man From Home—
This was played with "Carmen" and the double feature idea went over great. A good attendance all week. (Middle West.)

Some of our patrons were delighted with it—others not so much. Business rather fair. (East.)

Some liked it better than the play of the same name. Some liked it less. Pleasing, harmless, entertaining, but depicts type of American that is quite out of date, an extinct type of American girl. Pretty good business for summer. (Middle West.)

Our Leading Citizen—
Very good. Good picture and good crowds. General satisfaction. (Middle West.)

Pleasing summer entertainment. Really profitable week of good business. (East.)

The Devil's Pawn—
Very bad picture. Bad business. (East.)

The Good Provider—
A knockout. Did big business for week. (Middle West.)

Footlights—
On second showing did not draw as long as expected. Did pretty fair sidewalk business. (Middle West.)

Miss Lulu Bett—
On second run held up quite well. Story well known and stars well liked. (Middle West.)

The Crimson Challenge—
Ordinary. No special pulling point to it. Did fair business for four days. (Middle West.)

Received favorable comment from audiences in general. Did fine business first half of week and fairly well for last half. (Middle West.)

The Woman Who Walked Alone—
Good feature with popular star. Played to big business. (Middle West.)

The Man Unconquerable—
Jack Holt is strong, although story somewhat improbable. Played to good business. (Middle West.)

Eyes of the Mummy—
Good picture which brought fine business. (Middle West.)

North of the Rio Grande—
Business averaged pretty good. Though it wasn't such a smash of a western as it seemed would be warranted by Bebe Daniels and Jack Holt as co-stars, it seemed to satisfy the fans all right. (Middle West.)

The Last Payment—
Attracted a number of patrons who do not usually attend this theatre. Business satisfactory. (Middle West.)

Across the Continent—
Wallace Reid's auto stories well liked in this town and business good as per usual on this one. (East.)

For the Defense—
Rather strong diet for summer. Might be all right in winter, but too strenuous for now. Poor business. (Middle West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

The Primitive Lover—
Constance Talmadge again pleased our audiences and business was excellent. (Middle West.)

Constance Talmadge is a big favorite here and always good for a lively business, as was the case with this picture. (Middle West.)

Smudge—
About the average Ray film. (Middle West.)

The Woman He Married—
Better than the average Anita Stewart picture. Fair box office attraction. (Middle West.)

Sonny—
Not up to expectations for second run. Hurt by weather. (East.)

Polly of the Follies—
Drawing power affected on second run by previous showing. (East.)

His Wife's Relations—
Judged not consistently as good as Keaton's generally. Some very good comedy situations but it let down in between. (Middle West.)

One Clear Call—
Great. Almost a perfect picture. Everything to recommend it. Business way over the hot weather average. (Middle West.)

Stardust—
Long heralded picture proves satisfactory but not a knockout by any means. Fair business. (Middle West.)

Hurricane's Gal—
A real big feature with splendid acting and fine sea scenes. Business satisfactory. (Middle West.)

Woman's Side—
Fair picture and fair business. (West.)

GOLDWYN

When Romance Rides—
Fine picture. We did good business on it. (West.)

Very good picture. (Middle West.)

Just typical melodrama, unsuited to this house. Fair business. (East.)

The Wall Flower—
Aided by some extensive advertising, this one played to good crowds for a week's run. (Middle West.)

A fair picture and box office value. (Middle West.)

Come On Over—
Enthusiastically received by old picture fans. Funny and realistic. Satisfactory business for the week. (Middle West.)

Watch Your Step—
Went over nicely. Business very good. (Middle West.)

FOX

Up and Going—
Tom Mix always takes. Did very good business, enough to affect the theatre next door. (Middle West.)

Rough Shod—
A western with the usual hokum. Business off. (East.)

The Last Trail—

Strange Idols—
An average week's business, somewhat retarded by hot weather. (Middle West.)

Without Fear—
Terrible picture. Business so bad picture had to be cancelled after three days, with "Arabian Love" substituted to finish. (East.)

Arabian Love—
Interesting picture. Business slow. (East.)

Very Truly Yours—
Fairly good show that did average business for one week. (Middle West.)

PATHE

Nanook of the North—
One of the most entertaining films ever shown here. Drew better than the feature. (Middle West.)

Pleasing summer entertainment. Went over especially big. Really profitable week of good business. (East.)

Up in the Air About Mary—
Good summer film. Average box office attraction. (Middle West.)

The Power Within—
Amateurish production. Business aided somewhat by fact that author is local clergyman. "Leather Pushers" helped to draw. (East.)

METRO

Fascination—
Business better than it has been for some time. Opinion divided upon the picture but it drew anyway. (Middle West.)

Seeing's Believing—
A flapper picture which did good business. Star seems generally popular. (Middle West.)

Sherlock Brown—
Fine picture and good box office attraction. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

The Delicious Little Devil—
Great. Packed the house so full the first week that we had to hold it over a second week. Held up through entire engagement. Women piled in to see Valentino. He is a big attraction. (Middle West.)

Fairly good business and entertainment. (West.)

The Trap—
Good action picture, showing Lon Chaney in character study. Did good business for four days. (Middle West.)

Foolish Wives—
Picture pleased audience. Good business. (East.)

SELZNICK

John Smith—

Reckless Youth—
Mediocre picture. Mediocre business. (East.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Ruling Passion—
An entertaining production of distinctly high class calibre which attracted fair business. Warm weather and strikes made inroads on box office. (East.)

Orphans of the Storm—
Holding this great feature for third week business so good. (Middle West.)

HODKINSON

The Gray Dawn—
Pleased audience. Business fair. (East.)

VITAGRAPH

The Man from Downing Street—
Very satisfactory business and best half week had for some time with weather cool but not rainy. This picture seemed to take very well. Seem to like Secret Service tale. (Middle West.)

FILM BOOKING OFFICES

Son of the Wolf—
Fair entertainment and box office value. (West.)

Fairly good picture with business about average. (West.)

STATE RIGHTS

The Worldly Madonna—
Elaborate production and all that but not enough to tide over the very melodramatic story. Star not interestingly popular. Fair attendance. (Middle West.)

Your Best Friend—
Fair business on this. Pretty good picture. (West.)

Double feature advertising "The Deuce of Spades" and "The Man With Two Mothers," at the Colorado and American theatres.
